PREFACE

THE MS., dating from the third century A.D., which is here edited for the first time in a single whole, has long been known to scholars. Its subject-matter—magic and medicine—is not destitute of interest. It is closely connected with the Greek magical papyri from Egypt of the same period, but, being written in demotic, naturally does not reproduce the Greek hymns which are so important a feature of those papyri. The influence of purely Greek mythology also is here by comparison very slight—hardly greater than that of the Alexandrian Judaism which has supplied a number of names of Hellenistic form to the demotic magician. Mithraism has apparently contributed nothing at all: Christianity probably only a deformed reference to the Father in Heaven. On the other hand, as might have been expected, Egyptian mythology has an overwhelmingly strong position, and whereas the Greek papyri scarcely go beyond Hermes, Anubis, and the Osiris legend, the demotic magician introduces Khons, Amon, and many other Egyptian gods. Also, whereas the former assume a knowledge of the modus operandi in divination by the lamp and bowl, the latter describes it in great detail.

But the papyrus is especially interesting for the language in which it is written. It is probably the latest Egyptian MS. which we possess written in the demotic script, and it presents us with the form of the language as written—almost as spoken—by the pagans at the time when the Greek alphabet was being adopted by the Christians. It must not be forgotten, too, that this is the document which contributed perhaps more than any other to the decipherment of demotic, partly through its numerous Greek glosses.

We have therefore thought that a complete edition, with special reference to its philological importance, would be useful. The vocabulary is extensive, comprising about a thousand words. The present volume, containing the introduction, the transliteration, translation, and notes, will be followed by a complete glossary, with separate indices of Greek words, invocation names, names of animals, plants, and minerals, and a list of the glosses, &c., besides a chapter dealing with the principal grammatical forms met with in the MS., and a hand-copy of the text; the photographic reproduction by Hess of the pages in the British Museum and Leemans' facsimile of those at Leiden will of course preserve their independent value for reference, as, for instance, in judging the condition of the MS. and the precise forms of the signs in particular passages.

There is considerable inconsistency in the spelling of words in the papyrus itself. So much having to be rendered more or less conventionally, while fresh light is thrown daily on the intricacies of demotic, it is probable that there are a good many inconsistencies in our transliterations, translations, and notes, in spite of the watchfulness of the excellent reader at the Clarendon Press. Those, however, who have dealt with the subject at all will probably not judge these too hardly.

In conclusion, we have to record our gratitude, first, to our predecessors in publication and decipherment of the papyrus—to Reuvens, Leemans, and Hess, to Brugsch, Maspero, Revillout, and W. Max Müller—but for whose varied contributions our task would have been infinitely more laborious even in the present advanced state of the study: and secondly, to the authorities of the Egyptian department in the British Museum, and of the Rijksmuseum in Leiden, for their courtesy in affording every facility for studying the original MS., and more especially to Dr. Boeser of the Leiden Museum for much kindness and assistance.

INTRODUCTION

I. HISTORY OF THE MS.

THE demotic magical papyrus of London and Leiden was discovered at Thebes with other papyri, principally Greek but dealing with subjects of a like nature, in the early part of the last century, and was bought by Anastasi, who was at that time Swedish consul at Alexandria, and made a large collection of Egyptian MSS. When Anastasi obtained the MS. it must already have been torn into two parts, and it is even probable that he obtained the two parts at different times, since he sold his Egyptian collections, including the Leiden MS., to the Dutch government in 1828, while the London portion was bought at the sale of his later collections at Paris in 1857 for the British Museum (No. 1072 in Lenormant's Catalogue).

The Leiden fragment was made known to the world much earlier than that in the British Museum. Its importance for the deciphering of the demotic script by the help of the numerous glosses in Graeco-Coptic characters was at once perceived by the distinguished scholar Reuvens, at that time Director of the Leiden Museum of Antiquities, who proceeded to study it carefully, and in 1830 published an admirable essay¹ in which he sketched the principal contents of the MS. and indicated its value for the progress of demotic studies. He then took in hand its reproduction, and the MS. was lithographed in facsimile under his direction, and he had corrected the proofs of the first plate when he was cut off by a premature death in 1835; his work was carried to completion and published by his successor in the Directorship of the Museum, Leemans, in 1839¹. Heinrich Brugsch studied it closely, and drew from it most of the examples quoted in his Demotic Grammar published in 1855; but, although later scholars have frequently quoted from it and translated fragments of it, the MS. has hitherto remained without complete translation, commentary, or glossary.

The London MS., however, lay from 1857 onwards almost unnoticed in the British Museum. To the late Dr. Pleyte, Leemans' successor at Leiden, belongs the credit of discovering that the two MSS. originally formed one. He had studied the Leiden portion, and at once recognized the handwriting of its fellow in London. Without publishing the fact, he communicated it to Professor Hess of Freiburg, when the latter was working in Leiden on the MS. there. Professor Hess went on to London, and, having fully confirmed Dr. Pleyte's statement, published in 1892 a reproduction of the British Museum MS. with an introduction, including the translation of one column, and a glossary².

Reuvsen in his essay dwelt at some length on the 'gnostic' character of the MS. He devoted his attention mainly to the parts which contain the glosses, and those are almost exclusively magical invocations, among which occur the names of gods, spirits, and demons, Egyptian, Syrian, Jewish, &c., strung together in a manner similar to those found in gnostic writings and on gnostic gems. He even went so far as to associate them with the name of a particular gnostic leader, Marcus, of the second century, chiefly on the ground of his recorded use of Hebrew and Syriac names in his invocations and the combinations of vowels. In consequence the MS. has acquired the name of the 'Leiden Gnostic,' and the term 'Gnostic' has been passed on to the London MS. But as will be seen from the complete translation here published, there is nothing in the work relating to the gnostic systems—it deals with magic and medicine, and it seems a misnomer to call the MS. gnostic merely because part of the stock-in-trade of the magician and medicine-man were a number of invocation names which he either picked up from the gnostics or derived from sources common to him and them. Hence it has been thought desirable to abandon the epithet 'gnostic,' and to call the work the 'Magical papyrus of London and Leiden' (Pap. mag. LL.).

II. CONDITION OF THE MS.

The London portion is in far better condition than the Leiden portion. The papyrus is pale in colour and the ink very black; consequently where the MS. has not suffered material damage it is easy to read, as the scribe wrote a beautiful and regular hand.

The Leiden papyrus, on the other hand, has unfortunately suffered much, as Leemans, with a view to protecting the surface, covered both recto and verso with 'vegetable' paper, which probably could not be removed now without serious injury to the MS.; but either the paper or the adhesive matter employed with it has darkened and decayed, rendering the writing illegible in places.

In 1829, while the MS. was still in charge of Reuvens and before it had been subjected to the operation above described, he took a tracing of it which has been preserved, and which, though of little assistance in points of minute detail, may be relied on for filling up with certainty many groups which are now wholly lost in the original.

The main body of the writing is on the recto (horizontal fibres) of the papyrus, while on the verso are written memoranda, medical prescriptions, and short invocations.

The London MS. is Pap. No. 10070 of the British Museum (formerly Anast. 1072).

The Leiden MS. is known as I. 383 (reckoned among the Anastasi MSS. as A. 65).

The London portion forms the initial part of the MS. and joins on to the Leiden portion without a break, the tenth and last column of the London MS. and the first of the Leiden forming one column.

The first London column is imperfect, and it is not possible to say with certainty whether the MS. began with it or whether there was an anterior part now lost. It is quite possible that it began here. On the other hand, it is certain that the MS. is imperfect at the end, since the broken edge of the papyrus at Leiden shows traces of a column of writing succeeding the present final column.

It is impossible to estimate how much is lost, as the MS. is not an original composition on a definite plan, but a compilation of heterogeneous material collected together without any logical order.

The two portions, if joined together, would measure, roughly speaking, some 5 m. (about $16\frac{1}{2}$ feet) in length. In height it averages nearly 25 cm. (10 in.). The writing is in columns, of which there are twenty-nine on the recto, while on the verso are thirty-three small columns or portions of columns; but these are not marked off, as are the recto columns, by vertical and horizontal framing lines¹, nor are they written continuously, but they seem to have been jotted down there on account of their brevity and discontinuous character.

The recto columns vary somewhat in size, but average 20 × 20 cm. (8 in. square). The writing is frequently carried beyond the framing lines.

In each column of the recto the number of lines is on the average about thirty to thirty-three; but the number is very irregular, ranging from forty-three in one column to five in another.

III. CONTENTS.

As has been stated above, the MS. is a compilation. An analysis of the contents will be found on page 14. From this it will be seen to consist mainly of directions for divination processes involving numerous invocations, together with erotica and medical prescriptions, in which, however, magic plays as large a part as medicine.

The MS. is far from being unique in regard to its contents. Fragments of similar works in demotic exist at Paris (Louvre, No. 3229, published by Maspero, Quelques papyrus du Louvre, 1875), and at Leiden (I. 384 verso, Anast. 75, published by Leemans, Mons. du musée de Leide, 1842, pl. ccxxvi-vii) a MS. partly demotic and partly Greek, the latter portion being published by Leemans in Pap. graeci mus. lugd. bat. 1885, ii. Pap. V, and re-edited by Dieterich, Pap. Mag. Mus. Lugd. Bat. The Greek papyri containing similar texts are numerous, many examples having been published from the museums of Berlin, Leiden, London, and Paris by Goodwin, Parthey, Leemans, Wessely, and Kenyon.

The well-known codex of the Bibliothèque Nationale published by Wessely, Denkschr. Kais. Ak. Wiss. Wien, xxxvi. 1888, contains a few invocations in Old Coptic along with the Greek (cf. Griffith, A. Z. 1901, p. 85, and bibliography, ibid. p. 72).

Magic was from the earliest times largely developed by the Egyptians in relation both to the dead and the living. Under the former head fall both the pyramid texts and other texts found in the tombs, including most of the Book of the Dead, which consists mainly of magical invocations intended to make smooth the path of the deceased in the next world.

Magical texts for the use of the living are found in the Harris magical papyrus (ed. Chabas, 1860), the Metternich stela (ed. Golenischeff, 1877) and kindred stones, the Berlin papyrus edited by Erman (Zaubersprüche für Mutter u. Kind, 1901), &c. Reference may be made to the volume on Egyptian magic by Dr. Wallis Budge, 1899, and to a special study on vessel-divination by E. Lefébure, 'Le vase divinatoire,' in Sphinx, 1902, VI. 61 seq. Cf. also Dieterich, 'Abraxas'; Kenyon in Cat. Greek Pap. in B. M., I. 62 seq.; Miss Macdonald in P. S. B. A., xiii. 160 seq.; Wunsch, Sethianische Verfluchungstafeln aus Rom, &c.

In the closely allied department of medicine, it is sufficient to refer to the Ebers papyrus, the Kahun papyri, and the Berlin medical papyrus (ed. Brugsch, Rec. Mon. pl. 87-107), which offer many parallels. Among the Greek medical writers it is noticeable that Alexander of Tralles seems much more closely allied to the Egyptian school, if that be represented by our MS., than Galen.

But though the subject-matter of the MS. is not without its interest for the history of magic and medicine, its chief claim to publication lies in its philological interest. From the first its numerous glosses have attracted the attention of scholars, and have been the means of fixing the value of a large number of demotic groups. Further it is in date probably the latest known papyrus written in the demotic script; most of the glosses are really Coptic transcriptions, and under this head may likewise be included all the Egyptian words written in cipher; so that the MS. in these furnishes us with a series of very early Coptic words, including several grammatical forms of great interest. Possibly too the text may be of importance in relation to the question of dialects in pagan Egypt; but that is a subject too little worked out at present to allow of definite statements. The vocabulary is very extensive, and includes a number of Greek words, the names of over 100 plants, besides numerous animals and minerals.

IV. PREVIOUS WORK ON THE MS.

As the London portion of the MS., which in the order of contents is the first part, was published fifty years later than the second part at Leiden, it follows that each publication has an independent numbering of the columns, starting from I. In view of the fact that there are many references in demotic literature already to the columns by their numbers as established by the publications of Leemans and Hess, it would have been desirable to retain the existing numbering if possible. But, as will be seen by comparison of the hand copy of the whole MS. which accompanies this edition with the former publications, the changes in the way of consolidation of the columns, and in some cases necessary re-numbering of the lines, have made it compulsory to introduce a new and continuous numbering of the columns. For instance, Hess col. X and Leemans col. I form a single column, and the same is the case with Leemans cols. II and III and cols. IV and V, and with verso, cols. XVI and XVII, XXII and XXIII. A comparative table of the old and new numbers will be found at the end.

V. THE GLOSSES.

There are about 640 words with transcriptions in Coptic characters in addition to a few inserted in the text.

Besides all the letters of the Greek alphabet we find the following used:—

ff (=κ 26/15).	6 (=ϛ : ϣ 9/11).
Ϸ (=κ 7/33, 25/34).	ϣ (=ϣ 2/10, 9/14).
h (=λ 25/34, 35 text).	Λ (=Ϸ 9/14, 25/34).
ϣ (=ω 2/13, 5/23, 8/8).	ϣ (=Ϸ 2/4).
3 (=ϣ 1/25, 8/9, 13, V. 5/9).	5 (=Ϸ 9/6, 29/10).
λ (=ϣ 2/18).	Ϸ (=Ϸ 2/26, 29/10).

The glosses were undoubtedly written by the same scribe who wrote the demotic text. And it seems that he wrote the glosses before he filled in the rubrics. For the handwriting of the demotic text and of the rubrics is unquestionably the same; and in filling up in red the empty spaces he had left for rubrication, the scribe took occasion to fill in with his red ink occasional lapses in the black writing. In the text this can be observed in e.g. 24/1, the omitted ϣ of the second str (?) has been filled up in red, and also the omitted determinative in the last word of 28/8, an omitted letter in phr 29/11, an omitted word sn interlineated in 29/12, and a plural sign in 25/26; and so too the gloss ewe in 28/8, overlooked when the glosses were originally inserted in black ink.

It is a fact that there is often a considerable difference between the Greek letters in the passages written in Greek and in the glosses (e.g. παπιπετου in 15/25 and 15/29), but this may be accounted for by the fact that the former are written in a cursive hand with ligatures, while the glosses are carefully written with separately formed letters without ligatures for distinctness' sake in the narrow space between the lines.

The above considerations, however, only show that the text and glosses were written by the same hand in our existing MS. It does not follow that they were written by the original compiler. Max Müller has argued (Rec. tr., viii. 175) that they must be due to another individual since they are mostly in the Fayumic dialect, while the dialect of the demotic text is 'Untersahidisch' (i.e. Achmimic, so called by Stern). In Rec. tr., xiii. 152 u., he replaces the latter term by a more precise definition: 'Die Mundart steht zwischen Fayumisch u. dem Mittel-ägyptischen von Akhmim, letzterem näher.' But it is very doubtful whether this distinction between the text and the glosses can be maintained. The only example quoted by Max Müller that distinctly suggests Fayumic is the gloss $\lambda\omega$ and λ over a group in 16/5 and 25/34, which he reads as = (e) $\rho\sigma\sigma$, regarding the interchange of ρ and λ as evidence of Fayumic dialect. But the demotic group in question does not read er-w, but mr as in mr-ʿh (1/17, 2/7, 14/6, 28), and the gloss $\lambda\omega$ represents the absolute form of the late Egyptian word which we see in its construct form in Sahidic $\lambda\epsilon\omega\eta\eta\eta\epsilon$ and in $\lambda\epsilon\sigma\omega\eta\iota\varsigma$. From the detailed examination of the dialect (in vol. ii) it appears probable that the dialect of the text does not show any distinction from that of the glosses, and it is not necessary to go behind the scribe of the present MS. and place the compiler earlier. He may well have been one and the same.

VI. DATE.

Reuvers (u.s. p. 151) placed the date of the MS. in the first half of the third century A.D., and this was repeated by Leemans.

Groff and Hess attributed it on palaeographical grounds to the second century; but in the light of recent additions to the knowledge of Greek palaeography, and the opinions based on them of Kenyon, Grenfell, and Hunt (see A. Z., xxxix. (1901) p. 78), the third century must be accepted as the date of the MS. But this, of course, is the date at which the papyrus was written, and merely furnishes a terminus ad quem for deciding as to the date of the contents.

That the whole of the papyrus, in its present state, was written by one and the same scribe—with the possible exception of verso XXVIII—can scarcely be a matter of doubt to any one who has studied closely the handwriting of the original MSS. It must be stated, however, that Reuvens and Leemans were of opinion that the glosses were written by a later hand than that of the body of the text: but this question has been discussed above (p. 9), and apart from the identity of ink, and the material proof given there, it may be added that the hieratic glosses in 27/8 are certainly written by the same hand as the numerous hieratic passages scattered through the text.

The date of the contents is a much more complicated question. Written partly in hieratic, partly in demotic, and partly in Greek, they wear the aspect of a compilation, which is borne out by the varied and disconnected nature of the subject-matter.

It has been suggested that the work is a translation into demotic of a Greek original, and perhaps this is the first question demanding discussion. Prima facie it may be said to be likely, as so many similar works exist in Greek. The introduction of three invocations of considerable length written in Greek characters almost compels us to accept that origin for those particular sections, viz. 4/1-19, 15/24-31, 23/7-20. It seems probable that the translator felt he could transfer to Egyptian the prescriptions and preparations, while the formula of incantation had to be left in the original language. Had these sections been written in Egyptian originally, it is not likely that an incantation in a foreign tongue would be inserted in the place presumably of an Egyptian one.

And in the first named instance there is the additional evidence of two true Greek glosses, i.e. not Coptic transcriptions of the demotic words, but Greek equivalents of the two words 'table' and 'goose,' which seem to be inserted clearly to prevent a misunderstanding of the original terms. In the second instance 15/24-31, the original Greek lines 25-28 are immediately followed by a demotic translation of the same passage (ll. 29-31), which points in the same direction. Translation from the Greek is rendered probable, outside the passages already referred to, by the transcription of Greek prescriptions and substances in 24/1-25, and verso I, II, VIII, IX. According to an ingenious suggestion of Max Müller, in verso II the otherwise unintelligible phrase m^{nes} n rm is almost certainly a mistranslation of μαγνησία ἀνδρεία. Max Müller has also (Rec. tr., viii. 175-6) given strong reasons for regarding the passage 25/23-37 as being translated from a Greek original. However, even where there are reasons for believing that the demotic is a translation from the Greek, the original source, in relation to magic at any rate, was probably Egyptian—certainly so in the case of the Greek passage in 15/25-28, which has itself clearly an Egyptian origin.

On the other hand, some of the chief sections of the MS. show no traces of Greek influence, e.g. cols. VI and XV. 1-20; but it would be rash to say that they are older; they may well represent only a purer Egyptian source. Max Müller (Rec. tr., viii. 172) has suggested that some of the magic formulae go back to the period from the Eighteenth to the Twentieth Dynasty. This cannot be true of more than a few phrases. The language indeed is not entirely uniform, but throughout the papyrus the vocabulary and grammar are distinctly not 'Late Egyptian'; they are 'demotic,' and that too of a kind which approaches Coptic much more closely than in any other known papyrus. Certain passages, such as the spell in 13/1-10, show more or less archaism, but in all cases it is mixed with late forms.

The use of hieratic might be thought to indicate some antiquity where it occurs. But the writing is a strange jumble; the hieratic is inextricably though sparingly mixed with the demotic, a single word being often written partly in hieratic, partly in demotic. Where hieratic signs occur the language is not generally more archaic than when the demotic is pure. In 23/24 the word Abrasax is written in hieratic. Now Abrasax is usually regarded as a typical gnostic invocation name, Irenaeus having stated that it was invented by Basilides (fl. 125 A. D.). This statement is now generally regarded as an error, and the name may be earlier; but there is no authority for placing it in pre-Christian times (cf. Hort, s. v. Abrasax, in Smith, Dict. Christ. Biog.; Dieterich, Abrasax, p. 46; C. Schmidt, Gnostische Schriften in Kopt. Spr., 1892, p. 562).

Not many documents written in hieratic have been ascertained to be later than the first century A. D.; but they were plentiful at Tanis amongst the burnt papyri found by Professor Petrie in the house of 'Bakakhuu' (Asychis), the destruction of which Mr. Petrie was disposed to date to 174 A. D. (Tanis, i. p. 41); and Clemens Alexandrinus (Strom. v. 237) mentions hieratic as still taught in the schools (circa A. D. 160-220). Hieroglyphic inscriptions, with the name of Decius (249-251), are found in the temple of Esneh, and the existence of hieroglyphic almost implies that of hieratic.

Judging by the language, it is difficult to believe that any part of the work in its present redaction is more than a century or two older than the papyrus itself.

The contents of the papyrus may be classified as follows :—

1. Divination—

- (a) by the vessel of oil I-III, IX-X. 22, XIV, XVIII. 7-33, XXI. 1-9, XXII (?), XXVIII, verso XXII, verso XXVI.
- (b) by a lamp V, VI-VII, VIII. 1-12, XVI, XVII-XVIII. 6, XXV. 1-22, XXVII. 13-36, verso XVIII, verso XXIV, verso XXXI.
- (c) by the sun X. 22-end, XXVII. 1-12, XXIX.
- (d) by moon XXIII. 21-31.
- (e) by the Foreleg constellation (Great Bear) verso XVIII.
- (f) by stars ? IV. 23-4.
- (g) through the priest Psash (?) VIII. 12-end.
- (h) through Imuthes IV. 1-22.
- (i) by dreams verso XVII, eye-paint XXI, invocation XXVII ? XXVIII.
- (k) for thief-catching III. 29, or shipwreck (?) verso XV.

2. to obtain favour and respect XI, verso XXXII. to avert anger of superior XV. 24-31.

3. Erotica—

- by potions XV. 1-21, XXI. 10-43, XXV. 23-XXVI.
- by salves XII, verso III. 14-16, XII-XIII. 9, XIII. 10-11, XIV, XXIII, XXV, XXX, XXXII.
- αγωγιμον* verso XVI, XVII, XIX.
- διακοπη* XIII. 1-10.

4. Poisons, &c.—

- blinding XIII. 11, XXIV. 30.
- soporifics XXIII. 1-20, XXIV, verso II. 16-III. 3.
- maddening (magic) verso XXIX.
- slaying XXIII. 7, XXIV. 28, verso XXXII.
- uses of the shrew-mouse, &c. (chiefly in erotica) XIII. 11-end and verso XXXII.

5. Healing—

- poison XIX. 10-21.
- sting XX. 1-27.
- dog's bite XIX. 9, 32-40.
- bone in throat XIX. 21-32, XX. 27-33.
- gout and other affections of feet verso VIII-X, XI.
- water in ears verso IV. 1-5.
- ophthalmia (?) verso XX.
- fever verso XXXIII.
- haemorrhage, &c. in woman verso V. 1-3, 9-13, V. 4-8.
- to ascertain pregnancy verso V. 4-8.

6. names or descriptions of plants, drugs, &c. verso I-II. 15, III. 4-13, 17-18, IV. 6-19, V. 14-17.

SYNOPSIS OF CONTENTS

COLUMN I-III. Divination by vessel with medium.

1/2-3/5 invocation ; 3/5-3/35 directions.

IV. 1-19. Process employed by Imuthes.

1-8 directions ; 9-19 Greek invocation.

IV. 20-22. For a horoscope (?).

IV. 23-24. Eye-paints.

V. 1-2. fragmentary.

3-32. Divination by lamp without medium.

3-8 directions ; 9-23 invocations ; 24-32 prescription for eye-paint and further directions.

VI-VIII. 11. Divination by lamp, with medium and alone.

6/1-11 directions ; 6/11-8/11 invocations.

VIII. 12-18. Divination alone, according to the priest Psash (?).

12-16 invocation ; 16-18 directions.

IX-X. 22. Divination of Chons by vessel.

9/1-10/9 invocation ; 10/9-10/19 directions for use with medium ; 10/20-10/22 for use alone.

X. 22-35. Divination by vessel to see the bark of Ra, alone.

23-30 invocation ; 30-35 directions.

XI. Formula for acquiring praise and honour.

EXPLANATION OF SIGNS

TRANSLATION.

RESTORATIONS are placed in square brackets []. Lacunae in the original, for which no restoration is suggested, are represented by dots. Words in round brackets () are not in the original, but are added by the translators; those between angular brackets < > are intended to be omitted.

The second person singular has been rendered by 'thou, thee' in invocations, by 'you' elsewhere. In the very few instances in which the second person plural occurs, it is indicated by the use of 'ye' or 'you' (plur.); (his) following a word indicates that the word is followed in the original by the sign sp sn, implying that the word or phrase is to be repeated.

An accurate transcription of the magic names is given in the transliteration; in the translation we have rendered the sound approximately without strict adherence to any one system, generally following the glosses where they exist, as it was thought that this would be the most useful course for such readers as are not Egyptian scholars.

TRANSLITERATION.

For the system, see note preceding the demotic glossary. Words transliterated with Coptic letters between asterisks are written in cipher in the original.

REFERENCES.

In referring to the plates of the papyrus in vol. ii, Col. I. l. 1 is quoted as 1/1 and verso, Col. II. l. 3 as V. 2/3, &c.

1. 1. Restore from 18/7. The parallel text to ll. 13-17 shows that more than half of the page is lost, but the heading line was probably not of full length. Pr-mze is περμζε (Oxyrhynchus), capital of the nineteenth nome of Upper Egypt.

1. 2. Pr- . . . e (?). The group suggests a reading Pr-ʾr-ʾmn for περρμμων (Pelusium), but the ʾr (?) sign is perhaps too upright, and it is more likely that the two signs following Pr are a special group for some divine name. Nothing is known of the religious importance of Pelusium, or even of its name in Egyptian, but the city is mentioned in a Greek invocation quoted below at l. 12.

1. 3. sh (?). This group, here in the plural, may represent  sh, 'toes' (LANGE, A. Z., 1896, 76). Cf. LEPSIUS, Todtenb., c. 42, l. 9 iw zb·w-i sh·w-i m ʿr·w (sic) ʿnh·w, 'my fingers and toes are as rearing serpents.' But the same group recurs in 7/2 as a masc. sing. subst. where the context rather suggests the meaning 'testicles.'

ʿnh·t, of a serpent, cf. 12/17; in Egyptian PLEYTE, Pap. Tur., cxxxii. 4 and (very late) Mar. Pap. Boul., I. Pl. 9, ll. 5-6. It seems to mean 'darting forward for attack.' Similar meanings, 'rise,' &c., are common, esp. in late texts, BR., Wtb., 198-9; cf. also 9/16, 10/7. But in GRIFFITH, Tell el Yahudiyeh, xxv. 15, an enraged serpent ʿnh nf·w-f 'breathed its vapour' at a god, ʿnh being there a transiive verb surviving in Sah. ⲁⲛⲩⲩ-ⲧⲓⲩ 'breathe,' BSCIALI, Rec. tr., vii. 25 (Job ix. 18).

sr-my-srpt. The same signs recur grouped together in varying order as a divine appellative in 9/6 and 11/8. The knife  and hide  are the zodiacal signs of Leo and Aries (BRUGSCH, Nouv. Rech., p. 22); the flower or seed-head is the peculiar determinative of the καρπוט throughout this papyrus. The same divine name, composed of a lotus bud (?)  with lion and spelt-out name of ram (srhw), occurs in LEPS., Todt., cap. 162, l. 5, variants giving srpd for the lotus bud (?) (Br., Wtb., 1265) and m'y for the lion (Leyd. Lijkpap., No. 16). Cf. also PLEYTE, Chapitres Suppl., Pl. 14 and 131. The group of a lotus leaf, lion, and ram is figured on several hypocephali, the best example being in BUDGE, Lady Meux Cat., 2nd ed., Pl. VI. Cf. PLEYTE, ib. text, Pl. opp. p. 60. Probably none of these instances are earlier than the Persian invasion. Outside our papyrus the normal order is evidently lotus-lion-ram, and Greek versions agree with this: Brit. Mus. Pap. CXXI. l. 499 εγω ειμι ο εν τω Πηλουσιω καθιδρυμενος Σερφουθ: μυνισρω: (so facs.), similarly l. 557; in Leyd. Pap. V. col. 3 a, l. 6, the spelling is varied and corrupt. In each case σερφουθ is marked off from μυνισρω, the latter appearing as one word. On a gnostic gem in the Wilson Collection belonging to Aberdeen University is the legend:—σερφουθ μυνισρω λαλαμ dos μοι χαριν πραξιν νεικην. In this combination the lotus (καρπוט, see below, 2/17), the lion (λεοντι, see below, 5/11), and the ram (ερω, see below, 11/8 and 14/13, and decan names in Br., Wtb. Suppl., 995) probably all represent solar attributes.

rn-yt. This abnormal spelling apparently arises from a combination of the earlier ryn-y and the later form found in O. C. Par. ερεντ (A. Z., 1900, 89, cf. Boh. ερεντ Hyv. Actes, 108). Cf. 14/2 yrt-yt.

l. 13. Lines 13-17 are repeated with the missing passages complete in verso XXVII, which is written on the back of this and the following column.

syl-p-k. The first element is written as the 'serpent' crt in the parallel text and k is bull (κo, 7/33), but p seems meaningless. It may possibly be 'the impregnator of the cow,' cf. BUDGE, Nesiamsu, iii. 6, p' k' sty m k-wt. In PARTHEY, Zwei gr. Zauberpap., i. 252, we have practically the same phrase introduced into an O. C. context which gives an entirely different meaning, 'I am Osiris whom Set destroyed,' πεντασχι τακο(γ); see ERMAN, A. Z., 1883, 109 note.

stm, i. e. 'hearing,' or perhaps 'hearer,' but the personal determinative is absent.

l. 15. Kasantra alone without κλο appears in the demotic of both texts, suggesting a reminiscence of the prophetess Cassandra.

l. 16. srrf the hieroglyphic sfr of II Beni Hasan, Pl. IV, a winged quadruped with raptorial beak. The srrf is described in Kufi, xv. 1 seq., as 'the image (?) of god (?), the king (?) of all that is in the world, the avenger that cannot (himself) be punished; his beak is that of the falcon, his eyes those of a man, his limbs of a lion, his ears of a . . . , his scales of a water- . . . , his tail a serpent's.' Further, he is the mightiest of beings next to God, has authority over everything on earth like Death, and is the instrument of God's vengeance.

l. 17. sq, cf. 6/19 for the complete phrase. The meaning 'drawl' is not quite certain. It must be some artificial way of speaking, such as whining or muttering, cf. 7/32 and Leyd. Pap. Gr. W. col. 1, l. 38, col. 3. l. 2, and φθογγος αναγκαστικός, &c., Brit. Mus. Gr. Pap. CXXI. 765 seq.

p-mr-ḥ pronounced p-le-ehe, produces the common Ptolemaic proper name Πελαιας, as is proved by a bilingual (SPIEGELBERG, Strassb. Pap. No. 21, text, pp. 21-2, the reading P-ers to be corrected to p-mr-ḥ; the Greek nominative shown in GRÆNF. Amh. Pap. LI. 5). The religious significance of this appellation, 'the good oxherd,' is not clear, nor has it been traced in early texts; from 2/7 it is clearly applied to Anubis, and perhaps dogs were used for herding cattle in Ancient Egypt? It is probably equivalent to Gk. ποιμην, for which see GOODWIN, Cambridge Essays, 1852, p. 26, B. M. Gr. Pap. XLVI, l. 31. If the Good Shepherd is the meaning, we may note the Χριστος Ανουβις of Leyd. Pap. Gr. V. vi. 17.

Ptolemaic proper names commencing with $\Phi\rho\iota$ - 'sheikh' = p-hry-. The pronunciation here would be hri-tô rather than pet, unless the spelling is

l. 21. Hor-Amon is known in figures of glazed pottery (LANZONE, Diz.

l. 23. sp-sn. It seems probable that this group may be used simply as a mark of emphasis, e.g. after m šs, 'exceedingly,' and here after the imperative 'say to them!' It can hardly mean 'say to them twice.'

The gloss may of course be incomplete, like some others.

In the older texts (š'y) he seems to be mainly a god of destiny (LANZ., Diz. Mit., 1185).

1. 14. aph-ḥo-b-ḥo-s, &c. As the glosses show this is merely a transcription of the Greek words ἀφῶβος ἀψεύστος ἐπ' ἀληθείᾳ, and to mark this the determinative of that which is foreign is placed at the end of each word. It is interesting to find the initial letter /, here and in 10/30, representing the Gk. α, and so indicating that that was its normal pronunciation. In Achm. it corresponds to α, rarely ε, in Sah. and Boh. to ε, rarely α. ε is probably a wearing down or shortening of the earlier α.

1. 15. aḥny, a peculiar writing (as if aḥn-y) for ἀνά, occurring also in I Kham. v. 14*.

16. y. The sign represents  and is transcribed ny twice 7/24, 16/9. This can hardly be the pronunciation of the interjection

The usual interjection in religious texts is   which occurs here frequently spelt    , but we consider  to be distinct from hy.

* The group for ny is that which spells ne-ne (ננ) in ordinary texts, but here the ne is superfluous, and in this papyrus a false ne is always written before ne, so that ננ has to be written out ne(-ne)-ne. In other texts as well as this we find ne-nfr with a false ne, probably due to the initial sound of nfr, and this may have led to the otiose ne before ne in the present text.

Peintat is my correct name. O great god whose name is great, (14) appear to this child without alarming or deceiving, truthfully.' You utter these (15) charms seven times, you make him open his eyes. Anubis, come to me, the High, the Mighty, the Chief over the mysteries of those in the Underworld, the Pharaoh of those in Amenti, the Chief Physician, (19) the fair [son?] of Osiris, he whose face is strong among the gods, thou manifestest thyself in the Underworld before the hand of Osiris. Thou servest (20) the souls of Abydos, for they all live by thee, these souls (namely) those of the sacred Underworld. Come to the earth, show thyself to me name is attached to the execution-block, but here it has the determinative of fire.

l. 17. Cf. Horus on the lotus at Erment L. D. iv. 61, g. 65; and in Greek papyri, εχει μορφην νηπιου παιδος επι λωτω καθημενος PARTHEY, Zwei gr. Zauberpap., ii. 106; ο επι του λωτου καθημενος και λαμπυριδων την ολην οικουμενην Leyd. Pap. Gr. V. iii. 15.

śn, srpt, see LORET, Rec. trav., i. 190, for a useful but by no means final discussion of the Egyptian names of the lotus. srpt (see 1/12) is a name apparently of late introduction, śn is very ancient, and both words are to be paralleled, with varied meaning, in Semitic languages. From this passage one may conjecture that srpt is the lotus bud and śn the flower.

l. 18. wr syn, 'chief physician,' an old Egyptian official title (O. K. in P. S. B. A., xi. 306, Persian period BRUGSCH., Thes., 639), but amongst the gods most applicable to Thoth. Apparently Thoth and Anubis are here united, cf. the name Hermanubis and l. 21. ħry-śśt, 'chief over the mysteries,' is another old title appropriate enough for either Thoth or Anubis.

l. 20. 'For they all live by thee.' Apparently Anubis was responsible for the provision of food and attendance on the souls,

l. 21. p yt-w sp-sn is intended to be read p yt yt-w as 8/2. Cf. the common appellation προπατωρ in the Gk. papyri. 'Father of the fathers of all the gods' occurs perhaps as early as the N. K. in Boul. Pap. No. 17, p. 7, l. 6 (Hymn to Amon-Re).

l. 22. nte-k z n-y wh. For this formula cf. O. C. Par. πρεσβυ οτω και αφωλ επιζητος αμμοσ ερωζ (sic) (A. Z., 1900, 89). εισελθε και χρηματισον B. M. Pap. XLVI. 445. šn, lit. 'inquire,' is used vaguely, both of the inquiry and of the answer in this papyrus, as χρηματισειν in Greek. ϣηη Ⲫⲁ in Copt. is 'beg for,' not 'ask a question'; possibly it has such a meaning here.

l. 24. hr n ntr-w 'y, &c. = *(ϩ)ⲁⲛⲏⲧⲏⲣ ⲉⲓ . . . *(ϩ)ⲁⲧ ⲉⲓ (see chapter on grammar in vol. ii).

l. 25. 'And you see them' is an addition above the line which does not seem appropriate, as the boy, not the magician, is to see them.

nhe-k . . . nhs-t-k: the defective spelling nhe is found again in the papyrus, leaving no doubt that it represents nhse, 'waken,' 'raise.' The verb is 'iv^{tas} infirmæ' according to SETHE, and the suffix form, lost in Coptic, shows here a curious uncertainty as to the retention of the t.

l. 26. wr-ty. Originally the title of the high priest of Thoth at Hermopolis Magna (Khmun), it was perhaps applied later to the ibis-god himself (e.g. LEGRAIN, Livre des transf., iv. 5). Evidently in connexion with this, Thoth is called 'the god five times great ('o), the mighty (wr) lord of Khmun' (II MAHAFFY, Petrie Pap. Pl. 13, II Kham.

Formula: seven times. You say to the boy 'Speak to Anubis, saying (24) "Go forth, bring in the gods."' When he goes after them and brings them in, you ask the boy, saying 'Have the gods (25) come in?' If he says 'They have come' and you (sic) see them, you cry before them. Formula: 'Raise thyself for me (bis), Pshoi; raise thyself, Mera (26), the Great of Five, Didiou, Tenziou, do justice to me. Say seven times. (28) You say to the boy 'Speak to Anubis, saying "Bring in a table for the my 're qme. Meaning very uncertain; if the dot after qme be taken as closing the phrase, the 'r must be regarded as passive in meaning 'let a creation (?) be made,' cf. 5/22 my wn yr-t and GRIFF., High Priests, p. 87, n. to l. 6, and SETHE, Verb., ii. § 247, and mĥ following the dot suggests an imperative. Perhaps Maregom (?) is to be taken as a magical name.

5, 7). The common Ptolemaic name Πορτις (cf. GRENFELL, Gk. Pap. I, II; Amherst Pap.; WILCKEN, Gr. Ostr.) in the witnesses of the Grey antigraph (Brit. Mus. Gr. Pap. I. Pl. 27) is P-wr-ty in the corresponding Berlin demotic Pap. 3119 verso (Berl. Dem. Pap. Pl. 16). Πορτις is no doubt founded on an abbreviated pronunciation of the name which we have here with its full value P-wer-tiu. In V. 33/2 we have the normal orthography of the title, varied here and in 22/1.

l. 27. 'q a p ĥt, perhaps may be participial rather than imperative. 'q r ĥt, lit. 'enter the heart,' is common in early demotic in the sense of 'please.' Cf. ΔΡΩΤΗ= (SPIEGELB., Rec. trav., xxiii. 201) ωκ η ρητ (BSCIAL, ib., vii. 27).

Pap. Rain. Mitth. ii. 266); gbyr may possibly be connected with gbyr and with the demotic ligature here; or hmr may be the reading of the latter.

l. 22. tp. Two portions of the body are written tp in the demotic of this papyrus. One has the det. of bone as well as that of flesh, and is undoubtedly ταν, 'horn,' Eg.  Without the det. of bone we have the tp of an ass or a hoopoe, which presumably means the head or skull; in other cases, e.g. 19/26, one may doubt whether horn ταν is not intended by the same group.

l. 23. sq, written with the crocodile, presumably = αιε; see the verb in BRUGSCH, Rec., iv. Pl. 97, l. 16, and as a participle attached to a word meaning incense, ib., Pl. 85 A, ll. 3, 7, and 11; Pl. 96, l. 6.

εαιε suggests εαιε: αιε, i. e. 'anise,' or according to some MSS. 'mint,' LORET, Flore Phar., 2nd ed. pp. 53, 71; and it seems possible that the tall dry stalks of the anise (as opposed to the commonly prescribed seeds) should be denoted by h, lit. 'wood.'

l. 24. g^lgⁿtsy with gloss καλακαποι suggests κολοκύνθεις; but as the determinative here indicates a mineral and not a plant, it must be intended for χαλκάνθη, 'sulphate of copper,' which is written χαλκάνθον in Leyd. Pap. X. 1, 3.

l. 25. y^h, 'spirit' of a dead person, or a 'demon': the Gk. δαίμων, which may be good or bad (Pap. Bibl. Nat. passim). On the Bentresh Stela the demon possessing the princess is h.

If you (28) wish to make (them) all depart, you put ape's dung on the brazier, then they all depart to their place, and you utter their spell of dismissal also.

ylh. The h is written by a sign common enough in other texts, but in this MS. found only here, and in 6/20 h/n and 23/29 h/ly.

l. 26. hsy, 'approved,' 'deified,' as an expression for one drowned or devoured by a crocodile (19/24), cf. Hdt. ii. 90, and note to l. 31.

g^rrb n y^m, 'sea-karab,' determined as a mineral can scarcely be κάραβος = 'palinurus vulgaris,' unless its shell be treated as such. Cf. καρκινος ποταμιος in Pap. Bibl. Nat. 2458, 2687. In favour of the sense 'crab' or 'crayfish' we might suppose that it was called 'sea-karab' to distinguish it from the καραβος, 'beetle.'

withdrawal into or to oneself, an idea naturally associated with sleeping or lying down (str n-k 4/8) and best seen with the verb š̄e, which by itself means 'go,' while š̄e n-f (ⲱⲉ ⲡⲁⲥⲓ) means 'go away,' 'go home,' 'withdraw.'

1. 29. ʾny ʿze a hn̄, probably = κλεπτην πιασαι B. M. Pap. XLVI. 172.

e·r-k š̄ne = εκϋαν-, an isolated instance at present. The following is the απολυσις of the Gk. papyri, B. M. Pap. CXXI. 333.

1. 31. t š̄e-f n h̄sy = ⲭⲟⲩ ⲡⲣⲁⲥⲓⲉ, cf. Sah. ⲁⲩⲱⲉ ⲡⲣⲁⲥⲓⲉ ⲉⲛⲁⲛⲁⲓⲃⲱⲥⲁⲛ 1 Tim. i. 19, and ⲁⲱⲕ ⲡⲣⲁⲥⲓⲉ 'be drowned' (PEYRON). The literal meaning is 'thou shalt cause him to go as one praised (pleasing).' Similarly in I Kham. iv. 9, 14, 20 drowning is expressed by ʾr-f h̄s·t p R̄, 'He did that which pleased Re (the sun god).' h̄sy has det. of sun and in some cases the divine det. ⲓ prefixed to the word-sign, cf. 15/12. In Gk. our expression is rendered by ἐκθέωσον, 'deify,' or possibly 'consecrate,' which proves that the meaning 'blessed dead,' i.e. 'divinised,' was not yet forgotten: λαβων μνγαλον ἐκθέωσον πηγαιω υδατι, και λαβων καθαρους σεληνιακους δυο ἐκθέωσον υδατι ποταμω Pap. Bibl. Nat. l. 2455; εασον καταβωτην εις κρινινον εως αν αποθεωθη B. M. Pap. CXXI. 629; αποθωσον εις [γαλα, &c.] Berl. Pap. I. 5.

h̄sy—as a proper name = ⲁⲩⲱⲥ (SPIEGELBERG, Eigennamen, p. 7*), lit. 'praised' or 'blessed'—is an euphemism for 'drowned.' No other meaning is ascertained in demotic for the word as subst.; and that it

You take a band of linen of sixteen threads, four of white, four of [green], (34) four of blue, four of red, and make them into one band and stain them with the blood of a hoopoe, and you bind it with a scarab in its attitude of the sun-god, (35) drowned, being wrapped in byssus, and you bind it to the body of the boy who has the vessel and it will work magic quickly; there being nothing [in the world better (?)] than it (?).

We may thus be sure of its meaning in l. 26 q.v. and in l. 35, as well as in the numerous parallels to the passage here under discussion. Applied to Osiris, also, the word 'drowned' is quite appropriate, see 6/12.

1. 16. αουρεας. Mr. Kenyon suggests that this may possibly be a corruption of αργυρεας.

1. 18. ψυχαουγεου. Mr. Kenyon, who has kindly looked at this passage in the original MS., writes: 'I think the fourth letter is α, not λ, . . . and the only thing I can think of is ψυγαγωγον. In this case we should again have γ and ο confused (as in αουρεας = αργυρεας?). This leaves φωξ unaccounted for, but a nominative (and from its termination it could be nothing else) is out of place here, so that the corruption must in any case be rather extensive. I do not think anything but επιταγειν can be read in l. 19. Probab'ly επιταγή is meant.' The word ψυγαγωγον is probably to be taken as associated with the idea of necromancy.

(12) the great god Barzan Boubarzan Narzazouzan Barzabouza, (13) the sun; send up to me this night thy archangel (14) Zebourthaunen; answer with truth, truthfully, without falsehood, without (15) ambiguity concerning this matter, for I conjure thee by him (16) who is seated in the flaming vesture on the silver(?) head of the (17) Agathodaemon, the almighty four-faced daemon, the highest (18) darkling and soul-bringing(?) Phox; do not disregard me, but send up (19) speedily in this night an injunction(?) of the god.' Say this three times.

(20) Then he speaks with you with his mouth opposite your mouth in truth concerning everything that you wish. When he has finished, and goes away again, (21) you place a tablet of reading(?) the hours upon the bricks and you place the stars upon it and write your purpose(?) on a new roll (22) and place it on the tablet; then he(?) makes your stars appear which are favourable for your purpose(?).

(23) [A method] of lucky-shadows(?), that is tested: a hawk's egg with myrrh, pound(?), put on your eyes of it, then it makes lucky-shadows(?). (24) Another again: head and blood of a hoopoe; cook(?) them and make them into a dry medicament and paint your eyes with it; then you see them, again.

You go to a dark clean recess with its face open to the south and you purify it with (4) natron-water, and you take a new white lamp in which no red earth or gum-water has been put and place a clean wick (5) in it and fill it with real oil after writing this name and these figures on the wick with ink of myrrh beforehand; (6) and you lay it on a new brick before you, its underside being spread with sand; and you pronounce these spells over the lamp again another seven times. You display frankincense in front of (7) the lamp and you look at the lamp; then you see the god about the lamp and you lie down on a rush mat without speaking (8) to any one on earth. Then he makes answer to you by dream. Behold its invocation. Formula: (In margin: Behold the spells which you write on the wick: Bakhukhsikhukh, and figures)

gr. Zauberpap., I. l. 277. As to the use of red earth and gum with pottery cf. the quotation from SACY, s.v. $\alpha\omega\iota$, in PEYRON, p. 380 a.

l. 5. $r^w h^l$, 'myrrh ink,' $\sigma\mu\rho\rho\nu\omicron\mu\epsilon\lambda\alpha\nu$, probably somewhat after the recipe given in PARTHEY, u. s. II. 34^a.

l. 8. $\mathfrak{A}\mathfrak{X}\mathfrak{X}\mathfrak{C}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{X}\mathfrak{X}$ looks like 'Soul of Khukh, son of Khukh.' The magic-name compounds with $\chi\upsilon\chi$, $\chi\upsilon\chi$, $\chi\omega\omega\chi$ are very numerous; cf. P. Sophia, § 361, $\mathfrak{A}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{X}\mathfrak{I}\mathfrak{X}$ and elsewhere often $\beta\alpha\chi\upsilon\chi$. SETHE, Verbum, i. § 417, suggests that the $\mathfrak{X}\mathfrak{O}\mathfrak{X}$ is the elemental god KK , 'darkness.'

gm-k-ysw, an extraordinary form; but, it is to be feared, no guide to the real pronunciation, which was probably gemyoks or gemyoksu; the written y is thus superfluous, cf. 3/9 note, or at least misplaced.

s-qlm, see note in glossary. 'The place of the garland-seller': does this mean his shop or his garden?

ty-sw: the regular form in this papyrus, as it were, *ⲧⲏⲥⲱ. In gm-k-ysw, above, the sw = Eg. st, plur. of the absolute object-pronoun. Here, after the infinitive, it is abnormal, the s being inserted before the proper suffix -w on false analogy. In Coptic (Str., § 342, p. 169, and PIEHL, A. Z., 95. 42) the only clear instance of this false form seems to be Sah. ⲉⲓⲁⲓⲥⲱ. The similar ⲧⲏⲥⲱⲥⲉ, ⲧⲏⲥⲱⲥⲱⲥ, &c., are also etymologically wrong, but they seem to be helped by the causative with st-m-f: see GRIFF., High Priests, p. 85.

l. 26. ⲓⲗ: ⲓⲁⲗ: ⲉⲓⲁⲗ probably to be connected with ἰαλος.

The ointment which you put on your eyes when you are about to inquire of the lamp in any lamp-divination: you take some flowers (25) of the Greek bean; you find them in the place of the garland-seller, otherwise said of the lupin-seller; you take them fresh and put them (26) in a lok-vessel of glass and stop its mouth very well for twenty days in a secret dark place. After twenty days, if you (27) take it out and open it, you find a pair (?) of testicles in it with a phallus. You leave it for forty days and when you take it out (28) and open it, you find that it has become bloody; then you put it on a glass thing and put the glass thing into a pottery thing (29) in a place hidden at all times. When you desire to make inquiry of the lamp with it at any time if you fill your eyes with this (30) blood aforesaid, and if you go in to pronounce a spell over the lamp you see a figure of a god standing behind (?) the lamp, and he speaks (31) with you concerning the question which you wish; or you lie down and he comes to you. You go to a clean dark cell without light and you dig a new hole in an east wall (2) and you take a white lamp in which no minium or gum water has been put, its wick being clean, and you fill it with clean genuine Oasis oil, (3) and you recite the spells of praising Ra at dawn in his rising and you bring the lamp when lighted opposite the sun and recite to it the spells as below four times, (4) and you take it into the cell, you being pure, and the boy also, and you pronounce the spells to the boy, he not looking at the lamp, his eyes being (5) closed, seven times. You put pure frankincense on the brazier. You put your finger on the boy's head, his eyes being closed. (6) When you have finished you make him open his eyes towards the lamp; then he sees the shadow of the god about the lamp, and he inquires for you (7) concerning that which you desire. You must do it at midday in a place without light. If it be that you are inquiring for a spirit damned, a wick of sail-cloth (?) (8) is what you put in the lamp and you fill it with clean butter. If it is some other business, a clean wick with pure genuine oil (9) is that which you put in the lamp; if you will do it to bring

l. 12. p ḥsy, cf. l. 16, and above, note to 3/31. 'Approved,' 'praised' would be a rather unexpected term to apply to Osiris himself, though it could be explained as equivalent to mꜥ ḥrw and 'deified.' The sense 'drowned' is quite applicable, as Osiris' body was at least sunk in the waters, cf. the text of Ptah published by BREASTED, A. Z., 1901, Pl. II, ll. 19, 62; and this sense is implied in Brit. Mus. Pap. XLVI. 259-63 οστα Εοιηους . . . τον Εοιη (ΖΑCΙΕ) τον ενεχθεντα εν τω ρευματι του ποταμου for three days and three nights. Plutarch's account, De Iside et Osiride, cap. 13 et seqq., hardly needs quotation.

If it is a direct (?) inquiry, (27) these things alone are what you recite. If it is an inquiry by the boy that you are about, you recite these aforesaid to the lamp (28) before calling down into the head of the boy, you turn round (?), you recite this other invocation to the lamp also. Formula: 'O Osiris, O lamp (29) that giveth vision

l. 29. hw-w. This has evidently been written by mistake for hry-w, which has been inserted above. The mistake is important as indicating that the r of hrw, hw, 'day,' was retained in the plural (sing. 2007).

The snake as word-sign has six loops here and in 21/4, four loops in l. 16. This agrees with the snake determinative of šy which has usually four loops, once (19/12) six loops, and twice (3/3, 5/9) two loops, and Shoi is said to be 'in Nun' 2/5. It is thus the snake of Shay. But the sign, meaning distinctly a (sacred) snake, cannot read šy, which always means distinctly a divinity. Hfe is perhaps the most probable reading, see esp. 21/4; the det. of that word in 9/20 has only two loops, but in Louvre dem. Mag. iii. 9 five or six loops. Syt 14/3, V. 27/1 has four loops, but the head seems to be raised high; syf is derived from Eg. s-ʿ which is represented by  in late texts, Br., Dict. Geogr., 762.

l. 16. bre: cf. ḥwape, 'intumescere,' ḥope, 'fastuose se gerere,' or better ḥepi, 'juvenis.'

ʾnh is evidently the serpent word met with in 1/3. Possibly both bre and ʾnh are adjectives, and the construction may resemble the familiar Coptic construction with adjectives, Str., § 187.

t-wn, apparently an unetymological spelling for ntrwn: cf. 18/21.

poisonous serpent formed by Isis from the spittle of Ra, to bite him and make him reveal his secret name (texts of New Kingdom). With the construction compare l. 21 w^t my n šr my-ḥs, 10/13 tbe.t III n tbe.t nmy, and 10/10 š^c n ny.

l. 21. My-ḥs, a lion-god, son of Bubastis. For the pronunciation of the name see SPIEGELBERG, Eigennamen, p. 4*.

n by, gloss. ἡβαι. The plural sign is often omitted with by, and here we see the reason, viz. that the plural had no special form.

l. 22. n-mw.t-w, cf. l. 25. The prefixed n seems to represent a reduplication of the initial m, n being regularly assimilated to a following m.

Here we have νεκρὸς καὶ οἱ δαίμονες of Pap. Bibl. Nat. 1453.

l. 23. a mr-t in the Khamuas stories means 'on board ship' (High Priests, p. 98), but ⲙⲙⲣ in Coptic is 'across,' 'to the other side,' 'beyond.' a mr n may be 'beyond' as a preposition; the same word is used in 15/12 in the same connexion (with the tomb of Osiris at Abydos).

l. 24. e-ʾr-k. The gloss is certainly ⲉⲣ, and must be a correction.

swt is difficult to understand. The idea must be founded on the use of knots in magic, Lat. 'ligatura.'

zʿl-mt-t probably = 'word-seeking,' from Eg. zʿr, preserved also in ⲙⲙⲣ, &c. Were all these used at once, or were they alternatives?

l. 26. wnte: cf. LANZ., Diz. Mit., 165, or better BRUGSCH, Wtb. Suppl., 322. It would be possible to read ḥwnte. From the next line the wnte would seem to be souls in torment or else punishing demons.

l. 27. spe-w, see Glossary, s.v. spł.

More probably the whole expression 'heart of the Good House' is to be taken as the name of a symbolical plant, such as the 'resurrection' plant, Anastatica hierochuntina, or something similar. Cf. the story of the flower enclosing the heart of Bata put in a cup of

l. 23. hty hn[t]. The parallel 27/2 gives in hieratic ht followed by the nose hnt and the det. of a boat. ht means 'float down the river,' 'go north,' and hnt, 'sail up the river,' 'go south.' With this clue it is easy to read in LEEMANS' facsimile the verb hty in demotic, written as in the word mhty, V. 1, with its proper det. of water, and following it the verb hnt, also in demotic, with its proper det. the boat. Thus, though LEEMANS' facsimile cannot be confirmed owing to the wear of the papyrus, it is clear that we have a compound expression hty-hnt, 'go down and up.' This is the proper order for the two verbs, as is shown by hn m hd m hnt, 'rowing to and fro,' in the Westcar Papyrus, V. 4. It of course refers to the sinking to the horizon and rising to the zenith of the sun-boat.

l. 15. ʿmʿm. Cf. 13/11, 13, and in cipher εαιια 24/34, V. 32/2.
This must be the shrew-mouse. Here it appears connected with Letopolis, where the shrew-mouse was sacred to the blind Horus (RENOUF, P. S. B. A., viii. 155). In 13/11 the animal is prescribed to produce blindness, and in 13/12 and 24/34 it produces death in a man, and in V. 32/2 erotic feeling in a woman. The ʿmʿm, with determinative of an animal, is prescribed in Pap. Eb. 91/10; and in Pap. Kah. 7/9 the remains of a determinative will suit very well the picture of a mouse.
It is curious that the cipher writing yielding εαιια (which is certainly the same creature, cf. 13/19-21 with V. 32) makes its name almost identical with Sah. ααιη, which in Sap. 12/8 corresponds to σφῆκες of LXX. In Coptic, however, the shrew-mouse is αλιλ : αλιλι (PEYR., Lex. and Gramm.). The μυγᾶλος (sic) is prescribed several times in Pap.
Bibl. Nat. in ἀγωγαί.

Shym (Βοτ-ϣημ) and ʿy-t are both names of Letopolis in the Delta.
The last group in the line looks like ʿi, but is probably intended for wʿi.

1. 26. The pa is for πα-. περo in O. C. Par. corresponds to p pr-'o in 21/2. So also we have in B. M. Pap. XLVI, l. 113 εγω ειμι αγγελος του φαρω οσοροννωφρις, 'of Pharaoh Osoronnophris,' where φαρω = our pa p pr-'o. Undoubtedly the initial letter of pr-'o had already been lost by assimilation to the article. The tautology of του φα- is precisely the same as in Αμενωφρις του Παπριος, 'Amenophis, son of Hapis,' in JOSEPHUS, Contra Ap. i. 26.

. 3. The only kings whose names end in š are Darius, Xerxes, Artaxerxes, and the native Khebbesh. Of these Darius is doubtless the name to be restored here; cf. Diod. Sic. i. 95, and for his reputation as a magician in particular, μαγικων διδασκαλος, PORPHYRY, de Abstin., iv. 16. That kings, as well as aspirants to the throne, used these arts is suggested by the spell 'of Rameses III' being given to the herdsman Penhuyban in order to give him 'valour and respect.' Aromata, p. 33, and LEMM., Kopt. Apocr. Apostelacten (Mél. Asiat. t. x. p. 351). It occurs in magic prescriptions, Leyden Pap. W. i. 16, ix. 10. The demotic group hb . . . corresponding to it is strange in form and difficult to read: there seems to be a gap between the r and the measure.

Graphically $\odot$, $\oslash$ (fem.) are hieroglyphic equivalents of the demotic for $\kappa\iota\tau\epsilon$, 'didrachma,' but from 24/15, 18 the former should be a small multiple of the latter. $\sigma\alpha\tau\eta\rho$ (Copt. $\sigma\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\epsilon$, fem.) is common as a weight = 'tetradrachma,' in Ptolemaic and Roman papyri.

1. 9. ḥḥḥ is probably the true native pronunciation of the word for gum, unaffected by the Greek.

1. 10. twt (?). The determinative of a star must mean that the planet form Ḥr-p-k, a bull-headed man standing with was-sceptre, is intended, BR., Thes., p. 68. With regard to the reading, the sign is the det. of twt in Bul. Pap. I. Pl. 37, l. 14, and in l. 15 stands for twt. Twt, 'figure,' seems to be the reading here, and wherever it occurs with the det. of divinity (15/10, &c.); but without det. (16/22, &c.) it means 'style,' 'method,' and is probably to be read ky. Max Müller, however (Rec. trav. ix. 26), shows reason for reading it qte, comparing Louvre dem. Mag. v. 1, vi. 19; qte, though apparently masc., may be the origin of the fem. ḥḥḥ.

1. 11. hyn-w ḥḥḥ, some water: cf. 21/13 hyn-w 'rt-t.

l. 15. The word for bath is determined with the sign of fire: its name in Coptic is ⲉⲓⲟⲟⲩⲏ: ⲉⲓⲱⲟⲩⲏ with variations; in the demotic there is no trace of the ⲏ, and it evidently means 'place of washings,' ⲉⲓⲱⲟⲩⲏ*.

'You gild and embalm its tail' is perhaps the meaning.

l. 15. ʿlykt (fem.), an unknown word, apparently the gsur, 'ring,' of l. 27. It is perhaps to be connected with ⲉⲗⲓⲗ or ⲉⲗⲓⲕⲧⲟⲥ. ⲉⲗⲁⲗⲁⲕ, 'ring,' and ⲁⲗⲓⲕⲟⲩ, 'vase,' have been suggested, but these are both masculine, and ignore the ⲗ, which seems to be firm. The determinative appears to be that of silver, also found in znf, &c.

1. 22. θy t-t a, 'undertake,' 'apply hand to': cf. 17/26 θ wʿb a.

pe-f ky: this seems to correspond to py smt in l. 11.

t has been omitted by the scribe at the end of the line.

1. 28. f is omitted after r and pr is incomplete before ybt. The scribe has moreover been confused in describing the positions of the lamp and the boy.

1. 29. Thus the middle finger of the right hand must have had a different name from that of the left, see 13/18 and cf. 29/5 with this passage. ḥyne(?) has the det. of flesh and should be some part of the body.

let everything (22) that I shall apply(?) my hand to here to-day, let it happen.' Its method. You take a new lamp in which no minium has been put and you (put) (23) a clean wick in it, and you fill it with pure genuine oil and lay it in a place cleansed with natron water and concealed, (24) and you lay it on a new brick, and you take a boy and seat him upon another new brick, his face being (25) turned to the lamp, and you close his eyes and recite these things that are (written) above down into the boy's head seven times. You make him (26) open his eyes. You say to him, 'Do you see the light?' When he says to you 'I see the light in the flame of the lamp,' you cry at that moment saying (27) 'Heoue' nine times. You ask him concerning everything that you wish after reciting the invocation that you made previously before Phre in the morning. (28) You do it in a place with (its) entrance open to the East, and put the face of the lamp turned (blank). You put the face of the boy (29) turned (blank) facing the lamp, you being on his left hand. You cry down into his head, you strike his head with your second finger, (that) of the, of your (30) right hand.

COL. XVII.

(1) Another method of it again, very good, for the lamp. You (say?): 'Boel,' (thrice), 'I, I, I, A, A, A, Tat, Tat, Tat, the first attendant of the great god, he who gives light exceedingly, (2) the companion of the flame, in whose mouth is the flame which is not quenched, le-f mt-t ʿo-t: cf. εστιν δε το αγαθον ζωδιον B. M. Pap. XLVI. 171.

You recite these things down into the head of the boy, he looking (16) towards the lamp. Do not let him look towards another place except the lamp only; if he does not look towards it, then he is afraid. (17) You do all these things, you cease from your inquiry, you return, you make him close his eyes, you speak down into his head this other (18) invocation which is below, that is, if the gods go away and the boy ceases to see them: 'Arkhe-khem-phai, Zeou, (19) Hele, Satrapermet, watch this boy, do not let him be frightened, terrified, or scared, and make (20) him return to his original path. Open Teï (the Underworld), open Taï (Here).' I say it that this vessel-inquiry of the lamp is better (21) than the beginning. This is the method again; its form: you take a new lamp in which no minium has been put and you put a wick of (22) clean linen in it; you fill it with genuine clean oil; you place it on a new brick, you make the boy sit on another brick (23) opposite the lamp; you make him shut his eyes, you recite down into his head according to the other method also.

Another invocation which (24) you recite towards Phre in the morning three times or seven times. Formula: 'Iotabao, Sokh-ommoa, Okh-(25)-okh-Khan, Bouzanau, Aniesi, Ekomptho, Ketho, Sethori, (26) Thmilaalouapokhri may everything succeed that I shall do to-day,' and they will(?) succeed. If it be that you do not apply(?) purity to it, it does not succeed; its chief matter is purity.

Another (27) invocation like the one above again. Formula: 'Boel,' (thrice), 'I, I, I, A, I, I, I, A, Tat (thrice), he who giveth the light exceedingly, the companion of the flame, he of the flame which does not (28) perish, the god who liveth, who dieth not, he who sitteth in the flame, who is in the midst of the flame who is in the lake of heaven, in whose hand is the greatness and might (29) of the god, reveal thyself to Except that it bleeds (l. 14) there is little here to show what is meant by plege so long as ll. 7-8 remain unintelligible.

H. N., 6. 35 ad fin. Northward, Anthropophagi were placed in Syria, ib. 7. 2, or in Parthia (ROBINSON, Apocr. Gosp., p. 23, and Preface): cf. Rec. tr., xxv. 41. The land of Hah (Millions) is not known.

l. 5. a n Kmy . . . a p t must be for n Kmy . . . n p t. Possibly the Faiyumic pronunciation e for n has produced this exceptional writing.

l. 7. The following may be suggested as an alternative translation for this difficult passage: 'At the moment when she said this, a wasp (?) flew to me, my spittle (?) fell down upon me (from fright); it (the wasp) drew near (or gathered itself together) to me, coming unto me with a sting.' Here a-re-s is taken as a relative attached to z as regularly in other demotic texts (I Kham. v. 1, &c.); the n before fks-t is omitted. fy is taken in the sense of 'fly' (see GRIFF, H. Priests, p. 178, note to l. 19), and fks-t as possibly an Egyptian rendering of σφήξ. The Coptic ϣⲟⲩⲕⲁⲥⲓ, meaning an aquatic (?) animal of some kind, can hardly be the same word for phonetic reasons; for the form of the f see l. 21. The word recurs in 21/7.

COL. XXI.

1. 1. The first lines of this column have been made the subject of special study in connexion with the Old Coptic texts of Paris (written on the first pages of the Pap. Bibl. Nat., edited by WESSELY), which contain a variant version of them: ERMAN, A. Z., 1883, 89; GRIFFITH, A. Z., 1900, 85; 1901, 86.

1. 2. Parallel to this line the O. C. (A. Z., 1883, Pl. 3) gives εοτωτε οςιρε, пероѣти ппнѣ ѡткансе петѣпрнсіѣтин ετ+ιοτω πεѣωτ петζα ζѣα ппотѣс. ппероѣе. ете пег. εοοτ ѡ па ѡαλωα. The notes to the foregoing in A. Z., 1900, 86 seq., may be consulted by those who wish to study its connexion with the demotic text.

Tny. The Edfu geographical list (Br., Dict. Geogr., 1359) states that the head of Osiris was preserved at Abydos (in the nome of This) and a sbq, 'foot (?)', at Thebes.

pr-šylem, πασαλωα, perhaps Jerusalem, or Siloam. Probably n pr-šylem is to be read.

COL. XXI.

(1) The vessel-inquiry of Osiris. (2) 'Hail to him! Osiris, King of the Underworld, lord of burial, whose head is in This, and his feet in Thebes, he who giveth answer (?) in Abydos, (3) whose . . . is (in?) Pashalom, he who is under the nubs tree in Meroë, who is on the mountain of Poranos, who is on my house to eternity, (4) the house of Netbeou for ever, he whose countenance is as the resemblance (?) of the face of a hawk of linen, mighty one whose tail is the tail of a serpent, (5) whose back is the back of a crocodile (?), whose hand is a man's, who is girded (?) with this girdle of bandage, in whose hand is this wand of command, (6) hail to him Iaho, Sabaho, Atonai, Mistemu, Iaiiu; hail to him, Michael, Sabael, (7) hail to him, Anubis in the nome of the dog-faces, he to whom this earth belongs, who carries a wound (?) on one foot, (8) hide the darkness in the midst, bring in the light for me, come in to me, tell me the answer to that about which I am inquiring here to-day.'—Nine times, (9) until the god come and the light appear. You must do it in the manner of the remainder as above again; the boy's face being to the East and your own face to the West; you call down into his head.

When evening comes, you (14) take it out, you spread its under part with sand, and put a circular strip of cloth under it upon the sand, unto four days; you do frankincense-burning before it. When the four days have passed, and it is dry, (15) you take it before you (lit. your feet), there being a cloth spread under it. You divide it down its middle with a bronze knife; you take (?) its right half, and your nails of your right hand and foot; (16) you cook them on a new potsherd with vine wood, you pound them with nine apple-pips together with your urine or your sweat free from oil (17) of the bath; you make it into a ball and put it in the wine, and speak over it seven times, and you make the woman drink it; and you take its other half, the left one, together with your nails of your left hand (18) and foot also, and bind them in a strip of fine linen, with myrrh and saffron, and bind them to your

be left out of the question, the fact that both in 21/27 and 21/41 š is written over ne, as if by an afterthought, suggests that ne, which is identical in spelling with na the auxiliary of the future, must be the verb na, 'go' (attaching itself to nos: nos, 'futurus esse'), as opposed to nnos, 'come' (which is qualitative of ei; see KABIS, A. Z., 75. 107). na is practically the qualitative of we (STERN, § 348). The correction of ne to š in both passages would therefore be particularly remarkable. Although, according to STEINDORFF, § 251, the qualitative is admissible in the conjunctive, it seems difficult after wyante: hence no doubt the correction; but if it be possible, the meaning would be 'until she be going,' while š expresses 'until she go.' It would seem that the scribe was puzzled by the ne, hence the mistakes and corrections. The following table of forms of the verbs 'come' and 'go' may be useful:—

l. 12. The meaning may be that you take each of the four ingredients separately and soak it in wine. Perhaps the four uteh of wine make the lok.

1 ounce, (9) hyoscyamus, 1 ounce, (10) ivy, 1 ounce; (11) you pound them like (sic) a lok-measure of wine. If you wish to do it cleverly (?) (12) you take four portions to each one of them with an uteh of wine, (13) you moisten them from morning to evening; you clarify them, (14) you make them drink it; very good.

(17) A medicament for making a man sleep; very good :—(18) pips (?) of apple, 1 stater (?), 1 drachma, mandragora root, 4 drachmas, (19) ivy, 4 drachmas; pound together; you put fifteen (20) uteh of wine to it; you put it into a glass glyt; (21) you keep it. If you wish to give it, you put a little into a cup of wine, (22) you give it to the man.

Ivy: it grows in gardens; (23) its leaf is like the leaf of shekam, being divided into three lobes (24) like a vine-leaf; it (the leaf) is one palm in measurement; its blossom (25) is like silver—another says gold.

Another: a two-tailed lizard.

(27) A medicament for catalepsy (?): gall of cerastes, pips (?) of western apples, herb of klo, (28) pound them together; make into a pill, put (it) into the food (?).

When you have finished, you recite a charm, (20) bringing your hand over his eyes. A boy who has not yet gone with a woman, (21) is he] whom you make come before you (?); you question him, saying, 'What do you see?' (22) then he tells you about everything that you ask him.

(23) A method to put the heart of a woman after a man; done in one moment(?), and it comes to pass instantly. You take (24) a swallow(?) alive, together with a hoopoe, (both) alive. Ointment made for them: (25) blood of a male ass, blood of the tick(?) of a black cow; you anoint (26) their heads with lotus ointment; you utter a cry before the sun in his moment of rising; (27) you cut off the heads of the two; you take the heart out of the right ribs (28) of both of them; you anoint it with the ass's blood and the blood of the tick(?) of a black cow, (29)

l. 21. Read [p] nt e·r-k, which is required by the space and the meaning. ne-t-t-f: either -f must refer to the lamp, or to the action in general, or else it is a slip for -k.

l. 23. w·t wne-t: the preparation of the materials would take several days, but they could be kept ready for immediate use.

l. 24. Bhte seems a likely word, but there is no authority for reading the third sign in the cipher word as h.

e-w e·nh does not mean that several hoopoes were required. There were only two birds: see l. 27.

When you wish to make a woman love a man, you take (32) the shaving (?) of a pleasure-wood (?); you recite these correct names before them; (33) you put it into a cup of wine or beer; you give it to the woman and she drinks it. l. 19. n pe-k bl or ph (?): cf. l. 30.

ll. 24-29 are a repetition of 5/24-30; see notes there.

l. 24. whe (?). šn stands in the parallel. It seems that whe (?) is used of μαντεία αὐτοπτική (cf. note to 10/22), and šn-hne, when opposed to it (l. 34), means divination with a medium.

his eyes; you ask him, saying, 'What are the things which you have seen?' (17) If he says, 'I have seen the gods about the lamp,' then they tell him answer concerning that which they will be asked. If you wish to do it by yourself alone, (18) you fill your eyes with the ointment aforesaid; you stand up opposite the lamp when alight; you recite to it seven times with your eyes shut; when you have finished, you open (19) your eyes; then you see the gods behind(?) you; you speak with them concerning that which you desire; you ought to do it in a dark place. The invocation which you recite, (20) formula: 'I am Manebai, Ghethethoni, Khabakhel, let me worship thee, the child of Arpithnapira, (21) Pileasa, Gnuriph-arisa, Teni-irissa, Psi, Psi, Irissa, (22) Gimituru-phas-sa, Okmatsisa, Oreobazagra, Pertaomekh, (23) Peragomekh, Sakmeph, come in to me, and inquire for me about the inquiry which I am inquiring about, truthfully without (24) falsehood.' Its spirit-gathering: the ointment which you put on your eyes, when you are about to make any divination by the lamp. (25) You take some flowers of the Greek bean; you find them in the place of the lupin-seller; you take them fresh, (26) and put them into a lok of glass; you close its mouth very carefully for twenty days in a hidden dark place; after (27) twenty days you take it forth, you open it; then you find a pair (?) of testicles and a phallus inside it; you leave it for forty days; and you take it (28) forth; you open it; then you find that it has become bloody; you must put it into some thing of glass, and you put the glass thing into a pottery (thing) (29) in a place hidden at all times. When you wish to make a divination (?) by the lamp with it, you fill your eyes with this blood aforesaid, you proceed to lie down, (30) or you stand opposite the lamp; you recite this invocation aforesaid; then you see the god behind (?) you, while you are standing up or lying down. Excellent (bis) and tried (?). (31) You write this name on the strip of the wick of the lamp in myrrh ink, 'Bakhukhsikhukh,' or, as says another book, 'Kimeithoro Phosse'; (32) this method which is written above is the method of the divination of Manebai. If you wish to do it (33) by inquiry of the lamp, this also is the form, it is also profitable for (?) the divination of Muribai. If you do it (34) by vessel-inquiry of the lamp, you fill the lamp aforesaid on a new brick; you make the boy stand upright (35) before the lamp, he having his face covered; you recite to his head, standing over him, this Greek invocation; when you have finished, you uncover (36) his face, then he answers you truthfully.

Its spirit-gathering: you go to a clean place, you take a vessel of bronze, you wash it with water of natron, you put a lok-measure (5) of oil to it; you place it on the ground; you light a bronze lamp; you put it on the ground by the bronze vessel; (6) you cover yourself with a clean

Behold, another form of it again. You take the boy to an upper lofty (21) place, you make him stand in a place where there is a large window before him, its opening looking to the East where the sun shines (22) in rising into it; you paint the boy's eye with the paint which is prescribed for it, you recite to him times or seven times; you stand over him; you make him (23) gaze before the sun when it fills the uzat, he standing upright on a new brick, there being a new linen robe behind him (?), and his eyes being closed; (24) you recite down into his head; you strike on his head with your finger described above; you offer frankincense (?) before him; when you have finished, you make him open his eyes, (25) then he sees the gods behind him (?) speaking with him.

1. 5. σεληνογονον: the name given by προφήται to the παιονία (the modern paeonia) according to the synonyms in Diosc. iii. 147. The plant-names ascribed to the προφήται are naturally connected with deities, heavenly bodies and the like. SPRENGEL (Praefat., p. xvi) identifies the προφήται with those of Egypt, but this is perhaps too precise.
1. 9. The grammatical construction seems confused: one would expect εμωαγ or ετεμωαγ, Str., §§ 426, 427. The writer has given the form of the relative ετωωταει, but has inserted hr, which seems to be an anomaly.

(1) A remedy to cure water in a woman. The first remedy: salt and oil; pound; apply to the vulva(?) daily(?) two days.

(2) After the two days, the second remedy: white lead, you pound it with a little pigment from an oil-dealer (3) very carefully; you put true oil of fine quality to it, together with an egg and pound them; you take a strip (4) of linen cloth which is fine-spun(?); you dip it in this medicament. She must bathe in the bath, she must (5) wash in good wine; you put the medicated strip on her; you draw(?) it in (and) (6) out of her vulva for a short time, like the phallus of a man, until the medicament (7) spreads(?); you remove it, you leave her till evening; when evening comes, you dip a bandage(?) in genuine honey, (8) you put it on her until morning, for three, otherwise said four, days.

VERSO COL. VII.

(1) Another to follow it: juice of a cucumber which has been rubbed down, one ladleful(?), water of the ears of a khe-animal, one ladleful(?) like the ladle (2) of a (wine-) cup; you add a uteh-measure of good wine to them; and she drinks it at midday, before she has (3) eaten anything whatever, after bathing in the bath, which she has done before; when evening comes, you put the rag(?) (4) with honey on her as above for seven days.

l. 5. nḥe n qwpre = ἔλαιον κύπρινον, Diosc. i. 65; PLIN., H. N., 12. 51; 13. 1, 2; 23. 46, made from the seeds or leaves of ἡ κύπρος, ἄουνηρ, KIRCHER, p. 179, Lawsonia inermis, the henna of the Arabs. The red dye made from the leaves is now the commonest cosmetic in the East, but was perhaps little known anciently. The oil frequently occurs in prescriptions in ALEX. TRALL.

l. 7. sym n gyz: lit. 'hand-plant,' with gloss ΠΗΤΑΚΤΑΛΟΣ, which no doubt stands for πεντεδάκτυλος, Diosc. iv. 42 = πεντάφυλλον (potentilla). According to LENZ, p. 702, it is still called in Greece by both names. Cf. PARTHEY, Zauberpap., ii. 34. 40; Pap. bibl. nat. 287.

ll. 7-8. n p bl ny: a curious construction, if correct.

COL. IX.

l. 3. πεπτερεως for πεπέρεως, 'pepper' (REUVENS, Lettres, i. p. 50), cf.

Another to follow: you take a new dish; you put (5) ten uteh-measures of old sweet wine on it; you put a half kite of fresh rue on it from (6) dawn till midday; let her bathe in the bath, and come out and drink it. When it is evening (7) you put honey on her as above again for seven days.

VERSO COL. VIII.

(1) Gout. (2) You make the man sit down; you place clay under the feet of the man; (3) you put to it (?), his feet resting on it; you ask (4) the man, saying, 'Has it hearkened?' for three days. Thereafter you take an ant (?), (5) you cook it in oil of henna; you anoint his feet (6) with it. When you have finished, you take Alexandrian figs and dried grapes (7) and potentilla; you pound them with wine; you anoint him besides (?) (8) these; and you blow on him with your mouth.

l. 4. περηθου = πυρέθρου, apparently an umbellifer hot to the taste: cf. Diosc. iii. 78.

l. 5. αυταρχες = αδάρκης, Diosc. v. 136, a salt efflorescence on marsh plants. It is noteworthy that these four ingredients, spurge, pepper, πυρέθρου, and αδάρκης, are all found with many others in a prescription for gout given by ALEX. TRALL., lib. xi. p. 628.

l. 6. διοναπερον = θειον απυρον (REUVENS, Lettres, i. p. 50), native sulphur. For its use cf. Brit. Mus. Gr. Pap. CXXI. l. 168; ZOEGA, 626 ονη πατωμυα. The οναπερον of KIR. 203 = sulphur rubrum, is doubtless a corruption of the above.

1. 2. qbḥ: the reading of the first sign is doubtful. The determinative would lead one to expect ʾbḥ, 'tooth,' but it is difficult to read so. qbḥ would perhaps be κoḥg, 'tendo,' or it may be the name of some animal which is to be drowned.

COL. XX.

1. 1. yr·t(?), followed by det. or word-sign for evil, 'bad eye,' which might be either ophthalmia or 'evil-eye,' εἰεφθοονῆ. The prescription perhaps favours the former.

Then she comes at once.

VERSO COL. XX.

'[Ho ?] Amon, this lofty male, this male of Ethiopia, who came down (2) from Meroe to Egypt, he finds my son Horus be-taking himself as fast as his feet move (?), and he injured (?) him (3) in his head with three spells in Ethiopian language, and he finds N. son of N. and carries him as fast as his feet move (?), (4) and injures his head with three spells in Ethiopian language : Gentini, Tentina, (5) Kwkwby, [Ak]khe, Akha.' (6) (Say it) to a little oil : add salt and nasturtium seed to it, you anoint the man who has ophthalmia (?) with it. (7) You also write this on a new papyrus ; you make it into a written amulet on his body :—' Thou art this eye of heaven' in the writings (followed by an eye with rays, as drawn in the papyrus).

The spell seems very corrupt, but some sense may be made of it by supplying e-f before gm.

GOETHE, Faust I, ll. 570–73

Preface

The Preface to Albrecht Dieterich's Eine Mithrasliturgie is dated Heidelberg, May 2, 1903. The present commentary appearing a century later is deeply indebted to this ground breaking work which has remained in print through several re-editions with updated notes. Dieterich's main achievement was to elevate a seemingly obscure papyrus text to one of the most important original documents reflecting an insider's perspective of Graeco-Egyptian religion in the late Hellenistic period. Dieterich's work, however, has remained unfinished and his achievements have been recognized only partly. Responding to the challenge of carrying further Dieterich's investigations in the light of new evidence, and making the text and its interpretation accessible to an English-speaking readership has been the aim of the present writer.

Interest and encouragement by many colleagues and students in several countries helped speed up the completion of the commentary. Special acknowledgements are due to the participants of seminars at Claremont, Chicago, Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, and annual meetings of the Society of Biblical Literature. It is simply impossible to sort out the generous contributions made by so many colleagues and students who attended seminars and lectures over a good number of years.

Several persons, however, should be named. Thanks are due to Walter Burkert and David Martinez for reading and commenting on the completed manuscript. David Martinez and David Jordan, both experienced papyrologists, examined the new photographs of the papyrus and permitted me to include their readings. Specific contributions were made by Christopher Faraone, Fritz Graf, Sarah I. Johnston, Matthew Dickie, Cristiano Grottanelli, and Ithamar Gruenwald. Substantial assistance was rendered by graduate students, among them Thomas Dusa for suggesting egyptological references; Janet Spittler and Matthew R. Calhoun for their checking of the manuscript; and the latter also for compiling the Greek word index.

Wherever needed, institutions provided support of various kinds. Thanks are due to Deans Clark Gilpin and Richard Rosengarten of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago for continuous support, the administrations of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, the Sackler Institute for Advanced Study at Tel Aviv University, and the Institute for Advanced Study at the Hebrew University for generous fellowships; the Universitätsbibliothek in Bonn for the permission to quote from the unpublished correspondence of Albrecht Dieterich and Hermann Usener; and the Bibliothèque nationale de France in Paris for permission to publish the photographic plates of the text.

Last but not least, I am exceedingly grateful to Georg Siebeck, my publisher, for making it possible that such a specialized study can see the light of day; to the editors of the series "Studies and Texts in Antiquity and Christianity" for accepting the volume; and to the team of Mohr Siebeck, especially Henning Ziebritzki and Matthias Spitzner, for their pleasant and efficient cooperation.

Introduction

I. The "Mithras Liturgy": A Provocative Title

The title of the present book is borrowed from Albrecht Dieterich's Eine Mithrasliturgie, which calls for explanation. The title announces two basic assumptions. First of all, the approach to the text is indirectly through Dieterich's commentary. Secondly, we thus recognize that it was Dieterich who, after considerable preparatory work had been done, decided to call the segment of text taken from the long magical papyrus of Paris (Bibliothèque Nationale, Suppl. grec 574) by the name Eine Mithrasliturgie.¹ He intended this title to be provocative, a fact proved subsequently by the reception of the book. The provocation turned out to be greater than Dieterich had anticipated.

Dieterich realized that a different descriptive title is found in the text itself, so he made that title, ΑΠΛΘΑΝΑΤΙΣΜΟΣ ([Ritual of] Immortalization),² the subtitle of his work (p. XI), followed by Text und Übersetzung der Mithrasliturgie ("Text and Translation of the Mithras Liturgy"). After publication, the provocative title "Mithras Liturgy" (which of course does not occur in the papyrus itself) became a kind of trigger to evoke controversies going straight to the heart and substance of classical scholarship.

Moreover, Dieterich dedicated his book to Franz Cumont (1868–1947), the famous Belgian scholar on Mithraism,³ whom he greatly admired but whose fundamental theories about Mithras he wished to challenge.⁴ Instead of Cumont's attribution of the text to an Egyptian magician engaged with Hermeticism, Dieterich's proposed to take the text's reference to Mithras seriously and to interpret it in the context of syncretistic forms of Mithraism.⁵ Cumont's basic objections are the following:

"Among the learned researches which we cannot enumerate here, the most important is that of Albrecht Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie, 1903. He has endeavored with some ingenuity to show that a mystical passage inserted in a magical papyrus preserved at Paris is in reality a fragment of a Mithraic liturgy, but here I share the skepticism of Reitzenstein (Neue Jahrb. f. das class. Altertum, 1904, p. 192) and I have given my reasons in Rev. de l'instr. publ. en Belg., XLVII, 1904, pp. 1ff. Dieterich answered briefly in Archiv f. Religionswiss. VIII, 1905, p. 502, but without convincing me. The author of the passage in question may have been more or less accurate in giving his god the external appearance of Mithra, but he certainly did not know the eschatology of the Persian mysteries. We know, for instance, through positive testimony that they taught the dogma of the passage of the soul through the seven planetary spheres, and that Mithra acted as a guide to his votaries in their ascension to the realm of the blessed. Neither the former nor the latter doctrine, however, is found in the fantastic uranography of the magician. The name of Mithra, as elsewhere that of the magi Zoroaster and Hostanes, helped to circulate an Egyptian forgery"⁶

Cumont based his views regarding Mithraism on the evidence of inscriptions and literary texts, which, as he correctly pointed out, contained nothing comparable to Dieterich's Mithras Liturgy.⁷ He did not take the name Mithras that occurs in the text seriously, but attributed it to the stereotypical cleverness with which Egyptian magicians dressed up their forgeries. Dieterich's other suggestion, according to which the text contained a "liturgy," was equally unacceptable to Cumont. Besides the problem of defining the term "liturgy," Cumont found it utterly incredible that an Egyptian magician should have had access to a Mithraic liturgy; such an esoteric text, had it existed, would have been highly secret, but no trace of it has survived. These objections are, however, speculative in view of the fact that the Paris Magical Papyrus is meant to be just such an esoteric text.

While these issues will have to be discussed further in the present commentary, it should be understood that Dieterich had walked into another highly contentious territory, that of the methodological debate between the two most influential schools of classical scholarship at the time, the schools of Hermann Usener (1834–1905) in Bonn⁸ and Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff in Berlin (1848–1931).⁹ Dieterich represented the methodological approaches developed by Usener, his father-in-law and close collaborator. In Berlin, Wilamowitz-Moellendorff was deeply divided about the Usener school's extension of classical scholarship into the areas of popular religion ("Volksreligion"), folklore ("Volkskunde"), superstition ("Aberglaube"), and magic. On the one hand, Wilamowitz confirmed that the study of antiquity must include all of antiquity;¹⁰ on the other hand, he sensed the danger that classical philology could be neglecting the great Hellenic tradition by bogging down in what he contemptuously named "Botokudenphilologie."¹¹ Although he respected Usener, he saw in Dieterich's scholarship a tendency toward disintegration of the discipline of classical philology.¹² As a result, Wilamowitz and

¹¹ Reported by Pfister, "Albrecht Dieterichs Wirken," 183.

¹² Dieterich made known his future plans that seem to confirm Wilamowitz's suspicions: a multi-volume work, entitled Volksreligion: Versuche über die Grundformen religiösen Denkens. In Part IV he wished to treat the subject of "Formen der Vereinigung des Menschen mit Gott," and in it he planned to complete the commentary work on the second part of the Mithras Liturgy. Only Part I was published: Mutter Erde: Ein Versuch über Volksreligion (Leipzig & Berlin: Teubner, 1905). See Richard Wünsch, "Albrecht Dieterich," in Dieterich, Kleine Schriften, ix–xlii, esp. xxx, xxxvi; Pfister, "Albrecht Dieterichs Wirken," 182–83.

his school consistently treated Dieterich's work as marginal. The deeper reason, to be sure, had to do not so much with differences in philological method but with deeper competing conceptions of what constitutes the discipline of "classical philology."¹³

Dieterich was aware of the kind of risks he was taking. As correspondence with Usener reveals, he discussed matters beforehand with him, in particular the title of the book.¹⁴ He also gave lectures about his work before publication; he mentions his previous lectures on the Mithras Liturgy in the Preface. Thanking his friends Siegfried Sudhaus, Paul Wendland, and Richard Wünsch for their suggestions and warnings means that he shared manuscripts and galley-proofs with friends. Therefore, whatever the risks were, he took them knowingly and courageously, although he may have got more than he had bargained for.

Although even present-day scholars repeat Cumont's rejection of the title and the major hypothesis of Dieterich's book,¹⁵ these responses did not diminish the continuous stimulation exerted by it. The ongoing role Dieterich's book played in scholarship has been documented by the editors in the successive editions. From early on, scholars distinguished between Dieterich's provocative claim that the Mithras Liturgy actually came from the liturgy of the cult of Mithras and the plethora of materials and suggestive ideas assembled in the book. In his authoritative work, Geschichte der griechischen Religion (vol. 2, 1961), Martin P. Nilsson summed up the common view about Dieterich's book in this way. Regarding the main thesis, he says that "it should now be given up." Yet, "The significance of Dieterich's book does not depend on this thesis, but on the more general ideas he presented, which in many ways have since become standard."¹⁶ This evaluation, however, requires revision in the light of more recent research in the areas of hellenistic syncretism in Graeco-Egypt and in Mithraism. The two implications of Dieterich's title, therefore, still demand explanation: the appearance of the name of Mithras and the "liturgical" nature of the text.

¹³ See the studies included in Wilamowitz nach 50 Jahren (eds. William Calder III, Hellmut Flashar, Theodor Lindken; Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1985), esp. 280–84.

¹⁴ In his letter to Usener, dated May 3, 1901, he brings up the "Mithrasweihe" and raises the question of the title in a letter of October 29, 1901; replying to Usener's suggestions (non-extant) in the letter of December 8, 1901, he decides on "Eine Mithrasliturgie": "ἀπαθανατισμός hatte ich zuvorgesetzt, weil in dem Papyrus nachher diese Partie so genannt wird in einer Stelle, die ich noch anhangsweise herausgebe: es schien mir die Bezeichnung zu sein, die diese Leute für den Kultakt wirklich brauchten; der Zusatz sollte nur eben die Zugehörigkeit zum Mithraskult [sic] gleich vorn hervorheben. Ich ändere das. Würdest Du 'Mithrasliturgie' oder 'Mithrasweihe' auf die Seite drucken? Ich muß auch, da an einer Abbildung für den Titel (eben der Rindschulterszene) probiert wird, die Worte des Titels formulieren. Würde Dir gefallen: EINE MITHRASLITURGIE – Text Übersetzung Einleitung von ... oder die Mittelreihe weglassen? Die Fragen haben aber gar keine Eile!" Quoted with permission from the Nachlaß of Usener and Dieterich in the University Library in Bonn (Signature: S 2102.2).

The present assessment of Dieterich's work has been well stated by Walter Burkert: "The interest in magical papyri for the history of religion was initiated by Albrecht Dieterich in his books Abraxas and Eine Mithrasliturgie, the success of which was lasting and well-deserved. Yet the thesis implied in the title Mithrasliturgie, that the fantastic voyage to heaven, as contained in this magical book, was enacted in the mysteries of Mithras, was criticized immediately and can hardly be maintained. The text describes a private trip in a quest for oracular revelations, not a communal mystery rite, with special elaborations on a syncretistic background. There remain puzzling problems in explaining this and similar texts."¹⁷ Indeed, this is the point where new investigations need to begin.

II. The Papyrus

1. Origin and Provenance

The text of the Mithras Liturgy consists of a segment of what scholars call the "Great Magical Papyrus of Paris," now housed in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris (Supplément grec #574, part of the Anastasi collection, #1073). According to Preisendanz,¹⁸ the name derives from its great length of 36 leaves containing 3274 lines, written on both sides and to be taken as the pages of a papyrus codex. Fol. 1 recto, 3 verso, 16 and 34 recto, and fol. 16 and 34 recto, verso are blank. The creator of the book had 18 double-leaves, which he folded in the middle like pages and on which he wrote from p. 2 recto onwards. Fol. 1 recto verso, together with fol. 36 recto verso, formed the book cover; the small Coptic piece in fol. 1 verso seems to have been written onto it as an addition.

¹⁶ Nilsson, GGR, 2.670, n. 2: "Diese These ... dürfte nunmehr aufgegeben sein.... Die Bedeutung des Dieterichschen Buches beruht nicht auf dieser These, sondern auf den von ihm vorgetragenen allgemeinen Gesichtspunkten, die vielfach maßgebend geworden sind...." For a more detailed discussion of Dieterich, see ibid., 286–93. Cf. also Arthur Darby Nock who follows Cumont and Reitzenstein in his article of 1929 ("Greek Magical Papyri," Essays, 1.176–94, esp. 192): "We are here in the sphere of individualist religion. And this, as Reitzenstein has observed, is the key to the understanding of the so-called Mithrasliturgie. That document is neither a liturgy nor, properly speaking, Mithraic. It is an ἀπαθανατισμός, directions how one shall make oneself immortal and pass through the heavens...."

The delimitation of the beginning and end of the Mithras Liturgy was made first by Dieterich on the basis of Wessely's edition. While Dieterich was right about the beginning, he remained undecided about its end. In his commentary, he divides the Mithras Liturgy into two parts, the ritual proper, called ἀπαθανατισμός, "Immortalization" (ll. 475–723), and the "Anweisung zu magischer Verwendung der Mithrasliturgie" ("Instruction for the magical application of the Mithras Liturgy," ll. 723–834). This division, however, is not based on a composition analysis and therefore creates more problems than it solves. While he includes the quotations from Homer at the end (ll. 821–34), he does not include those that stand before the beginning (ll. 467–74). More likely is that the Mithras Liturgy is, for whatever reason, sandwiched between the Homeric quotations. Moreover, his naming of the first part as "liturgy" ("Mithrasliturgie") and second part as "Anwendung" (Application) seems artificial, since he ignores the fact that both parts are "applications." Dieterich's reason follows from his assumption of a primary Mithraic source and its secondary magical application. The delimitation of the text segment, therefore, needs reconsideration in the light of a thoroughgoing compositional analysis.

a. Circumstances of Discovery

Regarding the origin and provenance of the papyrus book not much is known, and what little information we have seems to have come from the collector, Giovanni Anastasi (1780–1857).¹⁹ The man's original name may have been different, but he was known under the assumed name, written in Italian or French (Jean d'Anastasy). He was the son of an Armenian merchant from Damascus who had settled in Alexandria. This son became wealthy and gained the favor of the Pasha who appointed him in 1828 as Consul General in Egypt to the kingdoms of Norway and Sweden; he served in this capacity until his death. Besides business and politics, Mr. Anastasi enjoyed great success as an enthusiastic dilettant and collector of Egyptian antiquities. In the post-Napoleonic world a wave of interest in these antiquities developed on the part of European dealers, scholars, and museums. He was of course not the only collector, but the time was ripe for rich pickings. Most likely working through Egyptian agents, Anastasi was able to amass huge treasures, of which he sent several shipments to Europe for auctions in Paris and London. Among the materials were 60 papyrus manuscripts, one of which was the Great Magical Papyrus. At the widely publicized auction in Paris in 1857 this papyrus was acquired by the Bibliothèque Nationale (#1073), where it is until today.²⁰ As the printed auction catalogue reveals, little was known at the time about the content of the papyri, but all sources agree that they came from Thebes,²¹ probably because Anastasi had said so.²² However, there is no concrete evidence concerning the time, location and circumstances of the discovery. Because of the similarities between the pieces in the collection and the fact of their relatively good condition, it is conceivable indeed that all or most of them came from the library of a learned priest and magician that was placed with him in his grave, perhaps in a large box or terracotta vessel.²³

If the "great magical papyrus of Paris," and together with it the Mithras Liturgy, was indeed found in Thebes, it does not necessarily imply that the papyrus was also written there. The collection, serving a practicing magician as a "handbook," was compiled from many sources. These sources may have existed in Theban temple libraries, but they could just as well have been excerpted at other places in Egypt, which would presuppose that the author travelled, visited temple libraries, and shared materials with other magicians.

²³ This is Preisendanz' conclusion; see Karl Preisendanz, Papyrusfunde und Papyrusforschung (Leipzig: Hiersemann, 1933), 91–95: "Bibliothek der Zauberpapyri von Theben." Cf. also Fowden, The Egyptian Hermes, 166–68: "Temples and priests."

The Mithras Liturgy explicitly refers to such sharing of ritual texts among magicians. This assumption could mean either that the handbook was filled not at once but over a period of time, or that the sections were successively assembled before they were copied together into the handbook, or that the final copy resulted from a combination of both these activities.

About the "great magical papyrus" the catalogue has this to say: "Manuscript sur feuilles de papyrus pliées en livre, formant 33 feuillets écrits des deux côtés, à 60 lignes environ par page.... En tête sont trois pages de copte, qui débutant par l'histoire d'un fromage mystique pour la composition duquel s'associent Osiris, Sabaoth, Iao, Jésus et tous les autres éons. Ce fromage n'est autre que la gnose. — Ecriture du second siècle de notre ère."²⁴

Some general information about the milieu of these collectors can be gleaned from one of Anastasi's acquaintances, Giovanni d'Athanasī, commonly known as "Yanni," who was a resident for eighteen years at Thebes, engaged in hunting after objects of antiquity.²⁵ He was born on the island of Lemnos, and his father was a merchant in Cairo. At the suggestion of English travellers who met him in Thebes, where he worked as an interpreter to an English collector by the name of Henry Salt, he wrote up a personal account of his activities. This account was published in London in the year 1836, together with a catalogue of Mr. Salt's collection of antiquities.²⁶ D'Athanasī's own collection was auctioned off in London by Leigh Sotheby in 1837.²⁷ These collectors speak of the manuscript scrolls as having been found in terracotta urns in or near tombs.²⁸

Das war natürlich die ursprüngliche Form des Buches nicht; denn von "Büchern", die aus übereinandergelegten, unzusammenhängenden Blättern bestanden, wissen wir nichts. b. Date

The question of the date has been decided firmly on linguistic and palaeographical grounds by the Vienna papyrologist Carl Wessely (1860–1931), with whom all other papyrologists agree. They date the script to the early fourth century.²⁹ This, however, pertains to the written papyrus as extant: “Die Zeit Diokletians ist also terminus, ante quem das Papyrusbuch abgefaßt sein muß: auf alle Fälle ist die Liturgie in dieser Abschrift geschrieben zur Zeit hoher Blüte des Mithrasdienstes.”³⁰

As Dieterich indicates, this date applies to the extant script, but the text presupposes a longer process of development. The fact that the text shows evidence of the interpretation of older traditions means that these traditions have a prehistory of their own. Considering the complexities, Dieterich suggests that the development of the composition took more than 200 years, the origin occurring in the years 100–150, followed by the ritual function of the original text in the Egyptian Mithras cult (150–200), the subsequent adaptation and development by the magicians (200–300), and concluded by the inclusion of the final copy in the papyrus book.

Dieterich’s hypothesis is, however, beset with problems. (1) He does not distinguish clearly enough between scribe and author; (2) because he has no detailed compositional analysis on hand, he cannot clearly identify the author’s contributions in distinction from sources; (3) Dieterich’s own hypothetical assumption of an earlier stage as a Mithraic cultic text and subsequent adaptation by magicians determines how he sees the development, but does not conform to the textual evidence.

These problems, however, do not render Dieterich’s time frame invalid. It seems reasonable to estimate that it took about 200 years for the composition and its parts to come together. Internal criteria point to some older and some younger sources. Externally, the text is thoroughly Hellenistic-Egyptian – without any traces of Christian, Christian-gnostic, or Neoplatonic influences –, although traditions of Middle Stoicism are apparent, as is a certain closeness to Hermeticism.

³⁰ Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie, 44 (emphasized). Preisendanz (1.64) also refers to Wilhelm Schubart, Das Buch bei den Griechen und Römern (Berlin: Reimer, 1907; 3rd ed.: Heidelberg: Lambert Schneider, 1962), who points out that the papyrus codex came into use just about this time.

c. Authorship

The question of authorship is also complicated. What we see on the papyrus pages is the work of a scribe who copied the text from a Vorlage into the codex. Redactional references in the text itself indicate that we must, at least in principle, distinguish the scribe from the author.

The redactional comments, if taken seriously, imply that the scribe or author had available more than one version of the Vorlage.³¹ If the two were different persons, one of them had compared the versions and noted the textual variants; he would then be the author, while the scribe copied his autograph. If scribe and author were the same person, the final text is the author's own autograph that included all the insertions and supplements. Things get more complicated by the facts that the author's work is a highly developed redactional composition involving his own contributions, older sources adopted and adapted from tradition, and supplements added at various stages of the composition by subsequent copyists. Therefore, while source materials excerpted from other contexts had their own authors before inclusion in the final copy, that final copy has only one author and redactor; there is no evidence of multiple authorship at the final level.

While the final author remains anonymous, he speaks in the first person throughout. Even when he identifies himself by names in passages we call "self-presentations," he leaves the place vacant by using the symbol Δ or magical names. As one might expect, he was an expert in the handling of magical materials. What is surprising, however, is his expertise as a literary scholar and writer.³² He has carefully examined other versions of the text and has noted textual variants: ἐν ἄλλῳ (l. 500) and φωτὸς κτίστα, οἱ δὲ συνκλεῖστα (l. 591).³³ He inserts a marginal comment (ll. 478–81) and cross-references to the supplements, and he corrects his own earlier practice (ll. 791–98).³⁴ He adds learned theological commentary with explanations of traditions (e.g., ll. 495–98, 529–32), or library research and consultation of herbalist sources for information on the plant kenritis (ll. 798–813). Finally, he begins his work with a fine literary preface (ll. 475–85), and he adds supplementary information before he ends with a note indicating completion (ll. 819–20).

³⁴ David Jordan's evaluation confirms this (letter of December 17, 2002): "Palaeographically, the papyrus is more interesting than I had thought. The scribe is clearly conscious of what he is doing: he leaves spaces within the line to mark punctuation and sometimes even to distinguish words. And there are several previously unnoticed lectional signs over some of the clusters of vowels." See below on ll. 610–17.

2. Editions

The first edition of the Paris Papyri was published by Wessely in 1888, based on his collation made in Paris in August of 1883;³⁵ in 1888 he checked the papyrus again and published his corrections in 1889.³⁶ All subsequent editions depend on Wessely, although several papyrologists examined the papyri and proposed different readings: Wilhelm Kroll,³⁷ N. Novossadsky,³⁸ Karl Preisendanz,³⁹ Richard Ganszyniec,⁴⁰ and others.⁴¹

In his own commentary Eine Mithrasliturgie of 1903, Dieterich relied on Kroll's collations and on the photographic plates, supplemented by other evidence.⁴² This supplementary material was added in appendices to the second edition (1910) by Richard Wunsch, and the third edition (1923) by Otto Weinreich. These editors, however, did not change Dieterich's text.⁴³ In Dieterich's book, the Greek text, with apparatus and notes, includes PGM IV. 475–834, but his German translation ends at l. 723, because he did not regard ll. 723–834 as belonging to the original Mithras Liturgy. Greek text and notes, however, continue until the end.⁴⁴ Although he paid careful attention to the textual evidence, he himself was more interested in the religio-historical interpretation which comprises the main body of his book.

The edition of the Papyri graecae magicae, edited and published in 1928 by Karl Preisendanz (1883–1968), placed the Paris magical papyrus in the first volume. It includes the "Große Pariser Zauberpapyrus (P IV)," and as part of it the Mithras Liturgy.⁴⁵ Preisendanz uses the text of Wessely, modified according to the carefully noted suggestions made by earlier scholars, foremost among them Dieterich.⁴⁶ In addition, Preisendanz made use of photographic plates which Dieterich had procured and which his widow, Marie Dieterich, had made available to him.⁴⁷ One should realize that the edition was intended merely as a study edition, paving the way for a standard critical edition which has not yet materialized.⁴⁸ The second edition of Preisendanz prepared by Albert Henrichs was intended as an improved republication.⁴⁹

Other study editions have been published more recently. Marvin W. Meyer contributed a fascicle entitled The "Mithras Liturgy," which contains the text of Preisendanz and an English translation.⁵⁰ Moreover, a study edition was published in 1992 by Reinhold Merkelbach in the third of his four-volume collec-

They were used also by Albert Henrichs for the new Preisendanz edition of 1973 (1.12). Unfortunately, as Professor Ludwig Koenen reported, they were subsequently lost in the mail on the way to Ann Arbor, Michigan.

⁴⁹ As Henrichs explains (1.XIII), his contributions consist of the inclusion of supplementary notes by Preisendanz and his own textual emendations (Zweite, verbesserte Auflage mit Ergänzungen von Karl Preisendanz, durchgesehen und herausgegeben von Albert Henrichs [2 vols.; Stuttgart: Teubner, 1973, 1974]). For his work Henrichs was able to use Preisendanz's Nachlaß in Heidelberg. Preisendanz's vol. 3 was not published because the printing plates were destroyed when the Teubner publishing house in Leipzig was bombed on December 4, 1943. Fortunately, a set of the galley-proofs was saved, photocopies of which have circulated among scholars. Preisendanz explains the contents in the Vorrede to vol. 3 (printed in the new edition, 2.VII–XVII). The new edition of vol. 2 includes those texts that were to be part of vol. 3, and also the reconstructed Hymns according to a new reconstruction by Ernst Heitsch. See Henrichs's Vorwort zur Neuausgabe, 1.XIII; also Betz, GMPT, xlv. Partial texts, translations, and textual notes were contributed by Wilhelm Kroll,⁵³ Ernst Riess,⁵⁴ Ludwig Radermacher,⁵⁵ Wilhelm Crönert,⁵⁶ Sam Eitrem,⁵⁷ Theodor Hopfner,⁵⁸ Richard Reitzenstein,⁵⁹ Friedrich Zucker,⁶⁰ and André-Jean Festugière.⁶¹ Somewhat idiosyncratic is the early translation and gnostic interpretation, based on his own readings of the Greek text, by Wolfgang Schultz.⁶² Finally, an anonymous work, published in 1995 by a prestigious publishing house, presents a French translation of the Mithras Liturgy.⁶³

III. Albrecht Dieterich (1866–1908): Life and Scholarship

Albrecht Dieterich's personal life was from the beginning destined to be that of a scholar.⁶⁴ He was born into a family of teachers and theologians on May 2, 1866 in Hersfeld (Hessen), where his father was a teacher at the local Gymnasium and married to Henriette Münscher, the daughter of the director who in turn was the son of a theology professor in Marburg. The oldest son, Albrecht, grew up in a home of liberal Protestant parents who were open to the delights of culture and the arts. Careful guidance by his father led to the baccalaureate (1884) and the beginning of his university studies in Leipzig. Having first taken up theology, he was soon drawn toward philosophy of religion and German literature, but then he turned toward classical philology (represented by Ernst Curtius, Otto Crusius, Justus Hermann Lipsius, Otto Ribbeck, and Rudolf Hirzel). In 1886 Dieterich went to Bonn, where the first lecture by Hermann Usener convinced him like by a strike of lightning that classical philology was to be his future: "Here lie the great problems, to which you must dedicate your life."⁶⁵ His main teachers were Franz Bücheler and Hermann Usener, but he also studied classical archaeology and art with Reinhard Kekulé von Stradonitz. What mostly interested him was the way Usener combined classical philology and history of religions, for instance in his book Das Weihnachtsfest.⁶⁶ Rather than letting him drift into "the great problems," however, his teachers trained him to prove himself as a philologist of the classical literature. Usener advised him to write a "Preisarbeit" (an essay competing for a prize) on Aeschylus, and after that Bücheler assigned to him the task of working up textual and commentary annotations to Papyrus Leiden J 384, published by Conrad Leemans in 1885.⁶⁷ Having won the two prizes, Dieterich expanded the second essay into his doctoral dissertation of 1888,⁶⁸ which ventures to explore on a purely

For Dieterich's continued influence see the essay by Friedrich Pfister, written in memory of the 30th anniversary of Dieterich's death, "Albrecht Dieterichs Wirken in der Religionswissenschaft: Zu seinem 30. philological level the yet mostly unknown magical literature of Hellenistic Egypt.⁶⁹ The Leiden Papyri J 384 and J 395 became PGM XII and XIII in the collection of Preisendanz;⁷⁰ they were again investigated by the papyrologist Robert W. Daniel who published them together with photographs in 1991.⁷¹

After he passed the state examination in 1889 and completed the required year of teaching as an intern in a Gymnasium, he left teaching in a secondary school, although he liked it and returned to it much later. Instead he went back to the Leiden Papyri for his Habilitationsschrift, now on J 395. However, warned by the fact that the magical papyri, usually relegated to the area of magic and superstition, were generally not accepted as qualification for a chair in Classics, Dieterich selected the Orphic Hymns as topic. Especially because of the work of Gottfried Hermann, these hymns had come to be recognized as cultic poetry, but they also provided a way to show the link between “higher literature” and the magical papyri. After his Habilitation 1891 at Marburg,⁷² he could use the other research material for his next work, an extensive commentary on J 395, which was published in the same year.⁷³ The work has two major parts. Part I deals with the text and religio-historical interpretation of J 395, focusing on the so-called “cosmopoiia of Leiden.” Importantly, he identifies it as a syncretistic text containing elements from ancient Egyptian religion, astrological mysticism, Greek religion and Stoicism. Part II focuses on the “Eighth Book of Moses” and explores the literary environment of “Jewish-Orphic-Gnostic” cults and the magical literature. Highly suggestive, this work raises a host of new questions and provides impetus for further investigations. The work was presented to Usener at the celebration of his 25th anniversary as a professor in Bonn. Indeed, it is an exemplary fruit of the close cooperation between Dieterich and Usener, whose daughter Marie he married in 1898. It is interesting, however, that Dieterich spent several weeks at Göttingen, in order to meet the great philologists representing a competing approach to classical studies: Carl Dilthey, Friedrich Leo, and especially Ulrich von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, whose edition and commentary of *Euripides, Herakles*⁷⁴ had greatly impressed Dieterich.

In his teaching as a Privatdozent in Marburg⁷⁵ Dieterich treated a wide range of subjects pertaining to Greek language and literature, but he also lectured on Greek mythology and history of religion, going as far as the decline of ancient religions and the rise of Christianity. These explorations came to the fore in his next book dealing with the discovery of what became known as the Apocalypse of Peter.⁷⁶ This fragmentary parchment codex was discovered in a tomb at Akhmim. While Christian in provenance, it also draws together sources from Jewish and Greek traditions about the netherworld.⁷⁷ Besides a critical examination of the text and a German translation, Dieterich's work has three major chapters, the first of which outlines what he terms "Greek folk-religion concerning the realm of the dead" ("Griechischer Volksglaube vom Totenreich"); the second chapter on "Mystery cult teachings concerning blessedness and condemnation" ("Mysterienlehren über Seligkeit und Unseligkeit") demonstrates how old elements of folkreligion emerge in official literature and religion; the third chapter deals with "Orphic-Pythagorean Books on Hades" ("Orphisch-pythagoreische Hadesbücher"). Understandably, these topics quickly became controversial, but through the debates they also began profoundly to change scholars' perception of the field. From a present perspective, it is impressive to see how many of Dieterich's suggestive and provocative ideas have later been confirmed or at least gained in probability. New discoveries of texts and archaeological remains such as the Orphic-Dionysiac gold tablets and the Derveni Papyrus⁸³ have moved classical studies in directions that would have delighted him. The most impressive symbol of Dieterich's continuing influence was the collaboration of many scholars in producing the collection of the Greek Magical Papyri. Like many other projects, Dieterich had originally suggested this work,⁸⁴ and its main editor, Karl Preisendanz who was one of Dieterich's former students dedicated it to his memory.

To continue with Dieterich's life, in March of 1894 he set out on his long desired grand tour to Greece and Italy. By the middle of the 19th century, travelling to the historical sites and monuments had become much easier than it had been for previous generations, but they were still far from what modern tourists tend to take for granted. Dieterich travelled to Trieste, where a boat took him to Korfu, and from there through the Corinthian Gulf to Athens. In and around Athens he benefitted from resident scholars like Wilhelm Dörpfeld and Paul Wolters at the German Archaeological Institute. He took advantage of the Institute's guided tours to the Peloponnesos, visiting Corinth, the Argolis, Arcadia, and Olympia. Riding on a mule toward Olympia, he unfortunately hit against a branch of a tree, which threw him down onto the stony road where he lay unconscious. His travel companions were terrified and suspected internal or head wounds. Dieterich himself lost hope that he would survive, but after he was transported to Olympia he recovered sufficiently and could continue on the journey. Another boat trip took him to Delos, where he was received and shown around by Théophile Homolle. At the end of May, Dieterich travelled to Smyrna and from there to Pergamon, Sardes, Ephesus, and Magnesia. In Troja he met again with Dörpfeld during one of the excavation seasons; in Constantinople he admired such treasures as the Alexander Sarcophagus and the colorful life of the Bazaars. From Constantinople he travelled to Naples, visited Pompei guided by August Mau. Then he headed south to Sicily. In Palermo his search for ancient manuscripts was rewarded by the discovery of the Apokalypse of Anastasia, which he entrusted for an edition to his friend Rudolf Homburg.⁸⁵

The month of September saw Dieterich in Rome, whose immense treasures and rich life overwhelmed him. The scholars at the German Archaeological Institute, Eugen Petersen and Christian Hülsen, as well as August Mau and Wilhelm Helbig made sure he fully enjoyed his Roman days. After Rome and a visit to Tuscany he returned to Marburg in the spring of 1895, completing an enormously enriching tour that was not to be his last.

After his appointment to "außerordentlicher professor" (associate professor) at Marburg in the summer semester of 1895 his academic responsibilities changed and increased. His next publications reflected findings and impressions in Italy. His edition of and commentary on the mysterious inscription of Aberkios in the Lateran Museum brought into discussion this fragment of a third century CE tomb inscription by a Phrygian bishop. He showed that this inscription provides evidence of pagan and Christian syncretism in Asia Minor.⁸⁶ His studies of the Pompeian wall paintings and the comic figure of Pulcinella were helpful for understanding the important role of cult paintings, although they generated severe criticism by leading scholars, in particular Wilamowitz-Moellendorff.⁸⁷ Those who knew him well could not but notice his anger and disappointment, so much so that he took the unusual step of responding firmly to these critics in the introduction to his next book, Eine Mithrasliturgie. Anticipating further hostile reactions, he made the point that he understood very well how to separate valid criticism from personal insult.⁸⁸

In 1897 Dieterich accepted a call to the University of Gießen, where he became a professor ordinarius and the successor of Eduard Schwartz. The fact that Gießen had only two classicists meant that his lectures had to appeal to a wider audience of students, but he enjoyed having a great deal of freedom in developing lecture courses. Also, he was supplied with a new but still rare slide projector ("Lichtbilderapparat") that enabled him to show photographic pictures during lectures. During his years in Gießen he also moved closer to the developing field of ethnography and folklore ("Volkskunde"), especially of his home province of Hessen. He became involved in the "Hessische Vereinigung für Volkskunde" and published articles in the "Hessische Blätter für Volkskunde." These fields of scholarship, however, were not as far removed from classical studies as it seemed at the time. On the contrary, other scholars had also recognized the value of folklore in bringing classics out of its cultural isolation by showing its connection with the social context of what people considered to be their own culture. However, Dieterich understood that the contextual interpretation of ancient religion would require long-term commitments by others as well. He laid the groundwork by training an amazing number of creative students and by helping to establish two publishing ventures, the journal *Archiv für Religionswissenschaft*⁸⁹ and the monograph series Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten (1903–), in which many of the dissertations written under him appeared. Moreover, it is noteworthy that about the same time the field of New Testament studies changed in similar ways, indicated by the creation in 1900 of the Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft und die Kunde der älteren Kirche. Expressing his long-standing interest in the origins of Christianity, he even published an article in the first volume of the new journal.⁹⁰

Dieterich's interest in the religion of Mithras originated with Cumont's monumental work. Two important articles appeared in 1902 that express Dieterich's new interest. The article "Die Weisen aus dem Morgenlande"

Denn ich weiß den Tadel, der erzieht und fördert, sehr wohl von dem zu unterscheiden, der beleidigt und im innersten verletzt."

⁸⁹ The journal ARW began in 1898; its founder was Thomas Achelis. From volume 7 (1904) onwards, Dieterich served as co-editor.

connects the legend of the Magi from the East paying homage to the child Jesus with the visit of the Parthian king Tiridates to Rome in 66 CE, where he worshiped Nero ὡς καὶ τὸν Μίθραν (Cassius Dio 63.1–7); he suggests that the three Magi are priests of the Mithras religion.⁹¹ A later article on “Die Religion des Mithras” sums up his admiration for Cumont’s work,⁹² but he differed from Cumont for the first time in seeing in a section of the Paris Magical Papyrus a remnant of a Mithraic ritual. This suggestion then led to the main thesis of his book of 1903 (Eine Mithrasliturgie); in an appendix of this book he collected other remnants of liturgical fragments, a collection that is still valuable today.⁹³

The work contains two major parts: first, a critical edition of the Greek text (PGM IV.475–834) and a German translation which, however, stops after what Dieterich took to be the end of the Mithras Liturgy proper (μυστήριον, l. 723). As we mentioned above, he regarded the following section (ll. 723–834) as “directions for the magical application of the Mithras Liturgy” (Anweisung zu magischer Verwendung der Mithrasliturgie). He thus separated the non-magical Mithraic liturgy from its secondary reworking as a magical ritual. This division derives from his thesis of the section’s origin as a ritual of the cult of Mithras and the other as its later appropriation by a magician. From our present perspective, however, such a division makes little sense. In fact, Dieterich himself seems to have changed his mind later because in his future project (see above, n. 12) he had planned to complete the translation. At any rate, the learned apparatus of the text continues to the end, even after the German translation was concluded. Second, a large section containing “Interpretations” (Erläuterungen), which include a brief Introduction (pp. 25–30) and topically arranged chapters (pp. 30–212). Chapter I deals with the “Origin and the Sources of the Papyrus Text” (Herkunft und Quellen des Papyrustextes, pp. 30–92). In fact, the chapter includes a step by step review of the entire text, richly documented by references and discussion. Chapter II (92–212) investigates “The Liturgical Images of the Mithras Liturgy” (Die liturgischen Bilder des Mithrasmysteriums) in five thematic studies, showing Dieterich’s systematic interests. After a discussion of the terms “liturgy,” μυστήριον, and sacramentum as effecting a cultic unification with the deity, the first study investigates the theme of “The Human Being in God and God in the Human Being; the Eating of the Deity” (Der Mensch in Gott und Gott im Menschen; das Essen des Gottes, pp. 95–121). The second study specifies more narrowly, “The

The fourth study is on "Rebirth" (Die Wiedergeburt, pp. 157–79), and the final, fifth on "The Soul's Ascension to Heaven" (Die Himmelfahrt der Seele zu Gott, pp. 179–212).

The appendix on "Remains of Ancient Liturgies" (Reste antiker Liturgien, pp. 213–18) has already been mentioned.⁹⁴ It is followed by rather confusing sets of additional notes in the second and third editions of Dieterich's work (Nachträge, pp. 219–58), including his own additions gathered from his papers by Richard Wunsch, Wunsch's additions, and Weinreich's additions. These additions provide corrections, references to ancient texts and secondary literature, as well as arguments against critical reviews. The volume concludes with valuable indices.

Understandably, the work was received with great anticipation. Apart from Cumont, several other reviewers took issue with the title of the book. Indeed, the reviews focused on the title to the extent that little else was discussed. However, several reviews took up the issues with profound seriousness because they understood that not only the title and text of the Mithras Liturgy but also the methodology of interpretation were at stake. The ensuing controversy shows admiration as well as substantial criticism. While Cumont's negative critique seemed to sway many in his direction, some important scholars came to Dieterich's defense. In fact, the debates of the next ten years coincided with the formation of the "Religionsgeschichtliche Schule." Moreover, his appointment at Heidelberg attracted a growing number of excellent students, so that his scholarly reputation, in spite of the negative reactions, was greatly enhanced by the debate. At least two reviews were substantial and are still worth reading.

In his book Geschichte der Paulinischen Forschung, Albert Schweitzer places Dieterich's work in the context of chapter VII, "Die religionsgeschichtliche Erklärung," in which he analyses critically the methodology of the early "Religionsgeschichtliche Schule."⁹⁵ His presentation of Dieterich's thesis and method is remarkably positive and to the point.⁹⁶ According to Schweitzer, Dieterich approaches the text "directly" as a "Mithras Liturgy,"⁹⁷ and thinks the prayers were to be recited in the course of the ascension, which carries the initiate out of this world of the four elements through the stars to the region of the gods. Guided by the sun god through the heaven of the fixed stars he reaches the supreme deity. The ancient initiates ritually performed this ascension in the Mithraic grottos. In fact, archeological findings could point to such scenarios. If the ritual was performed as a sacramental drama, the aim of the ascension to heaven was that the soul would attain immortality. The question remains whether this was the supreme mystery of this religion, which the devotees experienced only once, or whether it took its regular place in the cult.⁹⁸

The main points of Schweitzer's criticism concern Dieterich's methodology of comparing the Mithras Liturgy with the theology of Paul and John's Gospel, in order to explain the origins of their theologies as derivatives of mystery cults. In the course of that comparison Dieterich employs concepts such as "sacramental," "redeemer god," or "mystical union with the deity," which fit neither Paul's nor John's theology. In fact, Dieterich's apparent goal is to get beyond the individual texts and develop a conceptuality for all ancient religion. In order to document such a conceptuality, collecting as many parallels and analogies as possible seems necessary, but Dieterich himself warns against this kind of "Analogienwut."⁹⁹ Schweitzer's discussion reaches beyond Dieterich and is directed at the often unguarded assumptions of the early "Religionsgeschichtliche Schule." One must not forget, however, that in all this Schweitzer has also his own axe to grind.

Other substantial reviews came from Richard Reitzenstein who was more sympathetic to Dieterich than Schweitzer was;¹⁰⁰ a second review in 1912 also benefited from Schweitzer's of 1911. Reitzenstein agrees with Cumont that the Mithras Liturgy does not provide any information about the Mithras cult as Cumont conceived of it. The Mithras Liturgy "is not a liturgy in the narrower sense of the term, nor can it be used to reconstruct any kind of official Mithras religion; indeed, for Cumont's aims it is unusable and totally irrelevant. And yet, in Dieterich's hands and for his purposes the papyrus segment he calls 'Mithras Liturgy' has proven to be an immensely precious treasure."¹⁰¹ Reitzenstein, however, claims that Dieterich did not fully realize that we have here a religious document of large size, full of individual life and deep intensity, which simply does not conform to any religion known to us. In fact, "Cumont's way of looking at the evidence, justified as it is in and of itself..., cannot be the only one admissible, because it leaves out of consideration the numerous monuments of individual religious life that are extant from the period of syncretism."¹⁰² In other words, Dieterich did recognize the unique as well as syncretistic character of the Mithras Liturgy, but he did not make enough use of it in his defense against Cumont's view that there is only one kind of Mithraism. "Dieterich took over from his teacher Usener the great task of studying the formal language of religious thinking; he transposed it from the formation of the notion of deity or myth to the deepest ground of all religion, to the longing of humans for unification with the divine."¹⁰³

Today, because of the large increase in data, Mithraism has been shown to be a religion which experienced several reconfigurations in its history. As it spread over the Roman empire through the military and the administration, in particular in Rome, but also in Egypt, local adaptations were a normal phenomenon. Conceivably, Egyptian learned priests such as the author of the Mithras liturgy became devoted to Mithras, even while they served as priests in the Egyptian temples. The author's intense devotion to Mithras should not be denied its own integrity. That the author was a member of a Mithraic community is less likely, but he did have some valid information about the cult of Mithras. Given the syncretistic aura of Hellenistic Egypt, there was plenty of room in the Egyptian temples for Egyptian as well as Greek deities, so why not Mithras? If the priests were charged with developing the liturgies appropriate for worshipping so many other deities, why not for Mithras?

Therefore, contrary to the early criticisms, the book remained in discussion, evidenced by the two further editions of 1910 and 1923. Each time Dieterich's former students, Richard Wünsch (1869–1915) and Otto Weinreich (1886–1972), edited and expanded the notes while leaving the main text intact, until it was reprinted without change in 1966. Today, because of the newly developing interest in the phenomena and literature of magic as well as Mithraism, the book has moved from the margins into the mainstream of the increasing study of Hellenistic religious syncretism. The older positions, however, in modified forms still have present-day representatives.

Cumont's basic position is maintained emphatically by Reinhold Merkelbach and Robert Turcan. Merkelbach's commentary¹⁰⁴ is based on Dieterich's work, but he rejects Dieterich's title and proposes his own: "Die Pschai-Aion-Liturgie," which he groups together with the Leiden Papyrus (PGM XIII), calling them by various terms: "Weihezeremonien,"¹⁰⁵ "Einweihungszeremonien,"¹⁰⁶ or "Die Pariser Unsterblichkeits-Liturgie."¹⁰⁷ Thus, while retaining the term "liturgy," he simply equates it with "ceremony." Turcan continues Cumont's denial that the Mithras liturgy has anything to do with Mithraism; he sees it marginally related to theurgical Neoplatonism.¹⁰⁸

New developments, however, have arisen in recent years that fundamentally challenge both Merkelbach's and Turcan's position.¹⁰⁹ Discoveries of fresco paintings, mosaics, inscriptions, and other archaeological findings have increased the evidence pointing to syncretistic forms of Mithraism.¹¹⁰ Important in this respect is a newly discovered fresco painting from a mithraeum in Ponza (Italy), showing clearly Mithras' raising up of the shoulder of a bull which is mentioned also in the Mithras Liturgy as a ritual act of central importance.¹¹¹ As Dieterich mentioned in his letters to Usener (October 29 and December 8, 1901), it was this point that caused him to attribute the PGM text to Mithraism. As a result, there are many scholars today who insist that the Mithras Liturgy rightly carries the provocative name given it by Dieterich and that it should be attributed to syncretistic developments of Mithraic mysteries in Hellenistic Egypt. Therefore, today Cumont's criticism of Dieterich has become far less impressive than it first sounded and should not stand in the way of a positive assessment of the latter's accomplishments.¹¹²

To return to Dieterich's biography, the year 1903 brought another major event: the move to Heidelberg where he accepted the prestigious chair formerly occupied by Erwin Rohde and Otto Crusius. In Heidelberg, his activities shifted by necessity to lecturing, traveling as well as editorial and administrative tasks. One book appeared, on the subject of Mother Earth,¹¹³ but the ever increasing commitments that come with success and authority collided with the sudden death of Hermann Usener (October 1905) which hit him especially hard and disrupted his plans. He began working on a biography of Usener which he never completed. During a journey to Hamburg to lecture on "The End of Ancient Religion"¹¹⁴ he contracted influenza but refused to take time out for recovery. He had reached the peak of his career when on May 5 he went into the lecture hall to begin a new semester, but after the first few sentences he suddenly stumbled and collapsed because of a fatal stroke. He died without regaining consciousness on May 6, 1908.

As far as his legacy is concerned, his wife and his former students took the necessary steps to secure it. Marie Dieterich contributed his papers and research materials to the Usener-Archiv at the University Library in Bonn, where it still is today.¹¹⁵ His essays were collected in Kleine Schriften, published by Richard Wünsch.¹¹⁶ Dieterich's major books were reprinted after World War II by the Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft.

To sum up, Dieterich's "Mithras Liturgy" became known as a landmark of the "Religionsgeschichtliche Schule."¹¹⁷ His commentary demonstrated his five major discoveries: (1) that the text segment in question differs significantly from the other segments of the larger Paris Magical Papyrus; (2) that one must interpret this segment in the syncretistic context of the mystery cults of Hellenistic Egypt and beyond; (3) that the text is influenced by Stoic philosophy and is close to Hermeticism; (4) that this text involves a kind of “liturgy”; (5) that cultic images play a significant role in the procedures.¹¹⁸ As a result of new discoveries and more refined methodologies of interpretation, today these five discoveries can be far better appreciated than in Dieterich’s own days. Dieterich’s book thus in no way resembles an outdated experiment, but rather continues to stimulate the discussion about this fascinating text and the larger issues of the interpretation of ancient religion.

IV. Genre and Composition

1. Delimitation

As stated before, the section of the Paris Magical Papyrus we call Mithras Liturgy is sandwiched between a series of Homeric verses which have been interrupted by this insertion (ll. 468–74, 821–34).¹¹⁹ These Homeric verses have section titles designating their function as charms. The charm ll. 468–69 is called θυμοκάτοχον (“Charm to restrain anger”), followed by ll. 470–74, called Πρὸς φίλους (“To get friends”). After the conclusion of the Mithras Liturgy, ll. 821–24 contain four more lines of Homer verses without a separate section title, followed by a historiola, an untitled short story serving magical functions (ll. 825–29), and another Homeric verse (l. 830). At this point, l. 831 suprisingly repeats the θυμοκάτοχον of ll. 468–69, and the first Homer verse of the section (ll. 469–70), entitling it again Πρὸς φίλους (ll. 833–34). After this, the papyrus continues in ll. 835–49 with an untitled section on favorable and unfavorable times attributed to the Greek planetary deities.

¹¹⁹ So Dieterich, Mithrasliturgie, 20–21: “Es scheint, daß zwischen die Homerverse der große Wahrsagezauber eingeschoben ist, so daß vor und nach ihm noch deren gesprengte Stücke erscheinen.”

Since there are no detectable reasons for breaking up the sequence of Homeric verses and sandwiching the Mithras Liturgy between the parts, some kind of confusion on the part of the copyist must have occurred. The repetition of ll. 468–70, including the section titles, in ll. 831–34 must then also be the result of that confusion. Moreover, the θυμοκάτοχον of ll. 468–69 reappears not only in l. 831 but also at the end of the sequence in ll. 821–24, while the isolated Homer verse in l. 830 occurs previously at the end of the sequence ll. 469–74. The papyrus has paragraphos signs between the Homeric verses; after l. 820 there is a vacant space. By contrast, there seems to be no paragraphos sign before the beginning of the Mithras Liturgy; it does, however, begin with a new line (l. 475).

The following conclusions can be drawn from this evidence:¹²⁰ (1) The Mithras Liturgy is originally independent from the Homer verses, which are therefore not part of its internal composition.¹²¹ (2) For no detectable reason, the copyist interrupted the charms containing the Homeric verses, inserted the Mithras Liturgy in its entirety (ll. 475–820), and resumed the Homer charms afterwards (ll. 821–34). (3) The problem remains unresolved. Perhaps, the copyist became confused about what he had copied already and what he still had to do. However, no such confusion appears elsewhere in the papyrus.

2. The literary genre

a. External genre designations

Since there is no external designation of the literary genre of the Mithras Liturgy, the question of its genre requires a complex answer. Apparently, the Vorlage had no section title, and neither the author/redactor nor the copyist inserted one. Whereas the PGM corpus contains many spells without section titles, in most cases a section title can be supplied on the basis of parallels. The Mithras Liturgy has no parallel in the PGM or anywhere else from which an external title could be derived.

¹²⁰ See the explanations given by Hubert Martin and Marvin Meyer (Betz, GMPT, 47, 54); Martin also points to the parallel in PGM IV.2145–2240, which does carry a section title indicating function (Τρίστιχρος Ὁμήρου πάρεδρος, "Divine assistance from three Homeric verses." The three Homer verses in ll. 2145–51 correspond to ll. 471–73 and 821–23.

¹²¹ Differently, Dieterich (Mithrasliturgie, 20–21) regards ll. 821–34 to be a part of the Mithras Liturgy. He does not give a reason why he omits the Homer verses preceding the beginning (ll. 468–74). Merkelbach (Abraxas, 3.182, 249) follows Dieterich; Preisendanz (1.100–1 [apparatus]) reports on the problem as unresolved.

b. Internal genre designations

The text of the Mithras Liturgy uses several terms of literary self-reference. Most important is ἀπαθανατισμός, the name for “the ritual of immortalization.” This name, however, occurs only in the supplemental rituals of Part III (ll. 741, 747, 771), describing the function of the main body, Part II (ll. 485–732) as “becoming immortalized” (ἀπαθανατίζεσθαι [ll. 647–48]). There is no evidence, however, that this name at one time served as the head title and was omitted by the redaction.¹²²

The terms σύνταγμα (ll. 481–82) and ὑπόμνημα (l. 820) are technical, and both refer to the text as a whole. The term σύνταγμα points to the text as a “composition” out of subordinate parts; ὑπόμνημα (“memorandum”) comes from legal language and states the completion of the document which, as the insertion of ll. 479–82 leads us to conclude, was sent to a “daughter.”¹²³

Subsidiary parts are also marked by appropriate terms. Prayers are called λόγοι, beginning with “the invocational prayer” (ll. 485–537), τοῦ λόγου ἡδε ἡ κλησις (l. 486), also called πρῶτος λόγος (“first prayer” in ll. 741–42). Second (ὁ β΄ λόγος) and third (ὁ γ΄ λόγος) prayers are enumerated in ll. 577 and 587, but it is unclear how these three are to be related to the citations of the σιγή-logos (ll. 558–59, 573, 577–78, 623). A greeting prayer can be named in l. 638 ἀσπαστικός (λόγος?). The section title of διδασκαλία τῆς πράξεως (l. 750) points to “instruction pertaining to the ritual” as the purpose of the composition. These linguistic markers are important for the determination of the compositional parts. None of these terms, however, serves as the head title expressing the literary genre of the whole composition. In modern descriptive terminology we might label it a “Ritual to obtain an ascension and consultation with the god Mithras.”

3. Composition

In spite of its complexity, the literary composition of the Mithras Liturgy is clear and well executed. Considerable agreement exists in the scholarly literature about the separate sections. The contributions by Dieterich as well as Merkelbach represent significant steps, but so far a detailed literary analysis has not been undertaken.¹²⁴ Our own literary analysis¹²⁵ shows four distinguishable parts.

¹²² Cf. Merkelbach's suggestion (Abrasax, 3.249) that some portion at the beginning of the Vorlage may have been omitted.

¹²³ See the commentary on ll. 479–82 and 820.

Part I (ll. 475–85) contains a well-constructed exordium which takes the form of a prayer to the divinity of Providence and World-Soul. This prayer involves a petition for pardon in view of what is described as risky and potentially inappropriate transmission in writing of the secret tradition of mysteries to a fellow-initiate. Merkelbach calls the exordium “secondary,”¹²⁶ which he means not only in the literary sense that every introduction is secondary to whatever is being introduced, but also in the sense of replacement. He assumes that a text segment containing preparatory rituals, which need to be performed prior to the ascension ritual, has been excised and replaced by the present exordium. Merkelbach is certainly right about the necessity of preparatory rituals, especially because they are required for the magician and the fellow-initiate (ll. 733–36). Therefore, the fact that no such preparatory rituals are found at the beginning of the Mithras Liturgy needs to be explained. If such rituals appeared in the source material (Vorlage), the redactor may have excised them for several reasons: (1) The Paris Magical Papyrus (IV.26–51, 52–85) begins with preparatory rituals which may suffice for the following rituals. (2) The author presupposes that he and his addressee are already initiated (μύσται) and have thus learned to observe the preparations. (3) The author may regard the performance of the preparations as self-evident and adds only matters that are not self-evident (see, especially, the insertion of ll. 479–81).¹²⁷ (4) For the philosophically-minded author purification by the spirit, as it takes place in the ascension ritual itself, may have greater importance than the conventional purification rituals.¹²⁸

While separately or in combination any of these reasons could have caused the omission, no evidence exists for an excision of a text segment from the Vorlage which would have the present exordium as its replacement.

¹²⁵ See the Conspectus, below pp. 60–87; for detailed discussions, see the respective sections of the commentary.

¹²⁸ Terms designating purity are relatively infrequent in ML; see καθαρός l. 569; καθαρείως ll. 760, 771; ἁγιάζω 522; ἁγίασμα 522; ἅγιος ll. 522, 668–69; ἁγνέω l. 784. By contrast, the notion of “spirit” (πνεῦμα) in association with fire (πῦρ κτλ.) is central.

Part II (ll. 485–732) includes the main body of the ritual, which carries the name ἀπαθανατισμός (“ritual of immortalization”). This part subdivides into four subsections which deal with the major phases of the ritual. The subsections are partly prescriptive recitations, partly narrative descriptions of the ritual process.

Subsection A (ll. 485–537) sets forth for recitation a long, well-composed and highly complex prayer of invocation of the four elements which constitute the universe as well as the creation and recreation of the human body.

Subsection B (ll. 537–38) prescribes a breathing ritual for inhaling “spirit” (πνεῦμα) carried downwards by the rays of the sun.

Subsection C (ll. 539–44) provides religio-philosophical explanations of the concept of ascension through the spirit.

Subsection D (544–731) narrates in carefully described scenarios the seven stages of the ascension culminating at the seventh stage in an encounter with the god Mithras. Included in the narrative are prayers of invocation and greetings of the deities encountered as well as ritual acts to be performed at critical moments of the ascension. While the ascension takes place in the mind of the acting magician, it is both “realistic” in terms of the performance of ritual acts, and imaginary in terms of a journey through the seven spheres of the universe. Merkelbach considers the possibility that the “realism” would consist of a kind of theatrical production, including special effects. He points as evidence to Graeco-Roman authors who describe the use of “Sacred Theater” in a cultic context. “One may imagine a dark room, in which one corner is illuminated by a light reflecting the sun disk. The candidate stands on a pedestal that at some point can be lifted by ropes or by hydraulic machinery into the air.”¹²⁹ But of course one can also imagine that for a spirit-inspired Stoic machine-made “virtual reality” would be redundant.¹³⁰

- (1) First scenario (ll. 544–55): encounter with the planetary deities;
- (2) Second scenario (ll. 556–69): overcoming the threat by the planetary deities;
- (3) Third scenario (ll. 569–85): vision of the sun-disk;
- (4) Fourth scenario (ll. 585–628): vision of the opening of the doors to the world of the gods;
- (5) Fifth scenario (ll. 628–61): encounter with Helios;

¹³⁰ Ibid., 34: “Man kann sich auch vorstellen, daß dieses Podest gar nicht erforderlich war und daß der Initiand sich die Reise in die Luft nur meditierend suggerieren sollte.” See also ibid., 39.

- (6) Sixth scenario (ll. 661–92): encounter with the deities of the Bear constellations;
- (7) Seventh scenario (ll. 693–732): encounter with Mithras.

Part III (ll. 732–819) contains supplemental rituals. These rituals need to be performed in conjunction with the preceding formula, as indicated by cross-references. They include the following:

Subsection A (ll. 732–50) provides three optional rituals for including an associate:

- (1) Consultation by using a medium (ll. 732–35);
- (2) Consultation without a medium (ll. 736–38);
- (3) Consultation working with showing of symbols (ll. 738–46);
- (4) Additional stipulations (ll. 746–50).

Subsection B (ll. 750–819): contains additional instructions:

- (1) Two preparatory rituals (ll. 750–92):
 - (a) Preparation of the sun-scarab ointment (ll. 751–78);
 - (b) Preparation of the plant kentritis (ll. 778–92).
- (2) Three items of information (ll. 792–813):
 - (a) Change of the ritual of the ointment (ll. 792–96);
 - (b) Change of the ritual concerning times of performance (ll. 796–98);
 - (c) Botanical information about the plant kentritis (ll. 798–813);
- (3) Third preparatory ritual: the phylacteries (ll. 813–19).

Part IV (ll. 819–20): concluding epilogue

4. Redaction

Regarding redaction, the Mithras Liturgy in its entirety is the result of redaction on the part of the author/redactor. However, several levels of redaction need to be distinguished.

Firstly, the composition as a whole involves redaction with regard to the traditions that have been included, perhaps modified, and arranged in the way shown by the document. These redactional activities presuppose literary skills, which enable the author to determine what is appropriate in literary terms.

Secondly, knowledge of rituals determines the required components as well as the sequence of the ritual acts. In other words, ritual knowledge that is primarily unwritten determines what is to be inserted at which place and in which order in the written account. This knowledge is also presupposed in Part III which contains supplemental information. What is supplemented are procedures considered necessary, desirable or optional within the parameters of ritual competence (e.g., ll. 487–81). This competence lies also behind the internal cross-references (e.g., ll. 750–819).

Thirdly, the author/redactor has compared his Vorlage with one or more other versions, and he has annotated textual variants (ll. 500, 591; cf. also II.49; IV.29; 1277; V.51; VII.204; XII.201; XIII.731).

Fourthly, there are a few redactional flaws that may be attributed to the copyist rather than the author (e.g., the omissions in ll. 660–61, 814–19).¹³¹

V. The Religio-historical Context

Determining in a more precise way the place where the Mithras Liturgy fits in its religio-historical context requires careful methodological considerations. Clearly, the point of departure should be the text as we have it, even though what we have before us is anything but self-evident. We may approach the question from several angles.

The immediate context is the Great Magical Papyrus of Paris, a magical handbook in which the Mithras Liturgy appears along with many other texts. Within certain parameters these texts display a considerable degree of diversity. Seen in this context, the Mithras Liturgy is not like any of the other texts even in the larger corpus called Papyri Graecae Magicae; in fact, it stands out like an intruder from a different world, which has been inserted into a section using Homeric verses. To obtain valid comparisons, therefore, it is necessary for the interpretation to go beyond its immediate context.

As Cumont and others have seen, the Mithras Liturgy does not seem to fit in the context of Mithraism as we know it. However, what we know about the liturgy of the Mithraic mysteries is very limited. The inscriptions painted on walls of the mithraeum of Santa Prisca in Rome are equally puzzling; they certainly played some role in the ritual, but which role it was is unknown.¹³² Evidence of syncretistic Mithraism is increasing as a result of archaeological discoveries.¹³³ A Mithras sanctuary existed in Alexandria.¹³⁴ What does it mean that the initiating priest in Apuleius' Metamorphoses has the name Mithras?¹³⁵ If William Brashear is right, a fragmentary Graeco-Egyptian papyrus could be a Mithraic catechism in dialogue form.¹³⁶

The wider context of Hellenistic mystery cults poses similar problems because the Mithras Liturgy, while using mystery-cult language and concepts, is not as such a mystery-cult text. To be sure, however, there are no agreed definitions of what qualifies as a mystery-cult text. On its own terms at least, the Mithras Liturgy wishes to be taken as a secret mystery-cult text.¹³⁷ It would be misleading to call it an "initiation ritual," if this refers to a first initiation.¹³⁸ Yet the practitioners claim to be initiated μύσται,¹³⁹ and among the formulae are some that seem like quotations of a preceding ritual; thus, an initiation ritual is assumed as a precondition for the present ritual. However, there is no indication which mystery initiation is assumed.¹⁴⁰

The best way to proceed, therefore, is to examine the religio-historical presuppositions internal to the text as well as close analogies elsewhere in contemporary ancient literature.¹⁴¹ Already Dieterich had noted the syncre-tistic character of the Mithras Liturgy and identified main contributors. That the text as a whole is situated in Hellenistic Egypt is evident especially from the final Supplemental Rituals (ll. 732–820).¹⁴² The names of the ingredients are Greek, although they refer to Egyptian places, animals, plants, and minerals. Although the non-Greek voces magicae may be intended to be “Egyptian” in Greek transcription, whether the author knew Egyptian script or language cannot be determined. The author’s handling of the voces magicae does not provide evidence for his knowledge of that language to the extent he understands and writes Greek.¹⁴³ What is astonishing, however, is that not much appears in the Mithras Liturgy regarding Egyptian religion. None of the traditional Egyptian deities are mentioned by name, and the same is true of Greek gods.

Given its monotheistic tendency, Helios-Mithras-Aion is the only deity named, but in addition there are deified abstracts such as Πρῶοία, Ψυχή, Τύχη, etc., and various astral divinities and powers. If, as is assumed,¹⁴⁴ the author was a learned priest/magician serving in a temple in Thebes,¹⁴⁵ it is ¹⁴² Religion in Graeco-Roman Egypt was diversified. The country was strongly influenced by Greek language and the religious ideas coming with it, but these influences differed from place to place. Overall there was a growing tendency toward syncretism, involving older Egyptian, Greek, and then Roman traditions. How to assess these religious developments is the subject of present scholarly discussions. See, especially, László Kákosy, “Probleme der Religion im römerzeitlichen Ägypten,” ANRW II.18:5 (1995) 2894–3049 (3023–49: on magic, 3044: on the Mithras Liturgy); Bagnall, Egypt; Ritner, Mechanics; idem, “Egyptian Magical Practice under the Roman Empire: The Demotic Spells and Their Religious Context,” ANRW II.18:5 (1995) 3333–79; idem, “Magic,” The Oxford Encyclopedia of Ancient Egypt 3 (2001) 321–36; Jan Assmann, “Magic and Theology in Ancient Egypt,” in Schäfer & Kippenberg, Envisioning Magic, 1–18; idem, Weisheit und Mysterium: Das Bild der Griechen von Ägypten (München: Beck, 2000); David Frankfurter, “Ritual Expertise in Roman Egypt and the Problem of the Category ‘Magician,’” ibid., 115–35; idem, Religion in Roman Egypt; Hornung, Ägypten, 62–98.

surprising that he does not seem to be interested in utilizing the Egyptian pantheon and its concomitant myths. Rather, he articulates ideas of the philosophy of religion typical of Middle Stoicism.¹⁴⁶ These Stoic ideas were already discussed by Cumont and Dieterich.¹⁴⁷ As the author himself shows, his aim is to give interpretations of religious themes such as recreation/rebirth and ascension into heaven that are philosophical rather than mythico-theological. By comparison, the Mithras Liturgy does not show any evidence of Neoplatonic influence.¹⁴⁸

Since Dieterich displays an enormous range of source materials in his Mithrasliturgie, it is puzzling that he does not point out the many parallels to the Hermetic literature. His Abraxas shows, however, that he is familiar with the Hermetica and refers to them.¹⁴⁹ The omission of the Hermetic literature in Dieterich's Mithrasliturgie may be caused by the fact that he is focused on Mithraism and that Hermeticism was brought first to the forefront by Richard Reitzenstein in his book Poimandres.¹⁵⁰ This book appeared in 1904 and shows no awareness yet of Dieterich's Mithrasliturgie. This fact and his concentration on the Hermetic literature may have prevented him from even considering the Mithras Liturgy passage.¹⁵¹ This situation has changed radically in Reitzenstein's Die hellenistischen Mysterienreligionen nach ihren Grundgedanken und Wirkungen. Dedicated to the memory of Albrecht Dieterich, the work is deeply influenced by him.¹⁵² The third edition of 1927 takes into account the

In a defensive footnote (n. 2) Dieterich emphasizes that it would make no difference to his argument, even if dependency on Neoplatonism or Christianity could be demonstrated. ("Ich will auch hier, durch Erfahrungen gewarnt, noch einmal betonen, daß es meinen Ausführungen gar nichts nehmen würde, wenn Abhängigkeit vom Neuplatonismus sich nachweisen ließe, so wenig wie ein etwaiger Nachweis der Abhängigkeit vom Christlichen.") controversies about Dieterich's "classic book Eine Mithrasliturgie,"¹⁵³ cautiously affirming his major hypotheses and expanding the study of oriental literature.¹⁵⁴ On the whole, Reitzenstein supports Dieterich's idea of the Mithraic character of the Mithras Liturgy.¹⁵⁵ He further integrates it into the orientally-hellenistic syncretism,¹⁵⁶ emphasizing its similarities with the Hermetic literature.¹⁵⁷ The differences between the Mithras Liturgy and the Hermetica are also clear: whereas the former maintains the actual practice of the ritual, the latter drop the ritual and fully internalize and spiritualize the religion.¹⁵⁸

This turn to spiritualization enabled Festugière to interpret the entire Hermetic literature in terms of a mystical Platonism.¹⁵⁹ His important analysis of CH XIII carries the title "La mystique par introversion."¹⁶⁰ It is intended to distinguish sharply between the philosophical mysticism of the Hermetica and magical rituals.¹⁶¹ Accordingly, his comparison of CH XIII and the Mithras Liturgy places the latter into the context of the former and points out the many close parallels. Agreeing with Dieterich's critics he calls the Mithras Liturgy a "pseudo-Liturgie." What does Festugière mean by this expression? It is a liturgy, but not in the strict sense of the term; its liturgy is rather an

¹⁵⁴ In the third edition of 1927 Reitzenstein adds the name of Wilhelm Bousset to the dedication, a point he explains in the Preface (p. III): "Weg und Ziel haben jedem Forscher auf diesen Gebieten Hermann Usener und Albrecht Dieterich gewiesen, aber die engere Fühlung mit der Orientalistik blieb ihnen versagt, und doch ist das Christentum eine orientalische Religion. Wenn wir hier ergänzen und nacharbeiten, so geschieht es, wie ich von beiden weiß, in ihrem Sinn. Der Führer aber für diese Ergänzung ist Wilhelm Bousset gewesen. So zolle auch die neue Ausgabe dieses Büchleins den verstorbenen Freunden, dem Philologen und Theologen, meinen Dank."

¹⁵⁷ Ibid., 46–53, 167–91, and passim. More recently, Fowden, The Egyptian Hermes, 82–87, 168–72, has rightly emphasized the connections between the Mithras Liturgy and the Hermetica as well as the Nag Hammadi texts.

XIII consiste dans une expérience tout intérieure, sans l'aide d'aucun sacrement, rite ou représentation symbolique extérieure."

exercise in "virtual reality" comparable to apocalyptic narratives, so that the whole journey is merely "symbolic."¹⁶²

However, Festugière overlooks that the ritual of the Mithras Liturgy is supposed to be performed realistically, as its persistent emphasis on magical procedures shows. Therefore, differently from the Corpus Hermeticum, the performance of the ritual magic in the Mithras Liturgy goes hand in hand with the imaginary journey to heaven. At stake is the entire complex of problems concerning immanence and transcendence.¹⁶³ The Hermetists separated the intellectual treatises from the ritual performances. In this way they created an intellectual religion, analogous to gnosticism, while magical procedures were relegated to the "scientific" areas of alchemy, astrology, and so forth.¹⁶⁴ Moreover, on the religious side there is no evidence of Jewish or Christian influences in the entire passage. The religion of the Mithras Liturgy is strictly pagan.

To sum up, the Mithras Liturgy occupies a precarious place between various ancient traditions. Clearly, its development took place in an Egyptian religious milieu under the influence of Hellenistic philosophy. That philosophy is Stoic, not Neoplatonic: the Mithras Liturgy originated in a milieu prior to Neoplatonism. Stoic ideas enabled the author to give "rational" explanations for magical practices. This approach implies a certain skepticism with regard to traditional Egyptian religion, because otherwise the author would not consider it necessary to provide apologetic explanations. He went as far as virtually ignoring the traditional Egyptian gods, substituting for them deified philosophical concepts. The entire ritual of rebirth is justified and believed effective because it is constituted in "natural" processes of generation and regeneration integrated in the cosmos. The cosmological worldview is Greek in origin, rather than old Egyptian. Given these contributing factors, the Mithras Liturgy seems to reflect an early or nascent Hermeticism of the first and second century CE. The fact that the composition separates the more philosophical main body (ll. 484–732) from the supplemental and mostly magical instructions (ll. 732–819) shows the way Hermeticism is going, but it has not yet reached the Gnostic stage of the Corpus Hermeticum.¹⁶⁵

¹⁶³ See Dölger, Sol Salutis, 1–2, who refers to Christian parallels in Origen and Augustine; Abraham P. Bos, "Immanenz und Transzendenz," RAC 17 (1996) 1041–92.

¹⁶⁴ See on this William C. Grese, "Magic in Hellenistic Hermeticism," in Hermeticism and the Renaissance: Intellectual History and the Occult in Early Modern Europe (eds. Ingrid Merkel & Allen G. Debus; Washington, DC: The Folger Shakespeare Library, 1988), 45–58.

Other passages in the PGM, however, mention the name of Hermes Trismegistos. In the piece called “Charm of Solomon” (IV.850–929), a list of names for Egyptian divinities is introduced by the words: τὰ ὀνόματα, ἃ ἔγραψεν ἐν Ἡλιοπόλει ὁ τρισμέγιστος Ἑρμῆς ἱερογλυφικοῖς γράμμασι (“I speak your name which thrice-greatest Hermes wrote in Heliopolis with hieroglyphic letters” [ll. 895–96]). In a “Lamp divination” spell (VII.540–78), the god is called: φάνηθί μοι ἐν τῇ μαντείᾳ, ὁ μεγάλῳφρων θεός, τρίςμεγας Ἑρμῆς (“Appear to me in the divination, O high-minded god, Hermes thrice-great” [l. 551]). A passage in XIII.15 quotes from an otherwise unattested “Hermetic” book: ἐκ δὲ ταύτης τῆς βίβλου Ἑρμῆς κλέψας τὰ ἐπιθύματα ζ’ προσεφώνησεν <ἐν> ἑαυτοῦ ἱερᾷ βίβλῳ ἐπικαλουμένην Πτέρυγι’ (“from this book Hermes plagiarized when he named the seven kinds of incense [in] his sacred book called Wing” [trans. Morton Smith]). Unfortunately, the reference to an Hermetic prayer in XIII.138 is textually dubious and the name Ἑρμαῖκος is Preisendanz’s conjecture. The papyrus reads EPMAI, with two tiny illegible letters written over it and vacant spaces before and after it.¹⁶⁶ In XIII.173, 179, 487–90, 495–500 Hermes is also given the magical name Semesilamps.

Besides the frequently occurring name of Hermes, who stands for the Egyptian Thot as well as for the Greek god,¹⁶⁷ there are a number of spells that are in many ways close to the Mithras Liturgy. The closeness is evidenced by terms and concepts found also in the Hermetica.¹⁶⁸

¹⁶⁵ Several of my earlier articles on the Hermetica show that the writings reflect various stages of development and thus diversity within the Corpus Hermeticum. For these articles, see “Schöpfung und Erlösung im hermetischen Fragment ‘Kore Kosmou,’” in Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 22–51; “The Delphic Maxim Γ’ΝΘΘΙ ΣΑΥΤΟΝ in Hermetic Interpretation,” ibid., 92–111; and “Hermeticism and Gnosticism: The Question of the Poimandres,” in Antike und Christentum, 206–21.

For the interpretation, see also Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 174–80, 219–29.

- 475 Be gracious to me, O Providence and Psyche, who writes these mysteries handed down, not for gain, and for an only child I ask for immortality, for an initiate of this our power (furthermore, it is necessary for you, O daughter, to take 480 | the juices of herbs and drugs, which will be [made known] to you at the end of my sacred treatise), which the great god Helios Mithras ordered to be handed over to me by his archangel so that I alone may go to heaven as an 485 “eagle” | and behold [the] all.
This is the invocation of the prayer:
 “First origin of my origin, AEËIOYŌ, first beginning of my beginning, PPP SSS PHR [.], 490 spirit of spirit, the first of the spirit | in me, MMM fire god-given for my mixture of the mixtures in me, the first of the fire in me, ĒY ĒIA EĒ, water of water, the first of the water in me, ŌŌŌ AAA EEE,
 earth material, the first of the earthy material in me |
 495 YĒ YŌĒ,
 a perfect body of me, NN, whose mother is NN, which, because of its fashioning by a noble arm and an incorruptible right hand in a world without light and yet radiant, without soul and yet alive with soul, YĒI AYI EYŌIE;
 500 now, if it seems right to you, METERTA | PHŌTH
 (METHARTHA PHĒRIĒ, in another place) ĪEREZATH, transfer me to the immortal birth and next, to my underlying nature, in order that, after the present and

* The translation is a revision of Marvin W. Meyer's in Betz, GMPT (1996), 48–54, based on the commentary infra.

505 exceedingly pressing need, I may envision the immortal | beginning with the immortal spirit, ANCHREPHRENESOUPHIRIGCH, with the immortal water, ERONOYĪ PARAKOUNĒTH, with the firmest air, EĪOAĒ PSENABŌTH;
 in order that I may be born again in thought, KRAOCHRAX R
 510 OĪM ENARCHOMAI | and the sacred spirit may breathe in me, NECHTHEN APOTOY NECHTHIN ARPI ĒTH; in order that I may marvel at the sacred fire, KYPHE;
 in order that I may gaze upon the unfathomable, frightful water of the dawn, NYŌ THESŌ ECHŌ OYCHIECHŌA, 515 and that the life-giving | and encompassing ether hear me,
 ARNOMĒTHPH.

For today I am going to envision with immortal eyes –
 I, a mortal born from a mortal womb, but improved through the exceedingly powerful might and the imperishable 520 right hand | and with the immortal spirit, [to envision] the immortal Aion and lord of the fiery diadems – I, sanctified through holy consecrations – which holy [power] supports for a short while my human soul-power, which I will again |
 525 receive after the present bitter and relentless necessity which is pressing down on me – I, NN, whom NN bore, according to the immutable decree of god, EYĒ YĪA EĒI AŌ EĪAY İYA İEŌ.

530 Since for me, being | mortal, it is out of reach to ascend together with the golden radiances of the immortal brilliance, ŌĒY AEŌ ĒUA EŌĒ YAE ŌIAE, stand, O perishable nature of mortals, and at once <take me back> safe after the inexorable
 535 and pressing | need.

For I am the son PSYCHŌ[N] DEMOY PROCHŌ PRŌA,
 I am MACHARPH [.]N MOY PRŌPSYCHŌN PRŌE.”

Draw in breath from the rays three times, drawing in as much as you can.
 540 [Then] you will see yourself being lifted up and | ascending to the height, so that you seem to be in midair. You will hear nothing either of human or of another living being, nor in that hour will you see anything of mortal affairs on earth, but rather you will see all immortal things.
 545 For you will see the divine constellation on that day | and hour, the presiding gods arising into heaven, and others setting.

Now the course of the visible gods will appear through the disk of god, my father; and in a similar way the so-called pipe, |
 550 the origin of the ministering wind; for you will see it hanging from the sun-disk like a pipe. Toward the region of the west [it is the source of] the unending east wind, when it is assigned to theregion of the east, and in the same way the other [west wind going] toward the regions of that one [scil., the east]. Then you
 555 will see the turn-about of the image [scil., the pipe]. |
 And you will see the gods intently staring at you and rushing at you.
 But you at once put your right finger on your mouth and say:

“Silence! Silence! Silence!

Symbol of the living imperishable god |
 560 Guard me, Silence! NECHTHEIR THANMELOU!”
 Then make a long hissing sound, next make a popping sound, and say:

“PROPROPHEGGĒ MORIOS PROPHYR PROPHEGGĒ
 NEMETHIRE ARPSENTEN PITĒTMI MEŌY ENARTH
 565 PHYRKECHŌ PSYRIDARIŌ | TYRĒ PHILBA.”

And then you will see the gods looking graciously upon you and no longer rushing at you, but rather going about in their own order of affairs.

570 Thus when you see that the world above is pure | but agitated, and that none of the gods or angels is threatening you, expect a great crash of thunder to be heard, with the result that you are shocked. But you say again:

“Silence! Silence! (the formula)

I am a star, wandering about with you, 575 and shining forth out of the | deep,
 the XY, the XERTHEUTH.”

Immediately after you have said this the sun-disk will be expanded. After you have said the second formula, where there is “Silence! Silence!” and what follows, make the hissing sound twice and the popping sound twice, and immediately you will 580 see | a multitude of five-pronged stars proceeding from the sun-disk and filling all the air.

But you say again: “Silence! Silence!” And when the sun-disk has opened, you will see the boundless circle and its fiery doors shut tight. |

585 At once close your eyes and recite the following prayer.

The third prayer:

- "Give ear to me, hearken to me, NN, whose mother is NN, O lord, you who have bound together with your spirit the fiery bars of the fourfold | root,
 O Fire-burner, PENTITEROUNI,
 Light-creator (others: Confiner), SEMESILAM, Fire-breather, PSYRINPHEU, Fire-spirited, IAŌ, Spirit-light, ŌAI,
 Fire-delighter, ELOURE, Light-beauty, AZAI,
 Aion, AKBA, |
 Light-ruler, PEPPER PREPEMPIPI, Fire-body, PHNOUĒNIOCH, Light-giver, ...
 Fire-sower, AREI EIKITA
 Fire-thronger, GALLABALBA, Light-forcer, AIŌ,
 Fire-whirler, PYRICHIBOOSĒIA, Light-mover, SANCHERŌB,
 Lightning-shaker, | IĒ ŌĒ IŌĒIŌ,
 Light-famous, BEEGENĒTE,
 Light-increaser, SOUSINEPHI,
 Fire-light-maintainer, SOUSINEPHI ARENBARAZEI MARMARENTEU.
 Subduer of stars, open for me,
 PROPROPHEGGE EMETHEIRE MORIOMOTYRĒPHILBA.
 For I invoke, because | of the pressing and bitter and inexorable necessity, the immortal names, living and honored, which have not yet passed into mortal nature nor declared in articulate speech by human tongue or mortal speech or mortal sound: |
 ĒEŌ OĒEŌ IŌŌ OĒ ĒEŌ
 ĒEŌ EŌOĒ EŌ IŌŌ OĒĒE
 OĒE ŌOĒ IĒ ĒŌ OŌOĒ IEŌ
 OĒ ŌOĒ IEŌ OĒ IEEŌ EĒ IŌ
 OĒ IOĒ ŌĒŌ EOĒ OEŌ ŌIĒ
 ŌIĒ EOŌ OI III EOĒ ŌYĒ
 ĒŌOĒE EOŌ ĒIA AĒA EĒA |
 E EĒ EĒĒ EĒĒ IEŌ ĒEŌ OĒĒEOĒ

ĒEŌ ĒYŌ ŌĒ EIŌ ĒŌ
ŌĒ ŌĒ EE ŌŌ YIŌĒ.”

Recite all these things with fire and spirit, the first time performing to the end; then in the same way when you begin
620 the second time, until you have gone through the | seven immortal gods of the universe. When you have said these things, you will hear thundering and shaking in the surrounding realm; and in the same way you will experience yourself being shaken. But you say again: “Silence!” (the prayer).

625 Then open your eyes, and you will see the doors opened | and the world of the gods, which is within the doors, so that from the pleasure and joy of the sight your spirit runs ahead and ascends.

Now stand still and at once draw spirit from the divine
630 into yourself, while you gaze intently. Then when | your soul has been restored, speak:

“Come forward, lord, ARCHANDARA PHŌTAZA
PYRIPHŌTA ZABYTHIX ETIMENMERO PHORATĒN
ERIĒ PROTHRI PHORATI.”

When you have spoken this, the sun rays will turn themselves
635 upon you; look into the center of them. Then, when | you do this, you will see a youthful god, beautiful in appearance, with fiery hair, in a white tunic and a scarlet cloak, and wearing a fiery crown.

At once great him with the fire greeting:

640 “Hail, O lord, great power, great might, | king, greatest of gods: mighty is your breath, mighty is your power, O lord.

If it be your will, announce me to the greatest god, the one who begat and made you: that a human being am I,
645 NN, whose mother is NN, | who was born from the mortal womb of NN and from the fluid of semen, and who, since he has been born again from you today, has become immortal out of so many myriads in this hour according to the wish
650 of the exceedingly good god – requests to worship | you, and supplicates with as much power as a human being can have (in order that you may take along with you the horoscope of the day and hour today, which has the name THRAPSIARI MORIROK, that he may appear and give revelation during the good hours, EŌRŌ RŌRE

ŌRRI ŌRIŌR RŌR RŌI ŌR REŌRŌRI EŌR EŌR EŌRE).”

655 After you have said these things, | he will come to the celestial pole, and you will see him walking as if on a road.
Gaze intently, and make a strong bellowing sound, like with a horn, giving off your whole breath and squeezing your loins, 660 bellow, and kiss | the phylacteries and say, first toward the right: “Protect me, PROSYMĒRI!”

After have said these things, you will see the doors opening and seven virgins coming from deep within, dressed in linen garments, and with the faces of asps. They are called 665 the Fates | of heaven, and wield golden wands.

When you see these things, greet in this manner: |

670 “Hail, O seven Fates of heaven,
O noble and good virgins,
O sacred Ones and companions of MINIMIRROPHOR,
O most holy guardians of the four pillars!
Hail to you, the first, CHREPSENTHAĒS!
Hail to you, the second, MENESCHEĒS!
Hail to you, the third, MECHRAN!
Hail to you, the fourth, ARARMACHĒS!
Hail to you, the fifth, ECHOMMIĒ!
Hail to you, the sixth, TICHNONDAĒS!
Hail to you, the seventh, EROU ROMBRIĒS!”

There also come forth another seven gods, who have the faces
675 of black bulls, in linen | loincloths, and in possession of seven golden diadems. These are the so-called Pole Lords of heaven, whom you must greet in the same manner, each of them with his own name:

“Hail, O warders of the pivot of the celestial sphere,
O sacred and brave youths,
680 who turn | at one command the revolving axis of the vault of heaven, who send out thunder and lightning and jolts of earthquakes and thunderbolts against the nations of impious tribes, but to me, who am a religious and godfearing man, 685 you [give] health and soundness of body | and acuteness of hearing and seeing, and calmness in the present good hours of this day,
O my lords and powerfully ruling gods!
Hail to you, the first, AIERŌNTHI!

Hail to you, the second, MERCHEIMEROS!

Hail to you, the third, ACHRICHIOUR! |

690 Hail to you, the fourth, MESARGILTŌ!

Hail to you, the fifth, CHICHRŌALITHŌ!

Hail to you, the sixth, ERMICHTHATHŌPS!

Hail to you, the seventh, EORASICHĒ!”

Now when they take their place, on the one side and the other, in their order, gaze in the air and you will see lightning 695 bolts going down, and lights flashing, | and the earth shaking, and a god descending, immensely great, with a shining face, youthful, golden-haired, with a white tunic and a golden crown and trousers, and holding in his right hand 700 a golden | shoulder of a young calf.

This is the Bear which moves and turns the heavenly vault around, in the opposite direction, with its upward and downward seasonal revolutions. Then you will see lightning bolts leaping from his eyes and stars from his body.

705 And at once | make a long bellowing sound, straining your belly, that you may excite the five senses; bellow long until total exhalation, and again kiss the phylacteries, and say:

“MOKRIMO PHERIMO PHERERI, life of me, NN.

710 Stay! Dwell in my | soul! Do not abandon me!

For ENTHO PHENEN THROPIŌTH commands you.”

And gaze at the god while bellowing loudly; and greet in this manner:

“Hail, O lord, O master of the water!

Hail, O founder of the earth!

Hail, O ruler of the wind! O bright lightener! |

715 PROPROPHEGGĒ EMETHIRI ARTENTEPI THĒTH MIMEŌ
YENARŌ PHYRCHECHŌ PSĒRI DARIĒ PHRĒ PHRĒLBA!

Give revelation, O lord, concerning the NN matter, O lord.

Having been born again, I am passing away;

720 while growing and having grown, | I am dying;

Having been born from a life-generating birth,

I am passing on, released to death –

as you have founded,

as you have decreed

and authored (the) mystery.

I am PHEROURA MIOURI.”

After you have said these things, he will immediately respond

725 with a revelation. | Now you will grow weak in your soul, and you will not be in yourself, when he answers you. He,
however, pronounces the oracle to you in verses, and after speaking he will depart.

But you stand speechless, [wondering] how you will by yourself 730 comprehend all these things; for at a later time | you will remember infallibly the things spoken by the great god, even if the oracle contains myriads of verses.

But if you want to consult the oracle by using a fellow initiate, so that he hears only the things spoken together with you, 735 let him be pure together with you for [seven] | days, and abstain from meat and bath.

But if you are alone, and you are [directly] engaged with the pronouncements of the god, you speak as inspired in ecstasy.
But again if you wish to show him, after you judge whether his 740 worth as a man is secure, | handling the occasion as though in the immortalization ritual you yourself were being judged in his place, recite for him the first prayer, of which the beginning is "First origin of my origin, AEËIOYŌ."

745 And say the successive things as an initiate, over | his head, in a soft voice, so that he may not hear, as you are anointing his face with the mystery.

This immortalization takes place three times a year. And if anyone, O child, after the instruction wishes to disobey, 750 then for him it will no longer | be in effect.

Instruction for the performance:

Take a sun scarab which has twelve rays, and make it fall into a deep, turquoise cup, at a time when the moon is invisible; put in together with it the seed of the fruit 755 pulp of the lotus, | and after grinding it with honey, prepare a cake. And at once you will see it [viz., the scarab] moving forward and eating; and when it has consumed it, it immediately dies. Pick it up and throw it into a glass vessel of excellent rose oil, as much as you wish; 760 and | spreading sacred sand in a pure manner, and set the vessel on it, then say the name over the vessel for seven days, while the sun is in midheaven:

"It is I who have consecrated you, that your substance may be useful to me, NN alone, IE IA ËËË OY EIA, that you may
765 prove useful to me | alone, for I am PHŌR PHOR A PHŌS

PHOTIZAAS" (others: "PHŌR PHŌR OPHOTHEIXAAS").

On the seventh day pick up the scarab, and bury it with myrrh and Mendesian wine and fine linen; and deposit it in a
 770 flourishing bean field. | Then, after you have entertained and feasted together, deposit the ointment, in a pure way, for the immortalization.

If you want to show this to someone else, get the juice of the herb called Kentritis, and smear it, along with the rose 775 oil, around the eyes of whomever you wish; | and he will see so clearly that you will be amazed.

I have not found a greater procedure than this in the world. Ask the god what you want, and he will give it to you. The encounter with the great god is like this:

780 Having acquired the above mentioned herb | Kentritis, at the conjunction [of the sun and the moon] occurring in the Lion, take the juice and, after mixing it with honey and myrrh, write on a leaf of the persea tree the eight-letter name, as given below. And having kept yourself pure for three days in advance, come at morning to face the sunrise, |
 785 lick off the leaf while you show it to the sun, and thus he [the sun god] will listen attentively. Begin to consecrate him on the new moon in the lion, according to the god[’s reckoning]. The name is: "I EE OO IAI." Lick this up,
 790 so that you may be protected; and rolling up the leaf, | throw it into the rose oil.

Many times I have used the spell, and have been absolutely amazed.

But the god spoke to me:

"Use the ointment no longer, but, after casting it into the 795 river, [you must] consult while wearing the great mystery | of the scarab revitalized through the twenty-five living birds. Consult once a month, at full moon, instead of three times a year."

The Kentritis plant grows from the month of Pauni, in the 800 regions of the | black earth, and is similar to the erect verbenia. This is how to recognize it: the wing of an ibis is smeared, the black edge weakened by the juice, and when the feathers are touched, they fall off. As the lord |
 805 demonstrated to me, it [the plant] was found in the Menelaitis area near Phalagry, at the river banks, near the Besas plant.

It is of a single stem, and reddish down to the root;
 810 and the leaves are rather crinkled and have fruit | like the tip of wild asparagus. It is similar to the so-called Talapēs, like the wild beet.

Then the phylacteries are of this kind: Copy the [amulet]
 815 for the right [arm] onto the skin | of a black sheep, with myrrh ink, and after tying it with the sinews of the same animal, put it on; and [copy] that for the left [arm] onto the skin of a white sheep, and use the same method. The [magical name] for the left [arm] is: "PROSTHYMĒRI". |
 820 [With this] the memorandum has [finally] reached its completion.

Commentary

I. The Exordium (ll. 475–85)

Although not indicated by a line separator in the papyrus itself, the text of the “Mithras Liturgy” begins at l. 475 with an exordium comprising the ll. 475–85. Composed with some rhetorical care, the exordium shows evidence of the author’s literary interests and abilities as well as his religious sensitivities. Because there is a religious reason for it, he sets forth the exordium as a prayer of petition.¹ This exordium has a remarkably close parallel in the epistolary preface of the Apocryphon of James from Nag Hammadi:²

[James] writes to [...thos]: Peace [be with you from] Peace, [love from] Love, [grace from] Grace, [faith] from Faith, life from Holy Life! Since you asked that I send you a secret book which was revealed to me and Peter by the Lord, I could not turn you away or gainsay (?) you, but [I have written] it in the Hebrew alphabet and sent it to you, and you alone. But since you are a minister of the salvation of the saints, endeavor earnestly and take care not to rehearse this text to many – this that the Savior did not wish to tell to all of us, his twelve disciples. But blessed will they be who will be saved through the faith of this discourse.

A. The Invocation (l. 475)

Appropriately, the prayer begins with an invocation: “Ἰλαθί μοι, Πρόνοια καὶ Ψυχή” (“Be gracious to me, O Providence and Psyche”). This invocation,³ however, poses several problems. (1) The second of the two divine names invoked is disputed textually. Wessely, followed by Dieterich, read Τύχη,⁴ but ² NHC I,2, 1,1–28 (according to the translation in Robinson, Library, 30); cf. the translations by Dankwart Kirchner, NTApok (5th ed.) 1.238 (with further parallels); Schenke, Nag Hammadi Deutsch, 1.18. The latter argue for the gnostic Cerinthus as addressee.

Preisendanz's reading of $\Psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ has generally been accepted.⁵ Although the first letter is somewhat uncertain, a decision in favor of Ψ is fairly secure; it is also supported by contextual evidence. Both names occur elsewhere in the PGM,⁶ but none of the passages attest the two names together, so one will have to look for parallels outside the corpus. (2) If one opts for $\Pi\rho\acute{o}\nu\omicron\iota\alpha$ καὶ $\Psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$, the question is whether the two names refer to two different deities, or to one deity identified by two epithets consisting of hypostatized abstractions. (3) The fact that at no other place the ML refers again to the two names raises the question how the author intended to relate the invocation to the rest of the ML.

These three problems can be solved in conjunction. The context, in which both $\Pi\rho\acute{o}\nu\omicron\iota\alpha$ and $\Psi\upsilon\chi\acute{\eta}$ play an important role, seems surprising only at first sight. Influences of Stoicism elsewhere in the beginning sections of the ML make it most likely that the author refers to the "world-soul."⁷ Based on Plato's Timaeus,⁸ the concept of the world-soul was developed especially by Mithras and Tyche are associated in Cassius Dio 62.5.2, where the Persian Tiridates on a visit in Rome presents himself to Nero with these words: ἐγώ, δέσποτα. Ἀρσάκου μὲν ἔκγονος, Οὐολογασίου δὲ καὶ Πακόρου τῶν βασιλέων ἀδελφός, σὸς δὲ δοῦλός εἰμι. καὶ ἦλθον τε πρὸς σέ τὸν ἐμὸν θεόν, προσκυνήσων σε ὡς καὶ τὸν Μίθραν, καὶ ἔσομαι τοῦτο ὃ τι ἂν σὺ ἐπικλώσῃς· σὺ γάρ μοι καὶ μοῖρα εἶ καὶ τύχη. The destiny thou spinnest for me shall be mine; for thou art my Fortune and my Fate.") Cited according to the LCL edition by Earnest Cary (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press; London: Heinemann, 1925), 8.142–43. In his diplomatically crafted statement Tiridates told Nero what tickled his ears, and he combined Roman and Persian imperial ideology.

The tradition continues in later Platonism

Chrysippus and later Stoics, and it is here that the combination of the two concepts frequently occurs.⁹ Therefore, if the invocation is influenced by Stoic ideas, it means that only one deity, the highest deity in fact, is addressed in this way. Already Chrysippus defined the deity thus: "Chrysippus asserts that Zeus, that is the universe, is like a human being, and his providence is like its soul" (ἐοικέναι τῷ μὲν ἀνθρώπῳ τὸν Δία καὶ τὸν κόσμον, τῇ δὲ ψυχῇ τὴν πρόνοιαν).¹⁰ Moreover, the relationship between the invocation and the remainder of the ML can be explained with the help of Merkelbach's observation that the exordium is a secondary feature prefixed to the received tradition.¹¹ The author makes the connection between the exordium and the main body of the ML through the element of fire/spirit, which is the substance of the world-soul.¹²

(see e.g. Philo, Aet. 47 (with reference to Chrysippus): τῇ προνοίᾳ – ψυχῇ δ' ἐστὶ τοῦ κόσμου; also 50–51, 84: ψυχῇ δὲ τοῦ κόσμου ... ὁ θεός); Plotinus, Enn. 2.9.16; 3.3.5; 4.4.9; etc.; Philostratus, *Vit. B. Presentation of a Petition (ll. 475–78)

The formula ἔλαθί μοι introduces the prayer. Since it occurs also elsewhere in the PGM,¹³ it seems to be conventional even in its archaizing form.¹⁴ The reason for the petition is that the author confesses the commission of a specific offense: τὰδε γράφοντι τὰ <ᾗ>πρατα, παραδοτὰ μυστήρια (“as I write these mysteries handed down, not for gain”). As Merkelbach has noticed, the offense consists of having written down (γράφοντι) the text to follow (τὰδε) because it contains the secret tradition.¹⁵ This secret tradition is named by technical expressions, not all of which are textually beyond doubt: τὰ <ᾗ>πρατα παράδοτα μυστήρια. Dieterich recognized a discrepancy between “writing down” the mysteries, constituting a secondary act, and the original form of oral transmission.¹⁶ However, he does not seem to realize that the act of writing down the sacred tradition is the offensive act precipitating the prayer, and that therefore the entire exordium cannot be part of the mystery ritual to be performed.¹⁷

¹⁵ The secret tradition is to be handed down orally, not in written form.

See, e.g., the opening questions in the emperor Julian's Hymn to the Mother of the Gods (Or. V.169A): “And shall I write about things not to be spoken of and divulge what ought not to be divulged? Shall I utter the unutterable?” (καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀρρήτων γράψομεν καὶ τὰ ἀνέξοιστα ἐξοίσομεν καὶ τὰ ἀνεκλάλητα ἐκλάλησομεν; LCL edition and translation by W. C. Wright, 1.442–43). Julian summarizes main points of myths and festivals, but he explicitly observes the rule of secrecy regarding the mystery rituals known only to the “theurgists” (173A–B).

Cf. the apocalyptic literature, where in some texts the prophet is ordered to write the things down he has seen, while in others he is prohibited. Since the apocalyptic literature is on the whole not secret but intends to be public, the question of writing is a literary topos. See 1En. 12:4; 13:6; 69:9–10; 82:1–3; 92:1–5; 2En. 19:3–5; 22:1–23:6; 33:6–12; 35:2; 36:1; 48:6–8; 50:1; 53:2–3; 54:1; 68:1–2; Test. Abr. 10; and also Reitzenstein, HMR, 183; my Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 186 (on Pausanias 39.13–14). For a collection of passages from apocalyptic writings, see Siegbert Uhlig, Das äthiopische Henochbuch (JSRHZ 5:6; Gütersloh: Mohr, 1984), 551 n., 667 n., 709 n.

Rather, the prayer of the exordium is a different level of ritual act performed in writing by the author of the exordium.

The term “mysteries” (μυστήρια) refers to the text of the ML, that is by implication, to the ritual as a whole (ll. 476, 723); differently, in a supplemental section (ll. 746, 794), the term refers to an ointment used in the ritual.¹⁸ The μυστήρια are “handed over” (παραδοτά) as “sacred tradition” (παράδοσις). While these terms belong to the familiar mystery-cult language,¹⁹ the words τα πρατα in the papyrus²⁰ have been emended by scholars in different ways. Preisendanz and Eitrem²¹ emend as <ξ>πρατα, translated as “unverkäuflich,” in Greek a rare term according to LSJ (s.v.) who render it as “unsold, unsalable.” If ἄπρατα were accepted as correct, the author could have intended a contrasting pun.²² Differently, Merkelbach,²³ following Usener²⁴ and Riess,²⁵ contracts the words into πατροπαράδοτα (“handed down by the father”), but, if one wants to contract, plausible would also be πρωταπαράδοτα (“handed down first” or “handed down as most important”).²⁶ In theory, of course, πρατα could simply be the result of an error by the scribe who forgot to erase it after he had corrected himself by writing παράδοτα. While all of these emendations are possible, none seems compelling.

The words μόνῳ δὲ τέκνῳ (“for an only child”) point to the person to whom the tradition is going to be handed over, but there are ambiguities here as well.

²⁶ Dieterich (3) reads τὰ πρῶτα παράδοτα; according to the app. crit. Wendland prefers πρωτοπαράδοτα. Cf. LSJ, Suppl., 129, s.v. πρωταπόγραφος, in a papyrus from Egypt (3rd c.).

The question is whether one should understand the expression as the author's self-reference, or as a reference to someone else as recipient of the text, or to the fellow-initiate later mentioned as τέκνον (l. 748). While the language is again familiar from the mystery-cults and attested elsewhere in the PGM,²⁷ parallels in the immediate context prove that the recipient of the document is addressed. So much is clear also from the close parallel in PGM I.192,²⁸ but the identity of the person is still in doubt. When the comment in l. 478 addresses the recipient as "daughter" (ὦ θύγατερ), it is done in a secondary insertion (see below). While the phrase μόνῳ δὲ τέκνῳ is neuter, the "daughter" in l. 478 may either be a supplementary specification of τέκνον or a substitute address.²⁹ In either case, the formulae contained in the text, presupposing a male initiate, would have to be secondarily applied to a female, an inconsistency known also from other mystery-cult texts, such as the Orphic Gold Tablets.³⁰ As an address, μόνῳ δὲ τέκνῳ formulates an exception which can be taken as absolutely exclusive ("only this child ever"), or as relatively exclusive ("only this child at this time"). Since the author later includes an instruction for a fellow-initiate (ll. 732–50), the term μόνος points to the magicians' common practice of having only one apprentice at a time.³¹ At any rate, while the exordium is not formally a letter, it is meant to function as a memorandum sent to an addressee.³²

The verb indicating petition appears to be ἀξιῶ ("I ask"), with its object being ἀθανασίαν ("immortality"), but the reading of the last two letters (-αν or -ας) are quite uncertain (Martinez). The papyrus has ἀξιωμυσται, which Preisendanz reads as ἀθανασίαν ἀξιῶ, μύσται τῆς ἡμετέρας δυνάμεως ταύτης. The question is whether ἀξιῶ functions as a verbal or adjectival form. Dieterich reads it as an adjective, ἀξιῶ ("worthy"), qualifying μύστη ("initiate").³³ The Egyptian instructional literature contains addresses like "my child," e.g. Lichtheim, 1.58–63, 76, 185; cf. the epilogue to Instr. to Any, Lichtheim 2.144–45. ²⁹ At any rate, the author is male, a υἱός (IV.535, 644–55, 719–24).

³⁰ See Betz, Antike und Christentum, 225.

³¹ Cf. the parallels in Hopfner, OZ 2/1, §§ 36–38; cf. also Thessalos of Tralles (ed. Friedrich, 45). This text, however, speaks of παράδοξα, not of μυστήρια.

³³ Dieterich (3); earlier, he read ἀξιῶ μωεῖσθαι τῆς ... (Abraxas, 163). His later reading was accepted by Norden, Agnostos Theos, 290–93; Boll, Aus der Offenbarung Johannis, 136, problem is that the papyrus reads the iota adscript indicating the dative ending for the noun, but not for the adjective. Also, the adjective would require the genitive ἀθανασίας (“worthy of immortality”), a fact that causes Merkelbach to change the accusative to the genitive, ἀθανασίας ἀξιῶ μύστη τῆς...³⁴ Another reason for Merkelbach’s change is that otherwise the adjective leaves the sentence without a verb. The lack of useful parallels also hampers a clear decision. The adjective ἀξιός refers to ritual in a few places, as does the verb ἀξιοῦν.³⁵ As a result, if one accepts the letters as they stand in the papyrus, Preisendanz’s reading seems to make sense. The author asks Providence and Psyche to grant (ἀξιῶ) immortality (ἀθανασία) to his addressee,³⁶ who as an initiate (μύστης) is entitled to it; immortality is of course the primary benefit derived from the mysteries (μυστήρια).³⁷ If so, it does imply, however, that Preisendanz’s reading of μύσται as referring to the deities (“ihr Mysten dieser unserer Macht”), awkward as it would be anyway, cannot be accepted.

The phrase concluding the sentence, τῆς ἡμετέρας δυνάμεως ταύτης (“of this our power”) refers to the divine power (δύναμις) energizing the ritual as a whole, a term occurring often in magical texts.³⁸ It is conspicuous that for all the magic, terms such as μαγεία, μαγικός, μάγος are not found in the Mithras Liturgy.

As scholars have pointed out repeatedly,³⁹ ll. 478–81 interrupt the sentence which continues in l. 482 by connecting ἦν with ταύτης (l. 478). The intern. 1 (both with important parallels). Cf. also Wilhelm Kroll (by letter to Preisendanz): μόνον δὲ τέκνον ἀθανασίαν ἀξιῶ μῆσαι; Riess, CIR 10 (1896) 411, preferring μῆστής.

³⁵ ἀξιῶ II.177; IV.739; XI.a.15; ἀξιοῦν I.192; etc. For references to restrictions about passing on the secrets only to a son or a daughter, see Dieterich, 2; 49; Hopfner, OZ 2/1, § 35; Graf, Gottesnähe, 11 n. 13 (Magic, 4–5 n. 11). Graf’s assumption that the 8th Book of Moses is dedicated to a daughter seems, however, incorrect.

ruption can best be explained as caused by an secondary insertion, which in itself is a complete sentence: χρή οὖν σε, ὦ θύγατερ, λαμβάνειν χυλοὺς βοτανῶν καὶ εἰδῶν τῶν μ[ε]λ[ο]ντων σοι <μηγνυθήσεσθαι> ἐν τῷ τέλει τοῦ ἱεροῦ μου συντάγματος (“furthermore, it is necessary for you, O daughter, to take the juices of herbs and spices, which will be made known to you at the end of my sacred composition”). This insertion, however, raises interesting questions. Since the whole exordium secondarily introduces a text of sacred tradition, the insertion would have to have been made as a secondary supplement to that exordium. There are three options for explaining what may have happened. (1) The author of the exordium could have made the insertion, reflecting an afterthought and self-correction on his part. In this case the author himself would have rather clumsily messed up his own, otherwise well-written, composition. (2) The insertion could have originated as a marginal gloss by the author, which then was slipped into the text by a scribe who copied the text. This case would presuppose that the author did not himself inscribe the present papyrus, but that a scribe mechanically copied it from the author’s document. (3) A later redactor, who used an older document, may have inserted the sentence and thereby readdressed the document to a person different from the one originally intended.

Correspondingly, the first person singular μου (l. 481) would refer either to the original author or to a later redactor. That author or redactor would also identify the whole text he composed, prior to the insertion, as a “treatise” (σύνταγμα [ll. 481–82]). He would have added the insertion because without it the ritual would be incomplete and would not work. Since additional teachings are appended as well in ll. 750–819, why did the author not include the insertion among the addenda at the end of his composition? Because he himself refers to the full information at the end (ll. 772–813), the reason for putting the insertion into the exordium must have been compelling. The content of the insertion specifies only some ingredients to be used at the beginning, but no ritual is described in the text. Therefore, the insertion in ll. 478–82 functions as a reminder saying which ingredients must (χρή)⁴⁰ be used in an initial ritual. Although such a ritual is not described fully in the text, the author assumes that it needs to be performed. Since the same author is responsible for both additions in ll. 478–81 and 772–813, the conclusion should be that this author worked with an earlier document that he himself regarded as incomplete. That earlier document must have included the exordium (minus the insertion 478–82) as well as the main body of the text

(ll. 484–720). The author, therefore, added the supplements (ll. 732–820), which also explains why he ended by declaring the document (ὑπόμνημα) to be now complete (ll. 819–20). The fact that some of the supplementary rituals are needed at the beginning caused him to insert the reminder in ll. 478–82.

Addressing the recipient as “daughter” (θυγάτηρ) can mean two things: she could be his own kin, or his apprentice. In the first instance, the magician as father would pass on a piece of sacred tradition to his daughter who is also a magician. In the second instance, “daughter” would be a metaphor. Such an address would conform to instructional language and practice, according to which “sons,” “daughters,” or “children” signify pupils or apprentices. Although there is no other instance of a female apprentice mentioned in the PGM, such usage should not be excluded as a possibility.⁴¹

The person in question, however, is not treated as an apprentice but as a fully initiated magician (μύστης). If the author calls her “daughter” in the metaphorical sense, she may at one time have been an apprentice, but she is now treated as a colleague; if, on the other hand, she is his biological daughter, he would regard her as his heir to whom he hands over a piece of sacred tradition. Both possibilities could be documented by parallels from ancient religions.

The transmission of esoteric knowledge from father to daughter also reflects older Egyptian practice⁴² which continues in Greco-Egyptian and Hermetic sources. In these texts Isis is the most important example. In the Memphitic tradition contained in the aretology of Kyme, Isis is educated by Hermes (l. 3), but is called the daughter of Kronos/Geb (l. 5), while in other sources she is regarded as the daughter of Thoth/Hermes.⁴³ A Hermetic source for father-daughter transmission is found in the prologue of the Kyranides, where Harpokration of Alexandria addresses his natural histories to ⁴² I am indebted for this information to Thomas Dousa who mentioned ancient Egyptian medical texts but criticizes that scholars sometimes have a tendency to explain away the female gender; see H. von Deines and W. Westendorf, Wörterbuch der medizinischen Texte, 2. Hälfte (Grundriß der Medizin der alten Ägypter, VII.2; Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1961), p. 690, IV, s.v.; p. 704; Thierry Bordinet, Les Papyrus médicaux de l'Égypte pharaonique (Paris: Fayard, 1995), 232. A most important example is Isis being instructed by Thot/Hermes, who in some texts is regarded as her father; see the Metternich Stele, lines 57–58 (saying VI), with the translation by J. F. Borghouts, “Divine Intervention in Ancient Egypt and Its Manifestation (bzw.),” in Gleanings from Deir el-Medina (eds. R. J. Demarée and J. J. his daughter.⁴⁴ Female magicians are of course known from many quarters of Greek and Hellenistic⁴⁵ as well as from Jewish religion.⁴⁶

The language of the instruction is technical. The often occurring verb λαμβάνειν (“take”) indicates the acquiring and using of ingredients, one of which is “plant juice” (χυλοὶ βοτανῶν), specified further in the supplement (ll. 773 and 781).⁴⁷ The term εἶδῶν, from τὸ εἶδος (pl. εἶδη) seems strange as compared with other occurrences in the PGM;⁴⁸ here it refers either to drugs or to utensils.⁴⁹ Since in the supplement (ll. 772–813)⁵⁰ only ingredients and no utensils are detailed, the translation should be accordingly (“drugs”).⁵¹ The term μνησθήσεσθαι (“be informed”) is supplied by Preisendanz who argues for it on the basis of the parallels in PGM IV.2016, 2046–47, 2069.⁵² The information is to be found ἐν τῷ τέλει (“at the end”), where the cross-reference is indicated (τὴν προκειμένην [l. 779]). Concluding his statement (l. 482), the author refers to his composition as a whole by the phrase τοῦ ἱεροῦ μου συντάγματος. The term σύνταγμα is literary, combining the compositional with the functional (“composition”): the text is put together from sources, and it serves as a prescription for the performance of the ritual.⁵³

In l. 482, the text of the exordium continues, with the relative pronoun ἣν connecting with ταύτης (l. 479). The section (ll. 482–85) sets forth the hier-

The note in Graf (Gottesnähe, 212, n. 13; ET: Magic, 237, n. 11), mentioning PGM XIII.341–43, is unclear because the term there is τέκνον.

⁵¹ See for references LSJ, s.v. εἶδος, IV.

⁵² The term refers to matters “to be informed about.” Wilhelm Crönert (“Zur Kritik,” 190) supplies παραδοθήσεται.

archy of authority and the transmission of the tradition: ἦν ὁ μέγας θεός "Ἡλιος Μίθρας ἐκέλευσέν μοι μεταδοθῆναι ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀρχαγγέλου αὐτοῦ, ὅπως ἐγὼ μόνος αἰ<τ>ητῆς οὐρανὸν βαίνω καὶ κατοπτεύω πάντα ("which the great god Helios Mithras ordered to be handed over to me by the his archangel, so that I alone may walk heaven as an 'eagle' and behold the all"). At the top stands the highest deity, defined by his names and epithets. Clearly, the god is monotheistic, indicated by his epithet ὁ μέγας θεός ("the great god"), which occurs only here in the ML.⁵⁴ The god has, however, two names: Helios and Mithras.⁵⁵ For the author, therefore, the two gods, originally separate, have become united. This is all the more remarkable because in the main body of the ML, the author's source material, the two gods are not identical. In l. 640 Helios occurs alone, named as the highest god but in fact subordinate to Mithras; in l. 643 another god is spoken of as ὁ μέγιστος θεός, and in ll. 696–704 this greatest god is described without naming him; he clearly is, however, Mithras. The author's sources, on the one hand, presuppose two different gods, but on the other hand the author's intention is to merge them into "one god." As Wolfgang Fauth has pointed out, while the ambiguity of the relationship between Helios and Mithras reflects Hellenistic syncretism (theocracy),⁵⁶ the author of the ML had philosophical interests as well. The fact that only Helios (and not Mithras) is named in l. 640, in spite of what no doubt is a description of him, may perhaps result from the author's interest in presenting the highest god as Aion (see ll. 520–23, 587–616). The double-name Helios-Mithras means that the author must have read the name of Mithras in the source. Did the author purposefully omit the name Mithras at l. 696? Why did he let the name of Helios stand? The reason for keeping Helios may have been that the god is needed for the ritual of ascent through the seven astral spheres.⁵⁷ Fauth also points to the Neoplatonist Julian's doctrine of the three suns in three worlds: the transcendental Helios in the intelligible world (κόσμος νοητός), Helios-Mithras in the middle (νοερός), and the sun-disk in the visible world (ὁρατός); accordingly, Helios is the deity uniting and holding the three worlds together.⁵⁸ Compared with Julian, the ML is clearly pre-Neoplatonic and shows the problems Julian's theory tried to solve.

⁵⁷ Actually, this was Dieterich's (89–90) suggestion, commenting on Origen's description of the mysteries of Mithras and the κλίμαξ ἐπτάπυλος (Cels. 6.22). Cf. Fauth's critique, Helios Megistos, 22–23.

The great god Helios-Mithras gave the order to "hand over" (μεταδίδωμι)⁵⁹ the tradition through his "archangel" (ἀρχάγγελος), a term used also in pagan sources, esp. in Neoplatonism.⁶⁰ This mediator figure remains unnamed.⁶¹ To whom was the tradition handed over? Apparently to the author: ὅπως ἐγὼ μόνος. Naming the author as the exclusive recipient, however, is a rather common feature in similar texts.⁶² As indicated by the exordium, the text is just another instance in the passing on of the tradition.

The next word (l. 484) is controversial. The papyrus contains αἰτητης, which has been emended and interpreted in various ways. Preisendanz emends to αἰ<τ>ητής ("petitioner"),⁶³ rejecting Dieterich's reading as αἰητός

⁵⁹ The term μεταδίδωμι is technical in this context, a synonym of παραδίδωμι; see for parallels I.130 (μηδενὶ ἄλλῳ μετὰδῶς, ἀλλὰ κρύβε, ...); IV.853; VII.457; XII.93. Cf. BDAG, s.v. μεταδίδωμι.

⁶¹ Depending on the religious context, the names differ. In PGM XIII, the archangel, subordinated to Aion, is named Helios (XIII.257, 334–37; cf. III.339 without name) or Michael (XIII.928–29; IV.2356–57; VII.257); in XIV.a.5 Helios is asked to send his archangel. Other places speak of a plurality of archangels (I.208–9; IV.1203–4, 3051–52; XIII.328–29, 744; XXII.b.3,7; 15.a; 21.9–10). ("eagle").⁶⁴ Preisendanz's correction is attested in papyri,⁶⁵ but it would be unique in the PGM.⁶⁶ Dieterich argued (50, 220–21) against Cumont⁶⁷ and Reitzenstein⁶⁸ that αἰητός is philologically not impossible⁶⁹; in addition, in a new reading of the papyrus Martinez favors the letter ε instead of η, so that the interpretation as the Mithraic title of "eagle" (αἰετός) claimed by the author is highly likely.⁷⁰ That this title could easily be connected with the following statement of purpose was pointed out by Weinreich.⁷¹

The language describing the goals of the author (ll. 483–85) is also rare in the PGM. First, there is οὐρανὸν βαίνω ("going to heaven"),⁷² which is not different in meaning from the usual εἰς οὐρανὸν βαίνω ("going into heaven").⁷³ Second, there is κατοπτεύω πάντα ("overviewing all things"), a topos in literature regarding ascension and view of the cosmos.⁷⁴ Indeed, these words sum up what the author understands to happen during the performance of the ritual.

Ps.-Plato [Philip of Opus], Epin. 978c–d, 986b–987d). Closer to the ML is CH III.3: εἰς κατοπτεῖαν οὐρανοῦ;

II. The Main body of the ritual (ll. 485–732)

As indicated in the papyrus by a space after l. 486, the main body of the composition sets forth the ritual called ἀπαθανατισμός (“immortalization”; see the Analysis infra, part II, ll. 485–732). This ritual has several clearly distinguishable sections, beginning with a lengthy petitionary prayer (section A, ll. 485–537), a prescription for a breathing ritual (section B, ll. 537–38), the introduction to the ascent narrative (section C, ll. 539–44), the narrative of the ascent itself, consisting of seven scenarios (section D, ll. 544–732). This main body is then followed by supplemental rituals (part III, ll. 732–819), and a concluding statement (ll. 819–20).

A. The opening (first) prayer (ll. 485–537)

The importance of prayer for the ML as a whole is shown by the long prayer (ll. 485–537) to be recited at the beginning of the ritual. According to the internal numbering of the prayers (see ll. 741–42), it is the first,⁷⁵ a petitionary prayer by genre, consisting of the traditional parts of invocation (ll. 486–99) and petition (ll. 499–537).⁷⁶

1. Before the prayer begins, a statement of identification (ll. 485–86) separates it from the preceding exordium and defines the prayer by the proper terms: ἔστιν δὲ τοῦ λόγου ἥδε ἡ κλησις (“This is the invocation of the prayer”). λόγος⁷⁷ refers to the prayer as a whole, κλησις to the invocation.⁷⁸

2. The invocation is in two parts, first calling on “Origin” (ll. 486–87), and second on the four elements which in effect constitute “Origin” (ll. 489–95).⁷⁹ This kind of invocation of cosmic powers by abstract, personified

⁷⁷ The λόγος contains the things to be spoken (τὰ λεγόμενα).

⁷⁹ For the elemental origins see also the prayers addressed to Aion-Helios I.195–222; I.263–327; III.494–632; IV.1115–66; IV.1167–1226. For the στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, see III.568; IV.440, 1126, 1303, 1961; VIII.78; XII.250–51; XVII.b.15; XXXIX.18–20; LXII.15.

concepts, instead of traditional names of deities, is clear evidence of influence of Greek philosophy.⁸⁰ As Merkelbach has pointed out, one finds this language in Plato's Timaeus; it originated, however, earlier with the Presocratics.⁸¹

The first, general invocation is a parallelismus membrorum, using two Greek terms denoting "origin," γένεσις and ἀρχή. Each line declares a primordial origin to be the source of the present suppliant's personal natural birth.

The first line (486) reads [Γ]ένεσις πρώτη τῆς ἐμῆς γενέσεως ("First origin of my origin"). The term γένεσις can mean both "origin" and "birth," implying that the human birth of the individual has its direct source in the primordial origin of the universe.⁸² In principle, this cosmic origin defines what the ML means by "rebirth": it is the underlying φύσις that needs to be "regenerated."⁸³ The first line ends with the magical vowel sequence αηιουω. Since seven-vowel sequences are frequent in all sorts of magical literature, an occurrence in the ML is not surprising. The connection of the seven vowels with the seven planets seems obvious, but it does not appear to be a concern in l. 486,⁸⁴ where it is indicative of the cosmological foundation in a more general sense.

⁸⁰ The phenomenon is typical of philosophical prayers, beginning in the fourth century BCE; see Nilsson, GGR, 1.812–15; 2.206–7; Furley & Bremer, Greek Hymns, 1.47; Johan C. Thom, "Cleanthes' Hymn to Zeus and Early Christian Literature," in Adela Y. Collins & Margaret M. Mitchell, eds., Antiquity and Humanity: Essays on Ancient Religion and Philosophy Presented to Hans Dieter Betz on His 70th Birthday (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001), 477–99.

The second line (l. 488) addresses the other cosmological concept: ἀρχή τῆς ἐμῆς ἀρχῆς <ς> πρώτη (“first beginning of my beginning”).⁸⁵ Again, the term ἀρχή refers to both the primordial beginnings of the cosmos and the individual beginning of the initiate.⁸⁶ The oldest parallels to this notion of primordial ἀρχή are found in pre-Socratic philosophy, esp. the Orphic Fragments⁸⁷ and Anaximander. Anaximander used the terms γένεσις and ἀρχή together in referring to the origin of the universe, the sun, moon, stars, earth (... ἀρχὴν τε καὶ στοιχεῖον ... τῶν ὄντων τὸ ἄπειρον ... ἐξ ὧν ἡ γένεσις ἐστὶ τοῦς οὖσι), including the human being (ὁ ἄνθρωπος) who originated from the same ἀρχαί.⁸⁸ As the sources of Plato, Aristotle, and Simplicius indicate, these ideas were handed down in philosophical traditions dealing with the origins of the universe.⁸⁹

Parallel to the vowel sequence in l. 486, l. 487 also ends with magical sounds to be performed by the suppliant. These sounds are indicated in the text by abbreviated symbols, the first of which are three letters with dots over them: πππ. Accordingly, the sound, called ποππυσμός (“smacking the lips”), is to be performed three times, equalling πόππυσον τρίς. This sound is known

Vgl. auch die Vokalreihen in 610–616, welche zur Bezeichnung der Planeten dienen.” However, while the vowel composition in ll. 610–16 is expressly connected with the planets (617–20), this is not done in l. 486.

from the PGM⁹⁰ as well as from other magical sources.⁹¹ The second, a hissing sound is indicated by the three letters, again with dots over them: σσσ, equalling σύρισον τρίς. It is called συριγμός (“hissing”) and occurs elsewhere in the PGM and in other magical materials.⁹² The ritual sounds belong to the field of “music,” here reflecting cosmic music, about which the Pythagoreans had more to say.⁹³

Line 488 concludes with unexplained letters: φρ[.]. According to Preisendanz, several conjectures were proposed by scholars, all remaining tentative.⁹⁴ Martinez points to the three dots over the letters and raises the question whether they indicate sounds rather than a word.

The onomatopoeic term poppysma is mentioned by Juvenal (Sat. 6.584) in connection with fortune telling. Pliny (Nat. 28.25) reports as a consensus among all peoples that lightning should be prayed to by clucking of the tongue (fulgetras poppysmis adorare consensus gentium est). The 2nd c. CE philosopher Nicomachus of Gerasa (Harmonicum enchiridium 6, in: Carolus Janus, ed., Musici Scriptores Graeci [BiTeu; Lipsiae: Teubner, 1895; repr. 1995], 277), in discussing the cosmic dimensions of music, mentions theurgical worship in which οἱ θεοῦργοι call upon the deities σιγμοῖς τε καὶ ποππυσμοῖς καὶ ἀνάρθροις καὶ ἀσυμφώνοις ἤχοις συμβολικῶς ἐπικαλοῦνται. The sound of “hissing” or “whistling” is mentioned by Xenophon (Symp. 6.5) as similar to a pipe tune (αὐλημα). The emperor Julian (Ep. 19) refers to the Christian ritual of “hissing at the demons and making the sign of the cross on the forehead” (συρίττειν τε πρὸς τοὺς δαίμονας καὶ σκιαγραφεῖν ἐπὶ τοῦ μετώπου τὸν σταυρόν). Related is a reference by Plotinus (Enn. 2.9.14.6–8) to a number of magical hissing sounds: μέλη καὶ ἤχους καὶ προσπνεύσεις καὶ σιγμοὺς τῆς φωνῆς καὶ τὰ ἄλλα, ὅσα ἐκεῖ μαγεύειν γέγραπται. See also below, n. 107.

The next section (ll. 489–95) contains the specific invocations of the four elements (πνεῦμα, πῦρ, ὕδωρ, οὐσία γεώδης).⁹⁵ There can be no doubt that also this part of the invocation is indebted to pre-Socratic philosophy, in particular Empedocles' doctrine of the four elements as constituting the cosmos (τέσσαρα πάντων ῥιζώματα)⁹⁶ and held together by κρᾶσις.⁹⁷ The connection with Empedoclean and Stoic philosophy was seen already by Cumont and Dieterich, and it is affirmed by Merkelbach.⁹⁸ Most recently, the connection between the ML and Empedocles was pointed out by Peter Kingsley: "And it is no coincidence, either, that a section of the Paris magical papyrus – another document showing the profoundest affinities with basic aspects of Empedocles' teaching – contains a number of features each of which points separately to Empedocles but which, together, present a virtual summary of Empedoclean themes and concerns. Here we have a ritual for regeneration and immortalization that has significant analogies both with Empedocles and with the 'Orphic' gold plates, an initial prayer to the four elements as immortal, personified beings, and a description of the divine elements as existing simultaneously out in the universe and inside one which takes us to the heart of Empedocles' theory of perception...."⁹⁹ Kingsley constructs a line of transmission of this Empedoclean doctrine from Southern Italy and Sicily to Egypt, to the Hermetica (esp., Kore Kosmou § 63), to the ML, and to the Turba philosophorum.¹⁰⁰ This line of transmission, however, overlooks the fact that from Zeno forward, Stoicism as well affirmed the doctrine of the four elements.¹⁰¹ Therefore, the appearance of the philosophical tradition of the elements in a syncretistic text such as the ML reflects a still broader tradition.¹⁰²

The first element, "spirit" (πνεῦμα), is addressed in ll. 489–90: πνεῦμα πνεύματος, τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ πνεύματος πρῶτον ("spirit of spirit, the first of the spirit in me"). Although the text names the element of πνεῦμα first, the next line (l. 490) confirms that it is virtually identical with πῦρ ("fire").¹⁰³ This doctrine seems consistent with Stoicism, for which, however, fire is the highest element. In turn, fire can be identified with "ether" (αἰθήρ), although in the ML αἰθήρ does not receive special mention.¹⁰⁴ At any rate, while the formulation of ll. 489–90 is unique in the ML, the concept of πνεῦμα is highly important within the ML as well as in the PGM generally.¹⁰⁵ The genitive expression πνεῦμα πνεύματος shows that it is a concept functioning like a divine name. The genitive is explained in the following clause as analogous to a divine epithet, by linking the primordial πνεῦμα πρῶτον and the πνεῦμα which inhabits the human being, thereby rooting anthropology in cosmology in a way that corresponds both to Empedoclean and Stoic doctrines.

Line 490 orders another magical sound, indicated in the text by the three letters μμμ, again with dots over them. This abbreviation refers to the sound called μύκωμα, here to be performed three times by blowing air (representing spirit).¹⁰⁶ The sound was meant to be either a roaring or bellowing, or as a hard blowing through the nose, depending on how one interprets the adverb κερατοειδῶς in l. 657.¹⁰⁷

The second element of fire (πῦρ) is named next separately from spirit (ll. 490–92). One should understand the sentence as parallel to the first, but it contains interesting variations.¹⁰⁸ Fire is first simply named, and then explained by two defining statements. The first of these sums up cosmological definitions: τὸ εἰς ἐμὴν κρᾶσιν τῶν ἐν ἐμοὶ κράσεων θεοδωρήτον (“god-given fire to my mixture of the mixtures in me”). The term κρᾶσις (“mixture”) is technical in Stoic cosmology, where it explains how the elements work together coherently in what Zeno calls διακόσμησις.¹⁰⁹ Going back ultimately to Empedocles, as Willem den Dulk has shown,¹¹⁰ the concept of κρᾶσις plays a special role in forging coherence among the elements in the cosmos. Lines 490–92 sum this up by saying that, in regard to the suppliant, κρᾶσις functions in both ways: it links the κράσεις of the elements to one

The term is onomatopoeic and was compared to the bellowing of oxen (IV.2802 [ἡ ταύρων μύκημα]; Aristophanes, Nub. 292) or thunder; see LSJ, s.v. μυκάομαι. Cf. Apuleius’ (Metam. 8.27–28) description of ecstasy: “One [of the effeminates (cinaedi)] started to rave more wildly than the rest (bacchatur effusius), and producing rapid gasps from deep down in his chest as though he had been filled with the divine spirit of some deity” (velut numinis divino spiritu repletus).

The third element of water is treated in analogous fashion in ll. 492–93; the text addresses it by name, ὕδωρ ὕδατος ("water of water"), and by the attribute τοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ ὕδατος πρῶτον ("the first of the water in me"). The two previous hapaxlegomena were referred to in notes already,¹¹⁴ but water is mentioned in other connections frequently. The invocation of water ends with a vowel combination: ωω αα εεε.

The fourth element is addressed somewhat differently in ll. 493–95 as οὐσία γεώδης τῆς ἐν ἐμοὶ οὐσίας γεώδους πρῶτη ("earthy material, the first of the earthy material in me"). The term οὐσία is equivalent to ὕλη, making it clear that as "matter" earth differs from the other elements. The expression οὐσία γεώδης is found in Stoic texts dealing with the four elements,¹¹⁵ and also has parallels in Philo, as a result of Stoic influence.¹¹⁶ This address again concludes with a vowel combination: υη υωη.

After the completion of the invocation, the suppliant moves without transition to the next section, an application to the initiate's body (ll. 495–98).¹¹⁷ Since he had mentioned his own body throughout the preceding invocation, this application simply draws out the consequences from what has gone before.

Given the divine origin of the elements constituting his body, he can claim it to be perfect: σῶμα τέλειον ἐμοῦ ("my perfect body"). While this doctrine is unique in the PGM, it has close parallels in Stoic philosophy, which explains also why at this point there is no mention of the "soul" (ψυχή).¹¹⁸ The term

¹¹² The phrase is also a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM.

¹¹³ Vowel combinations express sounds similar to other magical sounds. See the parallels in the vowel sequence in ll. 610–16.

σῶμα is to be taken as referring to the ἄνθρωπος, the human being as a whole, since it is constituted as a microcosm reflecting the macrocosmic universe. The invocation of the elements implies that much, because the same elements constitute the universe and the human being. Moreover, Stoic doctrine regards the soul as part of the πνεῦμα, not an entity separate from it. Therefore, the ML can be seen here as influenced by Stoicism, rather than by the Platonic concept of ψυχή (see also below, l. 498). This cosmology is summarized by Firmicus Maternus in the prooemium to Book 3 of his Mathesis:

“The god who created the human being, guided by nature, determined the shape, position and the whole substance of man. For he composed the human body, just like the body of the universe, from a mixture of the four elements, from fire, water, air, and earth, so that the well-balanced mixture of all these elements became a living being, ordered in imitation of the divine model; and thus he composed the human being as a divinely artistic creation, so that he conferred by force of nature to the small body all power of the elements and their substance. Through that divine spirit, which descended from the heavenly intelligence for the sustenance of the mortal body, he provided a home though fragile yet similar to the world. For this reason the five planetary stars, together with sun and moon, maintain the human being in fiery and eternal motion like a microcosm, so that it, made in imitation of the macrocosm, is governed by a substance similar to the deity.”¹¹⁹

The suppliant identifies himself by name. At this point, the pap. uses the symbol Δ, abbreviating the formula τοῦ δεῖνα τῆς δεῖνα, X son of mother Y (abbreviated with NN in GMPT).¹²⁰ The suppliant thereby establishes the identity of the preceding first-person pronouns.

The editor of the Collection Budé edition, P. Monat (Firmicus Maternus, Mathesis [Paris: Les belles lettres, 1994], 2.xii; also 2. 13, n. 1) attributes the statement to Hermetism. In fact, the Prooemium § 4 mentions the names of Petosiris and Nechepso; this passage is quoted by Dieterich (57), Festugière (La révélation, 1.126), and Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.28).

The following statement (ll. 495–97) legitimates the claim that the body has been created perfectly with metaphors from creation mythology. The human body came about “because of fashioning by a noble arm” (διαπεπλάσμενον ὑπὸ βραχίονος ἐντίμου). The phrase is a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM, although there are similar expressions elsewhere.¹²¹ That the human body is a πλάσμα the PGM states in passages defining the human being;¹²² these passages are close to Hermetic¹²³ or Jewish language.¹²⁴ The “noble arm” refers to the right arm. In the PGM it is the arm on which to affix the charms.¹²⁵ In the OT and Judaism the arm of God is a frequently used symbol of his power, but usage does not include the adjective ἐντιμος.¹²⁶ The expression “of his incorruptible right hand” (δεξιᾶς χειρὸς ἀφθάρτου)¹²⁷ which follows comes from the same language background.¹²⁸ Merkelbach has suggested the LXX as

the background for this language in the PGM, but the evidence shows that a wider context of ancient metaphors is more likely.¹²⁹

Next come two statements defining the place of the human being in a universe of opposites.¹³⁰ The first (ll. 497–98) pertains to the cosmos: ἐν ἀφωτιστῷ καὶ διαυγῇ κόσμῳ (“in a world without light and yet radiant”). Again, this phrase is unique in the PGM, but the verb διαυγάζειν occurs in other cosmological contexts.¹³¹ This contrast points to the cosmic dualism of light and darkness, as it is found in ancient religious texts, in Greek philosophical thought, and in Gnostic sources,¹³² particularly also in Pythagoreanism.¹³³ The second contrast (l. 498) refers to opposites within the cosmos, ἐν τε ἀψύχῳ καὶ ἐψυχωμένῳ (“without soul and yet alive with soul”). That is, the human being exists in a world made up of “soulless and ensouled” entities. Again, the phrase is unique in the PGM, but the individual terms occur elsewhere in the PGM,¹³⁴ and in Greek cosmological philosophy.¹³⁵ The first part of the prayer then concludes with vores magicae: ὑψι αὐι ευωιε (ll. 498–99).

The next section of the prayer (ll. 499–537) contains the petition proper. Prior to the request itself, an appeal is made for approval by the divine Jewish magic it is a major symbol. See Eduard Lohse, TDNT 9 (1973), s.v. χεῖρ, section B.3; C.3; Lieselotte Kötzsche, “Hand II (ikonographisch),” RAC 13 (1986) 402–82, esp. 403–45.

¹²⁹ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.235), listing some examples (Exod 6:1; Ps 43 [44]:4) which, however, are textually different.

¹³⁰ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.235) thinks of the ὑπερουράνιος τόπος, to which the initiate wants to ascend, according to Plato, Phaedr. 247b, but it seems that Stoic ideas, not Plato, are the sources here.

¹³¹ See IV.990–92 (φωτίζοντα καὶ διαυγάζοντα); XIII.165 (Φῶς ... καὶ διηγύασεν τὰ πάντα). Cf. 2 Pet 1:19: ὡς λύχνῳ φαίνοντι ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ, ἕως οὗ ἡμέρα διαυγάσῃ καὶ φωσφόρος ἀνατείλῃ ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις.... 2 Cor 4:6; 6:14 may also be related.

¹³⁴ The term ἀψυχος occurs with a different meaning, referring to food, in PGM I.23; VII.441. Should ἐψυχωμένῳ be understood as the perfect form ἐνεψυχωμένῳ or the present ἐμψυχουμένῳ? Cf. τὰ ἐμψυχα which occurs in a cosmological context in IV.1766; cf. IV.735 (of meat); LXVII.2 (text uncertain).

Philo uses the terms ἀψυχος, ἐμψυχία, ἐμψυχος, ψυχοῦν in discussing cosmology; similarly CH II.8–9; X.12; XI.10–11; Numenius, fr. 4b (ed. Des Places, 47.34–36). See Löhr, Verherrlichung, 123–26.

elements: ἐὰν δὲ ὑμῖν δόξῃ ("if it seems right to you").¹³⁶ Such appeals are part of Hellenistic prayer language.¹³⁷

In ll. 499–500 an important literary phenomenon requires mention. According to Preisendanz, the voces magicae are cited: μετερτα φωθ ἱερεζαθ,¹³⁸ but then after φωθ an inserted gloss comments that in a different version of the text (ἐν ἄλλῳ) another form of the magical words occurs: μεθαρθα φηριη. A different reading is proposed by Jordan who takes the ἐν ἄλλῳ to refer to ἱερεζαθ.¹³⁹ At any rate, the interpolated gloss shows that either the author or the final redactor had at least two versions of the text at his disposal, which he carefully compared, noting the discrepancies. The gloss shows evidence of a concern not only for magical but also for literary precision in collating versions of the text.¹⁴⁰ However, there are no other instances of these magical words,¹⁴¹ so only the present version of the text has survived.

The request itself is generally stated first (l. 501) as an infinitive clause: μεταπαραδοῦναι με τῇ ἀθανάτῳ γενέσει ("give me over to immortal birth").¹⁴² The term μεταπαραδιδόναι is rare, but the author seems to like such composita.¹⁴³ The translation of the term is disputed. LSJ translates as "hand down" or "transfer," which would make it the equivalent of παραδιδόναι.¹⁴⁴

¹³⁹ Jordan (by letter). The reason is that the citation formula usually precedes the citation.

¹⁴¹ Cf. Brashear ("Greek Magical Papyri," 3601) who, following Karl F. W. Schmidt (GGA 193 [1931] 449), refers to φωουθ (IV.1683) as a parallel, meaning in Egyptian "große Schlange."

¹⁴² The aorist infinitive has the force of request, but it is prefaced by the humble phrase ἐὰν δὲ ὑμῖν δόξῃ (l. 499). For the imperative infinitive in Koine Greek see Mandilaras, The Verb, §§ 756–57; Moulton, Grammar, 3.78; BDR, Grammatik, § 389.

¹⁴⁴ LSJ (s.v., 2) adduces Iamblichus (Vit. Pyth. 32.226) as a parallel; it refers to the Pythagoreans' preservation of the mysteries: they left their main doctrines unwritten and passed them on to their successors ἅπερ μυστήρια θεῶν μεταπαραδιδόντες.

In the ML, however, the term may be more specific. Taking the preposition μετα—seriously, the ML seems to connote transformation and rebirth (ll. 517–27). It should therefore be translated, “transfer me to the immortal birth,” meaning rebirth.¹⁴⁵

The following words (l. 502) are difficult to interpret: ἐχομένως τῇ ὑποκειμένη μου φύσει. Whatever they mean, the words seem to clarify “immortal birth” in the preceding line. The word ἐχομένως is textually emended from pap. εχομενος, and thus the translation is uncertain.¹⁴⁶ LSJ (s.v. ἐχομένως) renders “next after,” a synonym of ἐφεξῆς, but interesting is also Reitzenstein’s suggestion that the words are an inserted comment meaning something like: “that means by implication.” Thus, if the words ἐχομένως τῇ ὑποκειμένη μου φύσει intend to clarify what is meant by γένεσις,¹⁴⁷ the

On rebirth generally, see Dieterich (137–40, 157–61); Reitzenstein, HMR, 39, 50, 97, 262–65; Nock, Essays, 1.190–94; Nilsson, GGR, 2.653, 687–88; Burkert, Ancient Mystery Cults, 25, 75, 99–101, 166 nn. 60, 70; Graf, Gottesnähe, 105–7. ¹⁴⁶ With the pap. reading εχομενος, Dieterich (4, l. 8) proposes ἐχόμενον, Sudhaus ἐχομένως, which Preisendanz accepts and translates: “und gleich darauf wieder meiner eigentlichen Natur.” Weinreich (in Dieterich, 221) reports Preisendanz’s suggestion to read γενέσει· ἐχόμενος... φύσει, ἵνα... Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.) notes that the text makes sense, if the following ἵνα-clause constitutes the beginning of a new sentence (see below, n. 153). Martinez comments that both emendations make good sense phonetically, ἐχομένως reflecting the common interchange εο/ω (Gignac, Grammar, 1.275) and ἐχόμενον reflecting the interchange of final silent letters (Gignac, ibid., 131–32). Cf. Merkelbach’s translation (Abraxas, 3.160): “mich wiederum zu übergeben der Neugeburt in die Unsterblichkeit, entsprechend meiner vorhandenen Natur.”

expression τῇ ὑποκειμένη μου φύσει is also difficult. It can be taken in two ways: (1) in conformity with the ML elsewhere ὑποκείμενος can mean: "cited below,"¹⁴⁸ that is, as pointing forward to θνητὴ φύσις (ll. 533, 607). This interpretation would support Reitzenstein's suggestion of a gloss, resulting in the translation: "(the immortal birth) subsequent to my (mortal) nature, as mentioned below." (2) The expression could be philosophical in origin, pointing to the "underlying nature,"¹⁴⁹ or even to the "presupposed notion."¹⁵⁰ Because of the Stoic influences elsewhere in the ML, the parallels in Stoicism and Hermetism would favor speaking of "underlying nature."¹⁵¹ If this is the preferred meaning, the phrase would interpret γένεσις as meaning "rebirth" in the sense of a return to the underlying nature which consists of the divine elements.¹⁵²

The following passage (ll. 502–15) restates the general request, but now details it by way of four ἵνα-clauses dealing with sense-perception. Preisendanz seems right in taking the first ἵνα-clause as the beginning of an independent sentence.¹⁵³ The following doctrine about sense-perception and recognition agrees with that of the Hermetica. The first clause focuses on seeing, while the three others specify the resultant changes in recognition.¹⁵⁴ Together, the four ἵνα-clauses contain an entire doctrine of salvation pertaining to visual perception.¹⁵⁵ A final clause, which does not begin with ἵνα but is connected to the previous ἵνα by καί, shifts to the subject of hearing (ll. 514–15).

¹⁴⁹ See LSJ, s.v. ὑπόκειμαι, 8 (1) and (2) with references. This meaning occurs several times in the Hermetica (CH X.22; XI.6–7; XII.6; XVI.7; Exc. XXIII.2, 27; Frag. 26.1, etc.).

¹⁵⁴ For the Hermetic doctrines, see, e.g., CH I.18, 21, 22; X.9–10; XIII.6.

The first ἐνα-clause comprises ll. 502–8 and concerns the change in the faculty of vision. The “present” condition, now overcome, is described as that of oppression: μετὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν καὶ σφόδρα κατεπείγουσαν με χρεῖαν (“after the present and very pressing need”). This kind of formulaic statement seems to be liturgical in nature; parallels are found in language dealing with the liberation from the oppression by ἀνάγκη, εἰμαρμένη, τύχη and χρεῖα.¹⁵⁶ Parallels occur also elsewhere in the ML;¹⁵⁷ the term κατεπείγειν (“pressing down”) appears repeatedly in formulaic passages.¹⁵⁸ An impressive example from the Latin literature is the prayer of Lucius to Isis in Apuleius (Metam. 11.25): “... but ever on sea and land thou art guarding men, and when thou hast stilled the storms of life thou dost stretch out thy saving hand, with which thou unravelest even those threads of fate which are inextricably woven together; thou dost pacify the gales of Fortune and keep in check the baleful movements of the stars” (... quin mari terraque protegas homines et depulsis vitae procellis salutarem porrigas dexteram, qua fatorum etiam inextricabiliter contorta retractas licia et Fortunae tempestates mitigas et stellarum noxios meatus cohibes).¹⁵⁹ Given this present condition, the change needed comes next: (ἐνα) ἐποπτεύσω τὴν ἀθάνατον ἀρχὴν (“[in order that] I may envision the immortal beginning”). The term ἐποπτεύειν (“envision”) occurs only here in the PGM; it is known from the mystery-cults as referring to the final vision of the initiate.¹⁶⁰ The object of vision, τὴν ἀθάνατον ἀρχὴν (“the immortal beginning”) points back to l. 487. In other words, the spirit accomplishes the change in the faculty of vision by enabling the suppliant to have a

Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.235) compares the terms χρεῖα and ἀνάγκη, suggesting they mean the same in this context: “χρῆ can mean ‘one must,’ and χρεός is a debt one must pay. Cf. also 527 ἀχρεοκόπητος, ‘no longer burdened by astral compulsion.’” For further references and bibliography see BDAG, s.v. χρεῖα, 2.

¹⁵⁸ It is a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM, used only in the ML (ll. 503–4, 526, 534–35, 605). The term is attested since Homer; see LSJ, s.v., IV.2.

¹⁵⁹ Text and trans. by Griffiths, Apuleius, 100–101, with the commentary pp. 320–23.

vision of the primordial beginning.¹⁶¹ The following passage confirms this interpretation.

Lines 504–8 make the resource of the enabling explicit by naming the primordial elements; the dative expresses both origin and appeal to the elements, three of which are named. The first is τῷ ἀθανάτῳ πνεύματι (“the immortal spirit”),¹⁶² pointing back to the πνεῦμα πνεύματος of l. 489; it is followed by a vox magica: ἀνχερφερνεσουφιριγγ.¹⁶³ The second dative refers to τῷ ἀθανάτῳ ὕδατι (“the immortal water” [506–7]), pointing back to the element of water (ll. 492–93); it is followed by another vox magica, ἐρονυῖ παρακουνῆθ.¹⁶⁴ The third dative (ll. 507–8) addresses τῷ στερεωτάτῳ ἀέρι (“the firmest air”).¹⁶⁵ Notably, this element is not mentioned in ll. 489–93, but “air” plays a role elsewhere in the ML.¹⁶⁶ The adjective στερεός occurs in astronomical/astrological contexts in the PGM, pointing to the “firmament.”¹⁶⁷ The accompanying vox magica is εἶοση ψεναβωθ.¹⁶⁸

The question is why different elements (spirit, water, air) are named in ll. 504–8, instead of the four (spirit, fire, water, earth) in ll. 489–95. As Reitzenstein assumes, the difference can be either the result of error or of intention. According to the Hermetica, however, “spirit” and “air” are closely related.¹⁶⁹ Earth may be omitted because it plays no positive role in rebirth.¹⁷⁰ If so, the omission of fire still remains unresolved.

¹⁶² This concept is attested also in CH X.17–22; XII.12, 18.

¹⁶³ The vox magica sounds as if derived from Egyptian, but it has not been explained. Cf. the list of Egyptian vores magicae, called “The Invocation to Uphor” in XII.335–50, which has in l. 347: ἀνχερφερνεψουφιριγγ. See Morton Smith in Betz, GMPT, 165.

¹⁶⁴ A hapaxlegomenon, unexplained.

¹⁶⁵ The pap. reads στερεοτάτῳ, which Dieterich (p. 4) wants to read as στερεῷ καὶ τῷ. Weinreich (in Dieterich, 221) reports that Preisendanz and Reitzenstein keep τῷ στερεωτάτῳ ἀέρι, but Reitzenstein puts τῷ ἀθανάτῳ ὕδατι and τῷ στερεωτάτῳ ἀέρι in brackets, saying that “correct is only πνεύματι, cf. l. 29 [i.e., l. 505]; but the interpolator misunderstood it and in effect wanted to insert what Dieterich (p. 56) explained on the basis of Orphic formulae.”

¹⁷⁰ Cf. l. 533: during the ascent mortal nature must be left behind (ἔσταθι, φθαρτὴ βροτῶν φύσι). See also CH I.1; X.5–8, 12, 15–19; Ascl. 28; Exc. IV.10.

The second ἐνα-clause (ll. 508–11) notes where the effect of change is to take place: ἐνα νοήματι μεταγεν<ν>ηθῶ (“so that I may be reborn in thought”).¹⁷¹ The choice of the term μεταγεννᾶν indicates transformational change, rather than a new begetting (ἀναγεννᾶν).¹⁷² The term νόημα occurs only here in the PGM;¹⁷³ it is important in Hellenistic philosophy and religion, where it means the act of thinking or the resulting thought.¹⁷⁴ The idea of rebirth is stated by the verb μεταγεννᾶν, a key concept in the mystery-cults, although the specific word occurs rarely.¹⁷⁵ The concluding vox magica reads κραοχραξ ρ οἰμ εναρχομαι.¹⁷⁶ Line 510 names the source for the change: καὶ πνεῦση ἐν εμοὶ τὸ ἱερὸν πνεῦμα (“and [in order that] the sacred spirit may breathe in me”).¹⁷⁷ The statement refers back to ll. 489 and 505 (cf. 520) and contains a doctrine of inspiration, according to which the primordial spirit inspires the human

spirit.¹⁷⁸ The concluding voces magicae (ll. 510–11) read νεχθεν αποτου νεχθιν αρπιν ηθ.¹⁷⁹

The third ἵνα-clause (ll. 511–12) refers to fire: ἵνα θαυμάσω τὸ ἱερὸν πῦρ (“in order that I may marvel at the sacred fire”). The change is indicated by the suppliant’s desire to be able to “marvel” (θαυμάζειν) about the ritual efficacy, a key term in Greek religion.¹⁸⁰ The expression of “sacred fire” is mentioned only here in the PGM, but elsewhere the element of fire occurs frequently in ML (ll. 490, 617, 636–38).¹⁸¹ In the ML, spirit and fire are closely related, but not identical; it is not completely clear which is higher in the astral hierarchy. The statement concludes (l. 512) with the vox magica: κυφε. The term seems to be related to a type of incense called κῦφι (or κοῖφι).¹⁸²

The fourth ἵνα (ll. 512–13) focuses on the primordial water: ἵνα θεάσωμαι τὸ ἄβυσσον τῆς ἀνατολῆς φρικτὸν ὕδωρ (“that I may gaze at the unfathomable, frightful water of the dawn”). The verb θεᾶσθαι indicates the suppliant’s desired ability to “behold” the primordial water. What kind of image the suppliant has in mind is difficult to say. The adjective ἄβυσσος occurs only here in the PGM, while the noun is more common; it keeps showing up in lists of primordial elements.¹⁸³ To an Egyptian, the “frightful water of the dawn” brings to mind the god Nun,¹⁸⁴ or the Greek waters of Styx.¹⁸⁵ The final voces magicae νῦν θεσω ἐχω σὺ χιεχῶα are unexplained.¹⁸⁶

For the interpretation, see Betz, Antike und Christentum, 240. Hippolytus (Haer. 6.34) quotes as Valentinian doctrine based on Gen 2:7 LXX: καὶ ἐνεφύσησεν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ πνοὴν ζωῆς. Martinez also points to Homer, Il. 15.262; John 20:22; Ign. Eph. 17:1.

¹⁷⁹ A hapaxlegomenon in the PGM. The pap. reads νεχθεν, cf. νεχθιν. Dieterich (Abraxas, 58,2) had read τεχθεν, but rejected it because of νεχθιν; in Mithrasliturgie (5) he suggests ἐνεχθέν. Also Reitzenstein takes απο του (“derived from”) as part of the voces magicae, as does Preisendanz (in Dieterich, 221) who suggests two variants of the same formula. Jordan (by letter) suggests that απο του νεχθιν may be a gloss by the copyist indicating that the νεχθεν of l. 510 has been corrected from νεχθιν.

The final petition (ll. 514–15) differs in three ways. (1) There is no ἔνα.¹⁸⁷ (2) The petition introduces the element of ether, not mentioned previously: καὶ ἀκούσῃ μου ὁ ζωογόνος καὶ περικεχυμένος αἰθήρ (“and may the lifegiving and encompassing ether hear me”). (3) The subject changes again (cf. πνεύσῃ l. 510): instead of asking for his improved hearing, the suppliant expresses the hope that the ether may hear his prayer.

As far as speech is concerned, the voces magicae empower it to make sure the prayer is being heard. The element of ether (αἰθήρ), located above the sphere of ἀήρ, is found only here in the ML, but in the PGM corpus it is attested more often.¹⁸⁸ The two attributes which are attached to αἰθήρ, ζωογόνος and περικεχυμένος,¹⁸⁹ point to cosmology; they show up only here in the ML.¹⁹⁰ The final vox magica ἀρνομηθρ is an unexplained hapaxlegomenon.

A new section begins in l. 516, introducing the final part of the prayer (ll. 516–37). Unusual for a prayer, it contains a detailed self-presentation of the suppliant.¹⁹¹ The nature and function of this self-presentation is partly ritual and partly didactic.

¹⁸⁴ So Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.236. On Nun see Reinhard Griebhammer, “Nun,” LA 4 (1982) 534–35.

¹⁸⁸ Apparently, for the ML it is not identical with “fire.” For αἰθήρ, αἰθέριος see above, l. 489–90. Cf. the references in CH I.17; XI.19; Exc. VI.12; XXIII.11, 34; XXIV.1; XXV.7.

The beginning sums up what the suppliant considers the promise which the god will next fulfill: ἐπεὶ μέλλω κατοπτεύειν σήμερον τοῖς ἀθανάτοις ὄμμασι ("for today I am going to envision with immortal eyes"). This announcement recalls the transformation of vision that was the subject of the previous petition (ll. 502–13); the author also presupposes that the prayer has been heard by the deity (ll. 514–15). The time reference σήμερον ("today") occurs elsewhere in magical and ritual contexts as almost a technical term.¹⁹² The verb κατοπτεύειν ("envision"), found also in the exordium (l. 485), is a synonym of ἐποπτεύειν (see on l. 504). The phrase τοῖς ἀθανάτοις ὄμμασι explains that the new vision has come about through the transformation of the mortal eyes into immortal ones (see ll. 504–5).¹⁹³ Further information is to be gained from the following section.

The section ll. 517–37 defines the suppliant as an initiate. The subsections of this self-definition form the basis for the following ascension narrative. The summary contains the anthropology of the ML, detailing the relationship between the human and the divine.

Regarding human nature, the initiate defines himself as θνητὸς γεννηθεὶς ἐκ θνητῆς ὑστέρας ("a mortal born from a mortal womb"). He thereby defines human nature by two criteria: mortality and birth from a human mother. This definition appears several times in the ML and elsewhere in the PGM;¹⁹⁴ it conforms to common ideas of ancient anthropology.¹⁹⁵

The benefits of initiation are generally summarized in ll. 518–19, and by a kind of synthema in ll. 520–27. The general benefit is characterized as "betterment": βεβελτιωμένος ὑπὸ κράτους μεγαλοδυνάμου καὶ δεξιᾶς χειρὸς ἀφθάρτου ("improved through the exceedingly powerful might and the imperishable right hand"). The verb βελτιοῦν ("improve"), found only here in the PGM, often relates to Hellenistic ethics.¹⁹⁶ The reference to divine power

¹⁹³ Cf. III.215: ὄμμα τέλ[ειον] IV.543–44 πάντα δὲ ὅψη ἀθάνατα. The concept is similar to the Hermetic expression ὁ ὀφθαλμὸς τοῦ νοῦ (CH V.2; X.4–6; XIII.14, 17; Def. (Armenian) 7.3; 9.2 (ed. Mahé, L'Hermès en Haute-Égypte, 2.379–80, 391 [German trans. in Holzhausen, 2.495, 497]). In the NT and early Christian literature cf. is couched in metaphors similar to those above (ll. 496–97). The divine attribute κράτος occurs only here in the ML, but is more frequent elsewhere in the PGM.¹⁹⁷ The attribute μεγαλοδύναμος (“exceedingly powerful”) belongs to hymnic language,¹⁹⁸ just as the attribute δεξιᾶς χειρὸς ἀφθάρτου (“[by] the imperishable right hand”).¹⁹⁹

The rather elaborate statement in ll. 520–27 seems formulaic in nature and resembles a synthema, comparable to formulae in mystery-cult texts.²⁰⁰ The passage defines the benefits of transformation, of which the first is the qualification of immortality: ἀθανάτῳ πνεύματι [κατοπτρεύειν] τὸν ἀθάνατον Αἰῶνα (“by the immortal spirit [envision] the immortal Aion”). While the “immortal spirit” has been dealt with before (ll. 489–90, 505, 510), it reappears here as the force bringing about the vision (κατοπτρεύειν [l. 516; cf. 504]) and immortality. Having acquired immortality, the initiate is able to have a vision of the immortal Aion,²⁰¹ whom the author mentions here for the first time (l. 520).²⁰² This god, whose name means “long period of time,” “eon,” “eternity,” plays an important role in Hellenistic and Roman religions. ²⁰¹ The principle is that of ὅμοιος τῷ ὁμοίῳ. Cf. 1 Cor 2:10–15, esp. 13.

ML, Aion is mentioned again in the “third prayer” as the heavenly gatekeeper (l. 594).²⁰³ His attribute is δεσπότης τῶν πυρίνων διαδημάτων (“lord of the fiery diadems”).²⁰⁴ While δεσπότης is attested only here in the ML (l. 521), seven golden diadems are mentioned in l. 675.²⁰⁵

The second qualification bestowed by the spirit is sanctification (l. 522), ἁγίους ἁγιασθεὶς ἁγιάσμασι (“sanctified through holy consecrations”). The expression is unique in the PGM, a fact that caused commentators to assume influence of the LXX. The translations diverge, because of divergent interpretations of the term ἁγίασμα, with most interpreters taking it to mean “holy consecration.”²⁰⁶ While it is true that the terminology of ἁγιάζω, ἅγιος, ἁγίασμα occurs most frequently in the LXX, the PGM do not necessarily depend on the LXX.²⁰⁷ In Hellenistic-Jewish and early Christian texts the term is mostly used in the singular, referring to “sanctuary,” “temple.” E.g., Philo (Plant. 50; LCL edition by Colson, 3.239) interprets ἁγίασμα (Exod 15:17–18): οἷον ἁγίων ἀπαύγασμα, μίμημα ἀρχέτυπου, ἐπεὶ τὰ αἰσθήσει καλὰ τῶν νοήσει καλῶν εἰκόνες, τὸ ἡτοιμάσθαι ὑπὸ χειρῶν θεοῦ, τῶν κοσμοποιῶν αὐτοῦ δυνάμεων (“It is a ‘sanctuary,’ an outshining of sanctity, so to speak, a copy of the original; since the objects that are beautiful to the eye of sense are images of those in which the understanding recognizes beauty. Lastly, it has been prepared by the ‘hands’ of god, his world-creating powers”). In the

PGM the rare plural ἁγιάσματα refers most likely to “consecrations,”²⁰⁸ here specifically to the initiation ritual.²⁰⁹

The following part of the convoluted sentence construction is even more difficult (ll. 522–24): ἁγίας ὑπεστώσης μου πρὸς ὀλίγον τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης μου ψυχικῆς δυνάμεως²¹⁰ (“which holy [power] supports for a short while my human soul-power”).²¹¹ The term ὑφίστημι (“support”), a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM, appears to come from philosophy, especially Stoicism, where it plays a significant role.²¹² Constructing ὑφίστημι with a genitive object is unusual, which may be due to the comment having been inserted after the preceding formulaic statement, in order to clarify the question of how the consecration affects the human soul. Thus far, the author has not mentioned the soul (ψυχή) in connection with anthropology, so that it makes sense that he wishes to bring it in at this point. He apparently does not share the Platonic doctrine of the immortal soul incorporated in the mortal body; instead the soul shares human weakness and mortality. This is why the soul is in need of support by divine power which by way of consecration injects holiness into the soul. That supportive power, however, lasts only for a short while, after which it wanes and must receive another charge by new consecrations. Therefore, once the initiate has reached the state of holiness, that state cannot last forever, but only for a

²¹² See LSJ, s.v. ὑφίστημι, B.IV.2.a, with references to Aristotle, Epicurus, Stoics. For the Stoics, it is almost technical in physics, referring to διακόσμησις; see Chrysippus, SVF II, ## 599 (185.30–186.6), also 187 (61.22–42), 202a (65.4–24), 317 (114.24–29), 509 (164.14–37), 518–19 (165.32–43); Philo, Leg. 3.240; Sacr. 113; etc.; CH I.8; XI.16; Irenaeus (Haer. I.i.11 [ed. Harvey, 1.55]) in speaking about the Gnostics refers to their notion of πνευματικὴ ὑπόστασις. Thus, the verb may be related to the concept of ὑπόστασις/substantia, for which see Helmut Koester, “ὑπόστασις,” TDNT 8 (1969) 572–89, esp. A.3; B.3; D; Hermann Dörrie, Υπόστασις. Wort- und Bedeutungsgeschichte, in his Platonica Minora (München: Fink, 1976), 12–69.

finite period. This interpretation agrees with Stoic doctrine, on the one hand, and with other passages in the ML, on the other.²¹³ The soul needs strength especially in view of the impending ascension. In l. 630 the ML speaks of a “recovery of the soul” (ἀποκατασταθῇ ἡ ψυχή) from its being shaken up (ll. 622–23), in ll. 709–10 the suppliant prays that the deity may remain in the soul, and in l. 725 the soul is closed down during the oracular ecstasy.

This situation is confirmed by repeating (cf. ll. 503–4) the formulaic relative clause (ll. 524–27), ἣν ἐγὼ πάλιν μεταπαραλήμφομαι μετὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν καὶ κατεπείγουσάν με πικρὰν ἀνάγκην ἀχρεοκόπητον (“which I will again receive after the present bitter and relentless necessity which is pressing down on me”). The initiate expresses his confidence that he will regain his soul-power after he has been liberated from the oppressive force of necessity. The term μεταπαραλαμβάνειν provides another instance of the author’s preference for verbs with double prefixes;²¹⁴ we must appreciate, however, the sense of the preposition μετὰ. As a whole, the expression μετὰ τὴν ἐνεστῶσαν καὶ κατεπείγουσάν με πικρὰν ἀνάγκην ἀχρεοκόπητον parallels ll. 502–4 and 534–35, but there are some new terms as well, associated with ἀνάγκη (“necessity”). This “necessity,” identical with χρεία (“need,” l. 504), has preeminence in the magical texts throughout as Ananke, a personified demonic force.²¹⁵ Ananke is here distinguished by two attributes, one common, and the other unfamiliar: πικρός (“bitter”)²¹⁶ and ἀχρεοκόπητος.²¹⁷ The second (l. 527) attribute may, however, be explainable. LSJ (s.v. χρέος) has references attesting the metaphorical meaning as “the debt that all must pay, fate, death”;²¹⁸

²¹⁵ For the ML, see above on ll. 502–4, moreover l. 606; III.120; VII.302; IX.10; XXXVI.342; etc. See Preisendanz, 3.215 (index VI and index I, s.v.). ²¹⁶ See l. 605; for the “bitter Ananke” see also VII.302; XV.13; furthermore IV.1406, 2606, 2669.

accordingly, χρεοκοπεῖν (“cancel debt”), originally a commercial term, can be used as a metaphor.²¹⁹ If, as according to Diogenianus, the term τὸ χρεών played a role for Chrysippus, the term ἄχρεοκόπητος in the ML may have originated in a Stoic background,²²⁰ and should thus be translated as “unforgiving, relentless.”²²¹ Merkelbach seems to agree with this interpretation only in part, when he says: “No longer burdened by that ‘debt,’ which one must pay back to ἀνάγκη, that is, no longer burdened by death. The initiate has left behind his earlier existence.”²²² The text of the ML, however, does not indicate that the “debt” equals “death,” or that the initiate is beyond death altogether.²²³ Rather, at this point the initiate leaves his mortal nature behind during the ascent (see below, Il. 533–35). A distinction has to be made between the ascension presently in view and the presupposed earlier initiation ritual, which included the experience of death and rebirth.

Next (Il. 527–29) comes the identification by name: ἐγὼ ὁ δεῖνα, ὃν ἡ δεῖνα, κατὰ δόγμα θεοῦ ἀμετάθετον (“I, NN, whom NN bore, according to the immutable decree of god”). The statement is formulaic, indicated in the pap. by the symbol Δ.²²⁴ The expression κατὰ δόγμα θεοῦ ἀμετάθετον (“according to the immutable decree of god”) represents another formula important XXIII.46 (Kore Kosmou, eds. Nock & Festugière, 4.16): χρεωκοπεῖσθω τῶν ψυχῶν αὐτῶν τὸ περιεργον ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ φόβοις καὶ λύπαις καὶ ἐλπίσι πλάνοις (“The curiosity of their souls shall be frustrated by desires, fears, troubles, and misguided hopes”). Cf. Barn. 2.6: ἄνευ ζυγοῦ ἀνάγκης ὦν.

in Greek religious philosophy.²²⁵ The formula conforms to the Stoic concept known since Zeno and Chrysippus.²²⁶ By contrast, the Hellenistic aretalogies of Isis claim her victory over Heimarmene or Fatum.²²⁷ Plutarch seems to reflect the common opinion of the time, when he reports from his table-talks: “‘Nor should we,’ I continued, ‘be overawed by Olympia, as if its policies with respect to types of competition were as undeviating and immutable as fate.’”²²⁸ This section ends with voces magicae (ll. 528–29): εὐη ὕἱα ἐηι αὼ εἴαυ ἵνα ἴσω.²²⁹

Apparently, the author sees the need at this point to add a comment of clarification concerning the anthropological presuppositions for the ascent (ll. 530–32).²³⁰ It begins with stating what appears to be an accepted principle: ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἔστιν μοι ἐφικτὸν θνητὸς γεγῶτα συνα<ν>ιέναι χρυσοειδέσιν μαρμαργυραῖς τῆς ἀθανάτου λαμπηδόνης (“since it is for me, being mortal, ²²⁵ The pap. reads ἀμετάθετου, corrected by Dieterich (4–5, n.).

Cf. also the interpretation of ἀμετάθετος in CH, Exc. XI.2 (Nock & Festugière, 3.55), item 25: πᾶν <τὸ> ἐν οὐρανῷ ἀμετάθετον, πᾶν τὸ ἐπὶ γῆς μετάθετον. Ibid. 57 (# 46): πρόνοια θεία τάξις, ἀνάγκη, πρόνοια, ὑπηρετίς. # 48: τίς θεός; ἄτρεπτον ἀγαθόν. τί ἄνθρωπος; τρεπτόν κακόν; Exc. XIII.64 (3.64): Ἀνάγκη ἐστὶ κρίσις βεβαία καὶ ἀμετάτρεπτος δύναμις προνοίας (with n. 2 for further references); Orph. Hymn. 59 (To the Moirai), line 10.

Text and translation cited according to the LCL edition by Paul A. Clement & Herbert B. Hoffleit, Plutarch’s Moralia (London: Heinemann; Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1969), 8.388–89.

²³⁴ The term ἐφικτός is a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM; cf. IV.68 ἐφικέσθαι with a different meaning.

χρυσοειδής ("golden bright") is related to crowns,²³⁹ and λαμπηδών ("brilliance")²⁴⁰ is another hapaxlegomenon in the PGM. Where does this language come from? It has some close parallels in the Orphic Hymns.²⁴¹ Merkelbach points to the sun rays and the dust particles glimmering in it, which ancient sources thought of as vehicles for the ascension of the souls into heaven.²⁴² The comment concludes with voces magicae: ωηυ αεω ηυα εωη υαε ωιαε.²⁴³

The section on self-presentation concludes (ll. 533–35) with the suppliant addressing his human nature: ἔσταθι, φθαρτὴ βροτῶν φύσι, καὶ αὐτίκα <ἀνάλαβέ> με ὑγιῇ μετὰ τὴν ἀπαραίτητον καὶ κατεπε[ί]γουσαν χρεῖαν ("Stand, O perishable nature of mortals, and at once <take me back> safe after the inexorable and pressing need"). Because of some textual problems,²⁴⁴ translators differ in restoring and translating the text. The context (cf. ll. 525–26) requires a verb describing the ascent and addressing mortal nature, so that he orders his mortal nature²⁴⁵ to "stand," including the reminder that such a transition is not without danger.²⁴⁶ What the author seems to say closely resembles an explanation in CH X.5–6:

"But we are still too weak now for this sight; we are not yet strong enough to open our mind's eyes and look on the incorruptible, incomprehensible beauty of that good. In the moment when you have nothing to say about it, you will see it, for the knowledge of it is divine silence and suppression of all the senses. [6] One who has understood it can understand nothing else, nor can one who has looked on it look on anything else or hear of anything else, nor can he move his body in any way. He stays still, all bodily

²⁴⁵ For the expression φθαρτὴ βροτῶν φύσι cf. ll. 502, 607; for βροτοί see V.409, 413; VI.11; VII.674, 677.

senses and motions forgotten. Having illuminated all his mind, this beauty kindles his whole soul and by means of body draws it upward, and beauty changes his whole person into essence. For when soul has looked on <the> beauty of the good, my child, it cannot be deified while in a human body.”²⁴⁷

The description of the “inexorable and pressing need” is similar to the preceding parallels (see ll. 502–4, 525–26), with the adjective ἀπαράιτητος (“inexorable”) providing variety.²⁴⁸

The final words of the self-presentation (ll. 517–37) conclude the first prayer (ll. 484–537). Although beset with textual uncertainties, there is again a well-known formula: ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι ὁ υἱὸς... (“For I am the son of...”).²⁴⁹ Some kind of divine name should be expected,²⁵⁰ but that name is secret and only voces magicae are given: ψυχῶ[ν] δεμου προχῶ πρῶα.²⁵¹ Another formula then follows, perhaps a doublet or variant of the preceding: ἐγὼ εἰμι μαχαρφ[.]ν μου πρῶψυχῶν πρῶε.²⁵²

The problem is whether the writer has simply muddled up his Vorlage, or whether he inserted two (defective?) variants of the same formula, or whether the magician by intention obscured his divine name.²⁵³ The latter seems most likely not only because of the parallel in l. 724 (ἐγὼ εἶμι with vox magica),²⁵⁴ but also because of the magicians' practice generally to keep their divine names secret.²⁵⁵ No doubt, with his final words he reveals himself as a son of a god, but at the same time he hides that name behind vores magicae.

B. Prescription of the breathing ritual (ll. 537–38)

Following the conclusion of the prayer and anticipating the ascension narrative, the text moves directly to the ritual. This narrative presupposes an ancient worldview which involves specific ideas about cosmology and anthropology, including the world of the gods and the place of the human being in relation to it.²⁵⁶ Related to these issues is an enormous body of materials connected with ideas on journeys to the heavenly world. These general presuppositions and traditions cannot be discussed at this point, but competent survey literature with bibliographies is available.²⁵⁷

First, then, comes the prescription of a breathing ritual (ll. 537–38): ἔλκε ἀπὸ τῶν ἀκτίνων πνεῦμα γ' ἀνασπῶν, ὃ δύνα[σ]αι. ("Draw in breath from the rays three times, drawing in as much as you can.") What is drawn in with the breath of air is the divine "spirit" (πνεῦμα).²⁵⁸ As is shown by the preceding prayer, the spirit is a fundamental concept in the ML.²⁵⁹ Since πνεῦμα can mean both “spirit” and “breath,” the spirit is to be drawn in with the breath. Also in accordance with ancient teachings is the idea that the spirit is transmitted by the rays of the sun (αἱ ἀκτῖνες). While the sun rays are important in several ways in the PGM, their role as transmitters of divine spirit and its inhalation is affirmed several times.²⁶⁰ Related are ancient speculations about the role of the “sun dust,” that is, small dust particles hovering in the air and glittering in the sun.²⁶¹ In ancient Egypt they were regarded as means for the soul to climb up to heaven.²⁶² Greek philosophers called the particles ξύσματα, regarding them as souls floating upwards in the air.²⁶³ However, at this point

The god appears as surrounded by sun-rays (1129), sending them down to earth by glittering sun-dust. the ML does not speak of “souls” (ψυχᾶί), but of “you” and the element of “spirit” as bringing about the ascension. This point was already made by Dieterich who explains it as evidence of Stoic influence.²⁶⁴

The ritual is to be performed three times by drawing in the air as hard as possible.²⁶⁵

C. Introduction to the ascension narrative (ll. 539–44)

Before the beginning of the actual ascent narrative, the author includes an instruction about what is going to happen after the performance of the breathing ritual (539–44). This section reveals the author’s own understanding

²⁶⁴ Dieterich (58–59): “If he [scil. the human person] is to be returned to the ἀθάνατος γένεσις and have a vision of the ἀθάνατος ἀρχή, then he can accomplish this only in this way that the immortal πνεῦμα in him, the immortal water, the firm, and the air in him have a vision of the sacred fire, the dawn’s abysmal flood, that in him blows τὸ ἱερὸν πνεῦμα, the holy spirit. Later prescriptions show how this elevation by the πνεῦμα is really to be understood: he must draw in from the sun rays’ πνεῦμα, then he gets lifted up toward the light and enters into the upper region of the air.” (“Wenn er der ἀθάνατος γένεσις wiedergegeben werden und die ἀθάνατος ἀρχή schauen soll, so kann er das eben nur dadurch, daß das unsterbliche πνεῦμα in ihm, das unsterbliche Wasser, das Feste und die Luft in ihm schaut das heilige Feuer, des Aufgangs abgrundtiefe Flut, daß in ihm weht τὸ ἱερὸν πνεῦμα, der heilige Geist. Man sieht aus einigen nachfolgenden Vorschriften, wie eigentlich die Erhebung durch das πνεῦμα gemeint ist: er muß von den Strahlen πνεῦμα einziehen, dann erhebt er sich zum Licht und kommt mitten in die Luftsphäre.”)

Dieterich (59–61; also 232–33) refers to Rohde, Psyche; Schmekel, Die Philosophie der mittleren Stoa, 197. of the ritual as a whole, which he interprets as levitation, a phenomenon described by several ancient authors.²⁶⁶ An especially close parallel is Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 3.15–16, reporting about the levitation among the Brahmins in India: “they regard any rites they perform, in thus quitting the earth and walking with the sun” (τῷ Ἡλίῳ ξυναποβαίνοντες τῆς γῆς δρῶσιν) “as acts of homage acceptable to the god.” By “extracting fire from the sun rays” (ἀπὸ τῆς ἀκτῖνος ἐπισπῶνται), “the fire is then seen raised aloft in the air and dancing in the ether” (οὕτω μετέωρόν τε ὁρᾶσθαι αὐτὸ καὶ σαλεῦον ἐν τῷ αἰθέρι), allowing the Indian sages to levitate (μετεωρεῖν) two cubits in the air.²⁶⁷

First (l. 539), the ascending person is addressed with a term often occurring in the following narrative: ὄψῃ (“you will see”).²⁶⁸ The text interestingly predicts that he will be able to see himself: ὄψῃ σεαυτὸν ἀνακουφίζόμενον [καὶ] ὑπερβαίνοντα εἰς ὕψος, ὥστε σε δοκεῖ[ν μ]έσον τοῦ ἀέρος εἶναι (“and you will see yourself being lifted up and ascending to the height, so that you seem to be in midair”).²⁶⁹ The terminology is known from elsewhere in the PGM; ἀνακουφίζειν is found only here in the PGM, but frequently elsewhere.²⁷⁰

What consequences does this ascension have for sense-perception? – Leaving behind the body means that there will be no physical hearing or seeing

(ll. 541–43): οὐδενὸς δὲ ἀκούσει [ο]ὔτε ἀνθρώπου οὔτε ζώου ἄλλ<ου>, οὐδὲ ὄψῃ οὐδὲν τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς θνητῶν ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ, πάντα δὲ ὄψῃ ἀθάνατα.²⁷¹ (“You will hear nothing either of a human or of another living being, nor in that hour will you see any of the mortal affairs on earth, but rather you will see all immortal things.”) Instead of human sense-perception, there will be higher forms of perception (ll. 543–44), like the way the gods hear and see.²⁷² The ancients understood that during an ecstatic seizure (“in that hour”)²⁷³ normal sense-perception ceases, so that room was made for higher forms of recognition;²⁷⁴ in the ML, specifically, the focus is on vision of the divine world.²⁷⁵ Regarding the suppression of the physical senses so that the inner self can detach, ascend and experience noetic sensory impressions, the similarity to Hermetic doctrines is striking (cf. CHI 1.1).

D. Ascension narrative in seven scenarios (ll. 544–731)

As Dieterich has observed, the preparatory sections lead up to a narrative of a ritual consisting of seven scenarios, representing seven stages in the ascension. Their presentation combines ritual elements of prayer and actions with a narrative structure. The ritual elements are prescriptive, the narrative is descriptive. It describes, on the one hand, the stages of the ascension in the future tense (ὄψῃ, “you will see”), so that the author shows the entire journey in terms of a predicted future, conditional, of course, on the correct performance of the ritual acts. On the other hand, at each of the stages he narrates what the practitioner sees, stated in the present tense, like descriptions of pictorial panels. The precise relationship between the distinct elements of ritual and narrative constitutes the major problem for the analysis, since it determines the reconstruction of the ascension ritual, and thereby effects the understanding of the text as a whole. Two scholars have so far proposed detailed analyses of the composition, which need to be considered first.

Based on literary and archaeological evidence collected by Cumont in his collection (Textes et monuments figurés relatifs aux mystères de Mithra), Dieterich argues for a formulary of a ritual, which he calls a “liturgy,”²⁷⁶ belonging to the mystery cult of Mithras. Dieterich assumed some kind of Egyptianization of Mithraism in Egypt as part of the general hellenization of the native religion; he thus regarded this “liturgy” as syncretistic in nature, containing also influences of Stoicism as well as traces of ancient Iranian religion.²⁷⁷ At any rate, what can be reconstructed is the world view which results from a confluence of Greek ideas of a “Stoic-Peripatetic provenience,” the cult of Mithras, and Egyptian instructional wisdom.²⁷⁸ “From where and in which form it came into the Mithras mysteries thus developed, we are, of course, no longer able to trace. The world view was needed to this extent and in this specialized application for the construction of a sacramental act of an ascension of the initiates from the earth to the highest god. Those who created this liturgy were Mithras devotees who held fundamentally Greek ideas.”²⁷⁹

Dieterich (82–85) cautiously distinguished between the original “liturgy” itself that can be extracted from the formula, and its secondary reworking by the author who uses the older Mithraic liturgy for his own construction of a magical ritual (“Zauberritual”) designed to obtain oracular revelations. Dieterich also resisted committing himself to determining precise ritual sections which the magician may have omitted; he also repeatedly asked whether there

ever was a ritual of descension at the end, whether the whole was merely a sacramental formula to be used repeatedly, and whether the author had a real "Ritualbuch" at his disposal, from which he excerpted parts. Important as these questions are, one cannot offer more than subjective speculations. Dieterich did, however, regard it as certain "that a genuine Mithras liturgy of an ascension of the soul and its immortalization, an ἀπαθανατισμός, has been inserted into a magical ritual for the exploration of the future. Therefore, the attribution of subsidiary sentences or components to one or the other is relatively unimportant. About the major parts of the liturgy there cannot be any doubt."²⁸⁰ Dieterich (88–92) also points to literary and archaeological evidence which testifies that a seven-stage ascension of the soul through the astral world²⁸¹ was part of the Mithraic ritual.²⁸² Thus, he sees seven stages in the ritual of the ML, each introduced by a prayer.

The problem with this part of Dieterich's interpretation is that the seven stages in the ML only partly conform to the Roman Mithraic mosaics from Ostia (Mitreo delle sette sfere). Most important are the representations of the seven gates.²⁸³ On one mosaic (Merkelbach, fig. 24), the symbols of the zodiac, six on each side, frame the seven gates. On the side walls of the room stand the images of the seven planetary gods: Iupiter, Mercurius, Luna, Mars, Venus, Saturnus, perhaps Sol on the back wall. Another mosaic (Becatti, pl. XXIV–XXV; Merkelbach, fig. 22) shows a ladder-type arrangement of seven squares with the symbols of the grades of initiates, together with the seven planets, known also to Celsus (Origen, Cels. 6.22).²⁸⁴ (1) Corax (raven), cup, herald's wand of Mercurius; (2) Nymphus (destroyed), lamp, diadem of Venus; (3) Miles (soldier), Persian cap, helmet, spear of Mars; (4) Leo (lion), fire shovel, sistrum, thunderbolt of Jupiter; (5) Perses (Persian), short-sword, sickle of Luna; (6) Heliodromus, torch, wreath rays of the sun-god, and the whip for leading the horses; (7) Pater, bowl and wand of the magos, cap of the Persian priest, sickle of Saturnus. The upper field shows a mixing-bowl (κρατήρ), surrounded by branches and the donor's inscription: Felicissimus ex voto f(ecit). Finally, another mosaic (fig. 25) shows a front portal with seven gates; the middle gate is higher and wider, with a hanging lamp in the center, while three gates on each side are divided by columns. The large middle field shows a mixing-bowl; on its left side a raven (corax), a small sickle of Luna, and the spear of Mars; on the right side a serpent (nymphus) and a lion (leo). Further upwards are what may be water basins, the image of Jupiter with his thunderbolt, and on top the head of Saturn, veiled, and holding his sickle. The side walls contain images of a torchbearer on each side, and the seven planets.

The iconography of these mosaics clearly reflects Roman Mithraism with its synchronization of the seven grades and the astrological signs. Notably, Mithras is not represented, and the pater is identified with Saturn. Also, the three mosaics have been designed considerably differently. Perhaps Helios/Mithras occupied the eighth field which is, however, unfortunately destroyed. The seven spheres are, therefore, different from those in the ML. An identification of Mithras and Saturn reflects Roman adaptation, just as ML shows Egyptian influences when it identifies Helios and Mithras. To be sure, the main difference is that the ML does not parallel the seven scenarios with the seven grades of initiates.²⁸⁵ At least one agreement stands out, however: the sixth grade is that of the “sun-runner” (heliodromus), corresponding to the fourth scenario of the ML, and the symbol of the sun-god is at a lower level as compared with a supreme god who may perhaps be Helios/Mithras.

To conclude, Dieterich was right in assuming that at this point there is evidence of some kind of connection between the ML and the Mithras cult. The author must have had some knowledge about Mithraic rituals. Since he was initiated in a mystery cult, it could indeed have been an Egyptian adaptation of Mithraism, but it could have been just as well some other mystery cult which had appropriated Mithraic elements. Beyond this, a cosmology of seven spheres or seven heavens was shared by many cosmologies in the Greco-Roman world,²⁸⁶ wherein the number seven as such possessed sacred and magical potency.²⁸⁷

²⁸⁵ The question of the relationship between images and cultic functions, which does not need to be discussed here in detail, has been reopened by the discovery of the Mithraic cult vessel in Mainz. The red-colored krater shows several cult symbols, especially figures of the seven grades; for description and color representations see Heinz Günter Horn, “Das Mainzer Mithrasgefäß,” Mainzer Archäologische Zeitschrift 1 (1994) 21–66; for the interpretation Reinhold Merkelbach, “Das Mainzer Mithrasgefäß,” ZPE 108 (1995) 1–6; Roger Beck, “Ritual, Myth, Doctrine, and Initiation in the Mysteries of Mithras: New Evidence from a Cult Vessel,” JRS 90 (2000) 145–80.

According to Dieterich, the seven stages of the ascension in the ML are set forth in the following manner:

(1) First stage (ll. 544–55), introduced by the (first) prayer to the gods and winds in charge of the day; the initiate rising to midair;

(2) Second stage (ll. 556–69), introduced by the “second” prayer; the initiate rising to before the gates, the opening of the sun disk;

(3) Third stage (ll. 569–85), introduced by the “third” prayer to key-holding Aion and the seven planetary gods; opening of the gates, and vision of the world of the planetary gods;

(4) Fourth stage (ll. 585–628), introduced by the (fourth) prayer to Helios; the appearance of Helios;

(5) Fifth stage (ll. 628–61), introduced by the (fifth) prayer to the Τύχαι; the appearance of the Τύχαι;

(6) Sixth stage (ll. 662–92), introduced by the (sixth) prayer to the pole lords; the appearance of the pole lords;

(7) Seventh stage (ll. 693–732), introduced by the (seventh) prayer to Mithras; the appearance of Mithras.

At each stage the ascending initiate is shown what Dieterich calls “liturgical pictures” (“liturgische Bilder”). The identification of the significance of these

It should be noted that Morton Smith was one of the first to connect the ascension through six (or seven) heavens in the Hekhalot literature with the Mithras Liturgy (“Observations on Hekhalot Rabbati,” in Alexander Altman, ed., Biblical and Other Studies [Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1963], 142–60). For further literature see Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkavah Mysticism, 58; 120; 152, n. 6. While a dependency of these texts upon each other is unlikely, the connection between them may have come through Hellenistic syncretism or Neoplatonism.

pictures was one of the major contributions of Dieterich's work (92–95). According to him, intertwined with words and actions, such pictures played a major role in ancient cultic procedures. They are genuine but stylized representations of cultic scenarios, through which the initiate will remember the actual performances he or she participated in. In other words, the seven scenarios constitute a gallery of pictures which together contain the complete program of an ascension for the initiated reader of the text. In this sense one may compare the scenarios with the gallery of pictorial symbols in the mosaics from Ostia, not to mention the cultic program depicted on the Mithraic reliefs and frescoes. At this point (94–95) Dieterich's discussion offers no more than a cautious and suggestive sketch, as he expected forthcoming negative criticism of his daring ideas.²⁸⁸ Today, these ideas can be substantiated by a wealth of material unearthed by archaeologists and interpreted by historians of art and religion. Basically, four ideas deserve to be singled out: (1) the constitutive role of paintings in the performance of rituals, alongside words and actions;²⁸⁹ (2) the conservative function of such pictures, in effect freezing the major parts of a ritual;²⁹⁰ (3) the analogical nature of the pictures showing the unknown through the medium of the known;²⁹¹ (4) the significance of sequences or ²⁸⁸ Ibid., 95: "Man macht sich ja trotz meiner deutlichen Erklärungen vermutlich wieder, wie schon öfter, die Mühe, mich in dem zu widerlegen, was ich nie habe beweisen wollen." Cf. Dieterich's bitter complaint (29–30). Correctly, however, Reitzenstein (HMR, 173–74) praises Dieterich's idea concerning cult images as one of his major achievements.

Ibid., 95: "Wenn ich nun die Reihe der Bilder, in denen die Mithrasliturgie die Vereinigung des Menschen mit Gott gestaltet und aufgefaßt zeigt, zu erläutern und zwar hauptsächlich durch Analogien in der eigentlichen Bedeutung und dem ursprünglichen Zusammenhang verständlich zu machen versuche, so muß ich nochmals ausdrücklich bemerken, daß durch Anführung von Analogien und Parallelen keinerlei Abhängigkeitsverhältnis zwischen dem Wesen und dem anderen Kulte auch nur präjudiziert werden soll."

galleries of pictures interpreting each other and the whole.²⁹² In short, Dieterich conceives of the liturgy as an imaginative performance, in which the practitioner ritually produces ecstatic experiences of a visionary nature.

Merkelbach (Abrasax, vol. 3) provides in his commentary a rather different analysis, although Dieterich's influence is obvious enough. Although he calls the text a "liturgy," he denies any connection with the Mithras cult and associates it with the Alexandrian god Pschai-Aion.²⁹³ Consequently, what he names the "Pschai-Aion-Liturgie" is interpreted throughout as a text of Egyptian religion, to be sure, stemming from hellenized Egypt and influenced by Platonic and Stoic ideas.²⁹⁴ He then identifies the god Pschai-Aion of this liturgy with Sarapis-Aion, another great god of Alexandria, predominant in the Leiden cosmogony (PGM XIII). Treating the "Pschai-Aion-Liturgie" in the same volume²⁹⁵ alongside the god-of-nine-forms (ἐννεάμορφος),²⁹⁶ Merkelbach obtains a broad comparative basis for his construction of an Alexandrian "synthetic" deity named Abrasax.²⁹⁷ The problem with this combination is that of the divine names assembled only Aion occurs in the ML. Also, both texts, the ML and PGM XIII, are rather different and cannot be harmonized as Merkelbach does.

Other problems concern Merkelbach's theory of the origin of the ML. He describes at length the basic world view of late antique astral religion, which reflects mainly Stoicizing ideas about cosmology and astrology.²⁹⁸ This world view, he argues, has been "transposed into a ritual,"²⁹⁹ which was performed much like a drama in a theater. In other words, Merkelbach accepts Dieterich's idea of a "ritual," but he postulates a realistic performance, including theatrical tricks to bring about "magical" effects.³⁰⁰

³⁰⁰ For examples of such tricks, see ibid., 29–32. Already Reitzenstein (HMR, 173) compares the performance with theatrical and cinematic special effects.

Who then produced this “sacred drama”? Merkelbach offers some suggestive ideas which, however, remain entirely speculative, because they have no basis in the text themselves.

“Even a pious Stoic would not have needed a special ceremony to demonstrate the immortalization of the breath of life; philosophically speaking the immortality of the πνεῦμα existed without ceremony. But primitive people had an immense need of bringing their thoughts and hopes to expression by play. They were not satisfied by expressing their ideas through words. Words only would have been to them something merely theoretical and incomprehensible. Thus, they transposed their ideas into performances. What was put before their eyes in a sacred play became a reality to be grasped with one’s own hands; only this was to them clear enough, and what occurred visibly in the play was to them as good as reality.”

For whom was the drama performed? “The drama must have been conceived and composed for a person of high rank....” Originally it was “a ceremony of consecration for a priest of high rank or even a king, which in Egypt was often the same. Later the ritual will have been adapted, so that it could be used for initiations of lower ranks.”³⁰¹

1. First scenario: the planetary deities (ll. 544–55)

The first scenario assumes that the ascent has reached its first stage: “Ὁψη γὰρ ἐκείνης τῆς ἡμέρας καὶ τῆς ὥρας θεῖαν θέσιν” (“for you will see the divine constellation on that day and hour”).³⁰² The practitioner has now been elevated to midair (l. 540). The fortuitous day and hour have been determined (ll. 516, 543) by a horoscope,³⁰³ identifying the constellation of the stars of the day and the hour.³⁰⁴

³⁰² Pap. has τηωρα, ω from ώρα may be corrected from η (= ἡ(μέ)ρα); so Preisendanz, app. crit.

³⁰³ Dieterich (7, app. crit.) mentions the technical term ἀστροθεσία, “star constellation.” Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.237) takes this to be the new birth constellation of the initiate, identifying θέσις with γένεσις; this constellation is to rule over his rebirth and further life, for which see l. 651–52: τὸν τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας καὶ ὥρας ὠρονόμον.

At this point, he is told that he will have his first vision (ὄψη, “you will see”).³⁰⁵ The objects of his vision are described first in a general way: τοὺς πολεύοντας ἀναβαίνοντας εἰς οὐρανὸν θεοὺς, ἄλλους δὲ καταβαίνοντας (“the presiding gods arising into heaven, and others setting”). In the planetary week, these are the gods who control and fix the days and the hours.³⁰⁶ More specifically, the reader is shown a verbal picture which focuses on two elements. The first of these describes the way of the gods through the sun-disk (ll. 547–49): ἡ δὲ πορεία τῶν ὁρωμένων θεῶν διὰ τοῦ δίσκου, πατρός μου, θεοῦ, φανήσεται (“Now the course of the visible gods will appear through the disk of the god, my father.”). According to philosophical cosmology the “visible gods” (οἱ ὁρώμενοι θεοί) are the stars.³⁰⁷ That these gods will appear through the sun-disk is a strange comment,³⁰⁸ unless the author describes a pictorial representation in which the sun illuminates the course of the stars; in ll. 579–82 the sun serves as a kind of gate, through which the stars appear (ἀπὸ τοῦ δίσκου). The sun-disk is of course Helios,³⁰⁹ addressed here by the epithet “my father” (πατήρ μου).³¹⁰

The second focus of the picture (ll. 549–55) is also strange: ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ὁ καλούμενος αὐλός, ἡ ἀρχὴ τοῦ λειτουργούντος ἀνέμου. ὅψῃ γὰρ ἀπὸ τοῦ δίσκου ὡς αὐλὸν κρεμάμενον. (“And in a similar way the so-called pipe, the origin of the ministering wind; for you will see it hanging from the disk like a pipe.”) This part of the vision has given rise to much discussion, even to adventurous speculations.³¹¹

Dieterich’s interpretation (62–64), however, is most careful and contains important clues. He recognizes that some sort of image is being described, for which he refers to monuments of ancient art, in particular the winds on Mithraic monuments. Before getting to these monuments, he points to two texts: (1) a fragment of Anaximander; and (2) some lines in a hymn to Helios (PGM IV.436–66).

Regarding (1), the doxographical summary of Anaximander’s cosmology by Aetius contains an expression, αὐλὸς πρηστήρως, “heat pipe.”³¹² According to Aetius, this expression comes from the cosmology of Anaximander which contained a description of the sun as being full of fire, “which in part appears through an opening like through a heat pipe.”³¹³ This pipe is also the source of thunderstorms and winds.³¹⁴ There can hardly be any doubt that Anaximander’s cosmology, transmitted by Stoic sources, is the origin of the mysterious “pipe” in the ML. By implication, the “pipe” became part of the image that the author of the ML describes. Also, the added comment “so-called” (καλούμενος) seems to indicate that “the pipe” has become a kind of traditional image among those familiar with this material.

Regarding (2), it is obvious that the beginning lines of the hymn to Helios shares some language with the ML: ἀεροφοιτῆτων ἀνέμων ἐποχούμενος αὐραῖς,

³¹² Dieterich, 62, n. 2: “Anaximander nahm an der Sonne und dem Monde eine Öffnung an, durch welche das Feuer ströme wie durch einen αὐλὸς πρηστήρως.” He refers to Diels, Doxographi, 348; 355.b.21–22: ἔχοντα μίαν ἐκπνοὴν οἷον πρηστήρως αὐλόν. See also D.-K. 12 B 4 (I.90.1), translating it “Glutwindröhre.”

Ἦλιε χρυσοκόμα, διέπων φλογὸς ἀκάματον πῦρ, αἰθερίαισι τριβαῖς μέγαν πόλον ἀμφιελίσσων ... ("Borne on the breezes of the wand'ring winds, golden-haired Helios, who wield the flame's unrelenting fire, who turn in lofty paths around the great pole..."). The hymn states common tradition, but neither this nor other hymn fragments speak about "pipes."³¹⁵

As for the Mithraic monuments, it is evident from the collections by Cumont,³¹⁶ Vermaseren,³¹⁷ and Merkelbach³¹⁸ that the four winds are represented as heads of deities blowing air from the four corners of the world,³¹⁹ but none of the reliefs shows a pipe. This is true especially of the stele of Carnuntum, Dieterich's starting point, where he sees the heads of the wind gods blowing into pipes.³²⁰ The nature of Cumont's explanation is, however, puzzling, because the monuments themselves do not show evidence of heads blowing into pipes.³²¹ Perhaps, he relied on a quotation from Arnobius, which he adduces.³²² Finally, Preisendanz's reference (app. crit., ad loc.) to old world maps showing the windpipes turns out to be inconclusive.³²³

In his notes (94, n. 10; 95, n. 10), Cumont adduces Arnobius, Adv. nat. 6.10: Venti... hominum formae sunt bucinarum animantes tortus intestinis et domesticis flatibus, and Porphyry, Antr. nymph. 26.

³²³ The work named is by Konrad Miller, Mappae mundi. Die ältesten Weltkarten (6 vols.; Stuttgart: Roth, 1895–98), vol. 3, fig. 68.

In ll. 550–55 the author moves on to explain the functions of “the pipe,” which serves as “the origin of the ministering wind.” It is important to note that there is only one wind, not the usual four, its function being “service” (λειτουργεῖν).³²⁴ The following lines provide more details of that service: εἰς δὲ τὰ μέρη τὰ πρὸς λίβρα ἀπέραντον οἶον ἀπηλιώτην, ἐὰν ᾗ κεκληρωμένος εἰς τὰ μέρη τοῦ ἀπηλιώτου, καὶ ὁ ἕτερος ὁμοίως εἰς τὰ μέρη τὰ ἐκείνου, ὅψῃ τὴν ἀποφορὰν τοῦ ὁράματος.³²⁵ (“Toward the regions of the west [it is the source of] the unending east wind, when it is assigned to the regions of the east, and in the same way the other [west wind going] toward the regions of that one [scil., the east], you will see the turn-about of the image [scil., the pipe].”)³²⁶ In view of the importance of the directions of these winds elsewhere in the PGM,³²⁷ the one pipe is their sole source, and changes in the direction of the pipe produces changes in the wind. The meaning of the concluding statement (ll. 555–56) is especially controversial.³²⁸ The term ἀποφορά can mean “turning about,” referring to the change of direction of the image,³²⁹ or to the “removal” of the sight altogether.³³⁰

³²⁴ This term occurs only here in the ML; there is, however, a close parallel in IV.1127: χαῖρε, στοιχείων ἀκοπιάτου λειτουργίας δίνῃσις, “Hail, revolution of untiring service by (the) elements” (my translation). Cf. also 1 En. 34:2–3 (OTP 1.29): “There (also) I saw three open gates of heaven; when it blows cold, hail, frost, snow, dew, and rain, through each one of the (gates) the winds proceed in the northwesterly direction. Through one gate they blow good things, but when they blow with force through the (two) other gates, they blow violence and sorrow upon the earth.” Cf. 1 En. 76 (OTP 1.55–56), where twelve winds and their gates are described. In Heb 1:14 angels are described as λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενα.

³²⁵ Cf. E. Riess, “Notes, Critical and Explanatory on the Greek Magical Papyri,” JEA 26 (1940) 53, who punctuates οἶον, ἀπη/λιώτην ἐὰν.

³²⁷ For the southwest wind (λίβ, Latin Africus) see PGM, especially, III.105; IV.552–54, 1605, 2436, 3183; VIII.10; XIII.642, 827, 860; for the east wind (ἀπηλιώτης, Latin subsolanus), see II.105, 113; III.28, 137; IV.58, 552, 1603, 3175; VII.541 (ἀπηλιωτικοῦ), 994 (ἀπηλιω[τικά]); VIII.9 XIII.642, 823, 837, 855; XXII.b.26; XXXVI.214. The verb κληροῦν points to the “assigned” station.

³²⁸ In l. 556 pap. reads ὅψῃ συ δε, which Dieterich (7) and Preisendanz take to be a possible dittography of l. 557; thus they omit συ.

³²⁹ So Dieterich: “so wirst du in ähnlicher Weise die Umdrehung (Fortbewegung) des Gesichtes sehen”; Preisendanz: “das Bild (der Aulosröhre) gewendet sehen”; Festugière (see above, n. 326); Meyer: “you will see the reverse of the sight” (9, n.).

³³⁰ So Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.163): “dann wirst du sehen, wie diese Vision wieder entschwindet.” Cf. V.332–33: ἀπενέγκας αὐτὸ εἰς ἄωρου μνήμα, “taking it [the package] away to the grave of someone untimely dead.”

2. Second scenario: the threat of the planetary gods (ll. 556–68)

Connected by δέ and the reference to vision (ὄψη), the second scenario presumes the same location as previously: ὄψη δὲ ἀτενίζοντάς σοι τοὺς θεοὺς καὶ ἐπὶ σε ὀρμωμένους (“And you will see the gods intently staring at you and rushing at you”). In other words, the second scenario takes place at the same cosmic stage of the planetary deities (cf. ll. 544–47). If the author’s vision is informed by iconography, he would merely shift his focus to another part of the picture. What is in focus now is the hostile nature of the planetary gods which are “staring at him” (ἀτενίζειν)³³¹ and “moving against him” (ὀρμᾶσθαι).³³²

The scenario’s brief description of the threatening nature of the planetary deities during ascension refers to a motif known in a variety of forms from ancient Greek religion,³³³ Hellenistic mystery cults³³⁴ and Gnostic literature,³³⁵ and Jewish apocalypticism and mysticism.³³⁶

³³¹ This term is almost technical in the PGM. See in the ML ll. 556, 629, 657, 693, 712; also IV.3218, 3222; XXXVI.268. Cf. CH I.7, where ἀντώπησέ μοι ([the god] “looked at me”) results in an ecstatic vision.

³³² See for this term ll. 547–48, 557, 567, 571.

³³⁶ For texts and interpretation, see Gruenwald, Apocalyptic and Merkabah Mysticism, 33–37 (on 1 Enoch 14–15: passing through fiery flames), 53–58 (on Asc. Isa.: threat by angels); 87–89 (on Hekhalot Zutrat, Hekhalot Rabbati), 150–52, 163, 185–86; 191–99 (on 3 Enoch); Asc. Isa. 9.1, ed. Enrico Norelli, Ascensio Isaiae (2 vols.; CChr.SA 7–8; Turnhout: Brepols, 1995), 1.335 (Greek version); 2.449–51 (commentary, bibliography). Asc. Isa. 10.23–27 mentions “passwords” for passing through. Schäfer (Übersetzung, 1, §§ 1–2, p. 4): “Als die Fürsten der Merkava und die Šerafim der Feuerflamme mich sahen, richteten sie ihre Augen auf mich. Sogleich schreckte ich zurück, erzitterte, fiel lang hin...” See § 39 and Hekhalot Rabbati, § 247–48 (Schäfer, Übersetzung, 2.220–22). On the whole motif,

Faced with the threat, the initiate is ordered to perform a protective ritual (ll. 557–58), involving first a gesture: σὺ δὲ εὐθέως ἐπίθεες δεξιὸν δάκτυλον ἐπὶ τὸ στόμα (“but you at once put your right finger on your mouth”). This ritual occurs only here in the PGM. It is Egyptian in origin, having an analogy in the motif of the child Harpocrates with his finger in the mouth.³³⁷ As told in the ML, however, the question is which ritual the text envisions. Does the child have the finger in or on the mouth? Is the gesture suggesting silence or adoption? The evidence is far from clear. PGM III.707–8 speaks, in an Egyptian context, of Harpocrates having his finger on the mouth (Ἄρποκράτην ἔχοντα ἐπὶ στόματος [τὸ δακτύ]λιν).³³⁸ According to Plutarch (Is. Os. 16), however, Isis gave him the finger instead of her breast, supposedly putting the finger into his mouth, which suggests a different meaning.³³⁹ Whatever the “original” meaning may be, in the present context the gesture symbolizes silence.³⁴⁰ The right finger is, of course, to be preferred;³⁴¹ that it has to be performed immediately is typical of many other rituals as well.³⁴²

Next (ll. 558–60) comes the recitation of the σιγή-Logos,³⁴³ a prayer cited in full: σιγή σιγή σιγή, σύμβολον θεοῦ ζῶντος ἀφάρτου· φύλαξόν με, σιγή see Johann Maier, “Das Gefährdungsmotiv bei der Himmelsreise in der jüdischen Apokalyptik und ‘Gnosis’,” Kairos 5 (1963) 18–40.

³³⁷ The child Harpocrates/Horus with the finger in the mouth is shown already in the Pyramid texts; see Sethe, Pyramidentexte, §§ 663c, 1214c, 1320c.

³³⁹ Griffiths (Plutarch, 327) comments critically on a theory advocated by Maspéro who took this ritual to symbolize adoption.

³⁴² See ll. 557, 576, 579, 628, 638, 724, 755–57. Cf. for the significance in miracle stories Bultmann, HST, 225; Betz, Lukian, 157, nn. 3–4; BDAG, s.v. εὐθέως, εὐθύς.

³⁴³ The σιγή-Logos seems to be the second prayer after ll. 484–537; it occurs also, in slightly different form, in ll. 573–75, 578, 582, 623. See Heinrich Schmidt, Veteres philosophi quomodo iudicaverint de precibus (RVV 4.1; Gießen: Töpelmann, 1907), 64–65; Odo νεχθειρ θανμελου. ("Silence! Silence! Silence! Symbol of the living imperishable god. Guard me, Silence! NECHTHEIR THANMELOU.")³⁴⁴ The threefold invocation calls forth a deity by that name. Actually, because there are two invocations, the matter is more complicated. Since in the first invocation no other name is given, Silence is to be thus addressed, because it is the manifestation of the deity's presence, rather than a name.³⁴⁵ For exactly this reason, the epithet σύμβολον ("you are a symbol") indicates the status of silence as that of a "symbol." While the conventional invocation of a deity uses "symbols" and "names,"³⁴⁶ this first invocation is different in that there is no name but only two epithets, the first of which is "silence," classified as "symbol"; the second is a theological formula using two attributes: (ὁ) θεὸς ζῶν ἄφθαρτος ("the living imperishable god").³⁴⁷

Casel, De philosophorum graecorum silentio mystico (RVV 16.2; Gießen: Töpelmann, 1919), 105–6; Pieter W. van der Horst, "Silent Prayer in Antiquity," Numen 41 (1994) 1–15 (with bibl.).

³⁴⁵ For silence as a deity, see VII.766; for commanding silence III.198, 204; for silence generating silence IV.1782; IX.12; see also I.87; Hymn 5.31 (and passim); III.228. Cf. CH 1.30–31; XIII.2, 8 (λοιπὸν σιώπησον, ὦ τέκνον, καὶ εὐφήμεσον), 16 (ἡσύχασον, ὦ τέκνον), 22; Ascl. 1, 25, 32; NHC VI.6.56.10–15. See also the peculiar passages in Ignatius, Magn. 8:2, where Christ is called God's λόγος, ἀπὸ συγῆς προελθὼν; Eph. 19:1, mentions the τρία μυστήρια κραυγῆς, ἅτινα ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ θεοῦ ἐπράχθη. For gnostic parallels, see Heinrich Schlier, Religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu den Ignatiusbriefen (BZNW 8; Gießen: Töpelmann, 1929), 6–16, 24–28; William Schoedel, The Epistles of Ignatius (Hermeneia; Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 1985), 120–22; BDAG, s.v., συγῆ.

³⁴⁶ According to Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.), Dieterich and Hopfner treat the statement as a gloss, but this is by no means evident. See Dieterich, 64 n. 3; 233. In the PGM, σύμβολα and ὀνόματα are needed in invocations (see III.701; IV.945, 2292, 2304, 2311, 2322; VII.560, 786, 883; LXX.10). The term σύμβολα is now attested on the gold tablet from Western Sicily (3rd c. BCE [?]); see Riedweg, "Initiation," B 11 (397, line 19). On σύμβολον and σύνθημα, see Dieterich, 213–18, 256–58; Walter Müri, "ΣΥΜΒΟΛΟΝ. Wort- und sachsengeschichtliche Studie," in his Griechische Studien (ed. Eduard Vischer; SBA 15; Basel: Reinhardt, 1976), 1–44; Griffiths, Apuleius, 294–308; Burkert, Ancient Mysteries, 18, 45–47, 90, 98, 100; Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 150–53; idem, Antike und Christentum, 238–39, 243.

³⁴⁷ For the epithet ὁ ζῶν θεός, see IV.959, 1038, 1553; VII.823; XII.79; cf. IV.609. Merkelbach (Abasax, 3.238) believes that the epithet comes from the LXX (Tobit 13:2; Wis 12:1: τὸ γὰρ ἄφθαρτόν σου πνεῦμά ἐστιν ἐν πᾶσιν); the epithet occurs in the NT as well; see Thomas Gelzer et al., Lamella Bernensis. Ein spätantikes Goldamulett mit christlichem Exorzismus und verwandte Texte (Beiträge zur Altertumskunde 124; Stuttgart & Leipzig: Teubner, 1999), 67–68; Aune, Revelation, 1.102; Gustav Stählin, "Beteuerungsformeln im Neuen Testament," NovT 5 (1962) 115–43, esp. 142, n. 2; Martinez, Baptized, 12–15;

The invocation is followed (l. 560) by the petition, φύλαξόν με (“guard me”),³⁴⁸ and concludes with second address, σιγή (“silence”), and voces magicae, νεχθειρ θανμελου,³⁴⁹ which may be intended as the secret name of the deity.³⁵⁰

Further ritual acts in ll. 561–65 mark the climax of the protective ritual and the transition to the next scenario. The practitioner is ordered: ἔπειτα σύρισον μακρόν σ’ σ’, ἔπειτα πόπυσον.³⁵¹ (“Then make the long hissing sound, next make the popping sound.”) As discussed above, these sounds were part of the magical repertoire (see on l. 487). The first is called συριγμός, its performance συρίζειν, a hissing or whistling.³⁵² The second sound is named ποπυσμός, its performance ποπύζειν, a pop-pop sound.³⁵³

Finally, a special formula of voces magicae is to be recited (ll. 562–65): λέγων· προπροφεγγῇ μοριος προφυρ προφεγγῇ νεμεθιρε αρφεντεν πιτητσι μεσω εναρθ ευρκεχω ψυριδαριω τυρε φιλβα.³⁵⁴ Peculiar is that in the ML there are three formulae beginning with προπροφεγγη, but otherwise different (see also ll. 603–4, 714–17). Apparently, the author cites three different formulae, rather than variations of the same formula.³⁵⁵ If so, what then is the function of beginning with προπροφεγγη?³⁵⁶ Why are there at least some similar BDAG, s.v. ζῶω 1.a.ε. Cf. also CH I.9, 21; CI.17; CVIII.14; Ascl. 41. – For ἀφθαρτός, see on ll. 497, 519–20.

For the Egyptian background of the epithet “living god” see Martinez, P. Mich. XIX, 12–15, esp. p. 13, n. 38, and on the ML passage p. 14, n. 38.

³⁴⁸ For this petition, see also l. 661: φύλαξόν με, with the vox magica προσυμηρι. Petitions or orders for protection are, of course, frequent in the PGM. See Preisendanz, 3.198 [index], s.v. φυλάσσω. Cf. 2 Thess 3:3; 1 John 5:21.

³⁴⁹ The vox magica is found only here; it is unexplained.

³⁵⁰ See on this point, Betz, Antike und Christentum, 159–62.

³⁵¹ According to Dieterich (6), the pap. reads σ’ σ’, obviously indicating a long hissing sound. Cf. the doubling of the sound see l. 578: σύρισον β’. See also Preisendanz, “Miszellen,” WSt 41 (1919) 141–42: “Kürzungen.”

³⁵⁴ Cf. Preisendanz, app. crit., ad loc., who suggests that ιοσπροφυρ may be πορφύριος.

³⁵⁵ So rightly Martinez.

³⁵⁶ The term προπροφεγγῇ has been translated by Preisendanz as “the one who shines before” (“Voranleuchtender”), but Eitrem (“Die vier Elemente in der Mysterienweihe,” SO 4 [1926] 39–59, esp. 51) prefers “the one who existed prior to light.” Fauth (Helios Megistos, 27) sees here a possible connection with Mithras the god of fire, for which he cites Vermaseren, Mithras, 104; Mary Boyce, “On Mithra, Lord of Fire,” Acta Iranica 4 (1975)

(sound-)words, with their spelling and place in the sequences different? Why is the author not concerned about consistency in spelling and order? Is the main concern the chanting of similar sounds? So far nobody seems to have found answers to these questions or, assuming that the word division is correct, to the meaning of the individual words. For the purpose of comparison, the three formulae are put side by side below:³⁵⁷

προπροφεγγη	προπροφεγγη	λαμπροφεγγη
μοριος	εμεθαιρε	προπροφεγγη
προφυρ	μοριομοτυρηφιλβα	εμεθιρι
προφεγγη		αρτεντεπι
νεμεθιρε		θηθ
αρψεντεν		μιμεω
πιτητημι		υεναρω
μεωυ		φυρχεχω
εναρθ		ψηρι
φυρχεχω		δαριω
ψυριδαριω		φρη
τυρηφιλβα		φρηλβα

The result of the various procedures is narrated in ll. 565–68: καὶ τότε ὄψῃ τοὺς θεοὺς σοι εὐμενῶς ἐμβλέποντας καὶ μηκέτι ἐπὶ σε ὀρμωμένους, ἀλλὰ πορευομένους ἐπὶ τὴν ἰδίαν τάξιν τῶν πραγμάτων(ν). (“And then you will see the gods looking graciously upon you and no longer rushing at you, but rather going about in their own order of affairs.”) The gods’ gracious look (εὐμενῶς ἐμβλέπειν) is an obvious contrast to their hostile staring (ἀτενίζειν, l. 556). They return to their normal affairs and to their normal course in accordance with the cosmic order.³⁵⁸ With this change, the second scenario comes to its end.

69–75; Julien Ries, “Le culte de Mithra en Iran,” ANRW II.18:4 (1984) 2002–2115, esp. 2767–68.

³⁵⁷ The word division follows Preisendanz.

³⁵⁸ For τάξις as a cosmological term see also IV.693; VII.829. This meaning seems to be rooted in Plato, Tim. 30a (cf. Gorg. 504a); it became technical in Hellenistic cosmology, for which see Ps.-Aristotle, Mundo 391b11; CH I.26; V.3–5; IX.8; XI.7; XII.14,21; XVIII.8; Exc. XX.1; XXIII.16; XXIV.2; XXV.8,14; XXVI.29; Philo, Leg. 2.73; and often (see Borgen, Philo-Index, s.v.). See Löhr, Verherrlichung, 107–8; PGL, s.v. 3.e. Also the apocalyptic literature shows interest in the stability and order of the planetary world (see, esp. 1 En. 2.1, and the passages in Uhlig, JSRHZ 5:6 [1984] 510–11).

3. Third scenario: the sun disk (ll. 569–85)

After the planetary gods have been pacified, the third scenario begins with the usual orientation (ll. 569–71): ἔταν οὖν ἰδῆς τὸν ἄνω κόσμον καθαρὸν καὶ δονούμενον καὶ μηδένα τῶν θεῶν ἢ ἀγγέλων ὀρ<μ>ώμενον... (“Thus when you see that the world above is pure and agitated, and that none of the gods and angels is threatening....”) The references to time and vision of the objects seen lead to the conclusion that the ascending initiate has moved up to a higher stage above the planetary deities. That stage is called by a strange name: ὁ ἄνω κόσμος καθαρὸς καὶ δονούμενος (“the world above, pure and agitated”). Understandably, the higher cosmos is clear of impurities,³⁵⁹ but the meaning of δονούμενος is puzzling.³⁶⁰ In parallel passages, δονεῖν refers to cosmic shaking and agitating, but this meaning does not seem to fit here,³⁶¹ unless it is related to the following warning that thunder is to occur. If this is assumed, the question arises how it is connected with the preceding καθαρὸς (“pure”), and with the following statement, καὶ μηδένα τῶν θεῶν ἢ ἀγγέλων ὀρ<μ>ώμενον (“and none of the gods or angels threatening”).³⁶² In the former instance, δονούμενος seems unrelated, unless one adjusts it by translating καὶ δονούμενος as “but agitated.” The latter instance stands in anticipation of ll. 556–57, speaking of the attack by the planetary gods, except that the angels were not previously mentioned.³⁶³ Therefore, the entire comment, καὶ μηδένα τῶν θεῶν ἢ ἀγγέλων ὀρ<μ>ώμενον, because it interrupts the continu-

³⁵⁹ The expression κόσμος καθαρὸς is hapax in the PGM; for κόσμος in the ML, see ll. also 498, 620, 625, 776. In the context of Hellenistic cosmology, “purity” could mean either that the higher regions of the universe are pure because they consist of ether or fire, or, more specifically, that the higher cosmos is free from the threatening planetary gods. See SVF II # 327 (116.36), # 440 (145.1–14); # 558–573 (176–79); Dio Chrysostom 36.42–44; Philo, Plant. 20; Mos. 1.113; CH I.10; VI.4; XI.19; Proclus, Theol. Plat. 5.34 (ed. Saffrey & Westerink, 5.125,5–10); Plat. Tim. 3.142d (ed. Diehl, 2.11.18–24); cf. already Plato, Phaed. 111b. See Löhr, Verherrlichung, 108–10.

³⁶² The pap. reads ὀρωμενον, the correction to ὀρμώμενον is by Wessely, Dieterich (8), and Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.) in accordance with ll. 557, 567.

³⁶³ Angels (ἄγγελοι) are mentioned only here in the ML, but they can be compared with hostile angels in Jewish apocalyptic and Hekhalot literature (see above, on l. 556).

ation from δονούμενον to the warning of thunder (l. 570), may be a redactional gloss that has been inserted as a reminder of the change which has taken place since ll. 556–57.

Given this situation, the initiate is forewarned (ll. 571–73), προσδόκα βροντῆς μεγάλης ἀκούσεσθαι κτύπον, ὥστε σε ἐκπλαγῆναι. (“Expect a crash of great thunder to be heard, with the result that you are shocked.”). The thunder indicates that the initiate now stands in the sphere where the weather, especially thunderstorms, occur.³⁶⁴ The subject of thunder has fascinated antiquity in many quarters and led to brontology, a department of astrology/astronomy.³⁶⁵

Certainly, therefore, the terror caused by the thunder indicates new danger,³⁶⁶ and a new ritual of protection is required. The formula is set forth in ll. 573–75. First, the σιγή-logos appears again: σὺ δὲ πάλιν λέγε· σιγή σιγή λό(γος).³⁶⁷ (“But you, say again: ‘Silence! Silence!’ [formula].”) Second, and different from l. 558, a statement of self-identification follows (ll. 574–75): ἐγὼ εἰμι <δ> σύμπλανος ὑμῖν ἀστήρ, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ βάθους ἀναλάμπων ὁ Ξυ, ὁ Ξερθευθ. (“I am [the] star, wandering about with you, and shining forth out of the deep, the XY, the XERTHEUTH.”)³⁶⁸ Using the formula of self-identification,³⁶⁹ the initiate presents himself as one of the wandering stars of the firmament.³⁷⁰ The idea of becoming a star after death was, however, popular in many quarters of ancient religions, especially ancient Egypt,³⁷¹

³⁶⁷ Pap. reads the symbol Α, meaning λόγος. The question is whether there is importance in the fact that the call to Silence happens twice instead of thrice, as in l. 558.

³⁶⁸ This reading according to Preisendanz supported by Jordan who points to the parallel in XII.297–98: τὸν Ξεριθωθ, ... τὸν Ξεριφωναρ.

³⁶⁹ See for parallels in the ML, above on ll. 535.

³⁷⁰ The term σύμπλανος is unique in the PGM, and rare in Greek (see LSJ, s.v.). See Paul Capelle, De luna stellis lacteo orbe animarum sedibus (Diss. Halle; Halae Saxorum: Karras, 1917), 19–36 (especially 32, n. 3; 33–36), who refers to important passages in SVF II # 817 (224–25): in modum siderum vagari in aëre; Cicero, Resp. 6.16 (Somn. Scip.); CHX.7; Meleager, Anthol. pal. 5.191.2 (LCL, ed. Paton, 1.222–23); Philostratus, Ep. 56; συμπλανόμαι, “roaming around with (erotic),” Plutarch, Amat. 3 (750B); Ant. 29.2. For ἀστήρ cf. also PGM IV.580, 764 (?).

³⁷¹ The technical term is synastria; see Franz Boll, Kleine Schriften zur Sternkunde des Altertums (ed. Viktor Stegemann; Leipzig: Köhler & Amelang, 1950), 115–24; also Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.239.

Greek religions,³⁷² and Jewish apocalypticism.³⁷³ Dieterich (65) has raised the question about the more precise nature of the stars envisaged. Because they cannot be the planets, he suggests shooting stars, and this may well be correct.³⁷⁴ If so, they would emerge as lights³⁷⁵ out of the depth of the cosmos.³⁷⁶

As a result of performing the preceding formula, the initiate is told that he will view three images related to the sun-disk (576–77): ταῦτά σου εἰπόντος εὐθέως ὁ δίσκος ἀπλωθήσεται. (“Immediately after you have said this, the sun-disk will be expanded.”) This first image is the sun-disk in its fully expanded form. The meaning of ἀπλωθῆναι, a hapaxlegomenon in the PGM, can be established on the basis of the parallel ἀνοίγειν (“open”) in ll. 583–85.³⁷⁷

³⁷² See, in particular, the Orphic gold tablets, which assume that the initiate, “a child of starry heaven,” will after death become a star. On fixed stars, see the comprehensive articles by Franz Boll, “Fixsterne,” PRE 6 (1909) 2407–31; on shooting stars, Wilhelm Gundel, “Kometen,” PRE 11 (1921) 1143–93.

³⁷⁵ ἀναλάμπειν occurs only here in the PGM. The terms ἀναλάμπω, ἀνάλαμψις are known from cosmological contexts (shining of the sun), also as metaphor (light of the mind). See, e.g., Plutarch, Alex. 30.3; Ps.-Heraclitus, Ep. 6.3; T. Levi 18.4; Philo, Opif. 33; Deus 32; Agr. 162; Plant. 40; Migr. 123; Somn. 1.11; Mos. 1.212; 2.27; Spec. 1.90; 2.140; 4.52; Origen, Cels. 5.33.

³⁷⁶ Comparable to the emergence of the seven virgins, see ll. 575, 662–63. Elsewhere in the PGM, βάθος refers to the subterranean sphere, possibly the depth of the sea; see IV.1211; XXXVI.146. See BDAG, s.v. βάθος, 1.

The second image is preceded by a reference to time and the performance of rituals (ll. 577–79): μετὰ δὲ τὸ εἰπεῖν σε τὸν β' λόγον, ὅπου σιγὴ β' καὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα, καὶ σύρισον β' καὶ π(όπ)υσον β'.³⁷⁸ ("After you have said the second formula, where there is 'silence' twice and what follows, make the hissing twice and the popping sound twice.") As the redactional comment clarifies,³⁷⁹ at the beginning comes the formula elsewhere called the "second logos," that is, the σιγὴ σιγὴ-logos cited in l. 573–75.³⁸⁰ The second ritual is the συριγμός, to be done twice, and third the ποππυσμός, also to be done twice (see ll. 561–62).

The instant result is the vision of the second image (ll. 579–82): καὶ εὐθέως ὄψῃ ἀπὸ τοῦ δίσκου ἀστέρας προσερχομένους (πεντα)δακτυλιαίους πλείστους καὶ πιπλῶντας ὅλον τὸν ἀέρα.³⁸¹ ("And immediately you will see a multitude of five-pronged stars proceeding from the sun-disk and filling all the air.") The adverbial εὐθέως is a reminder that the vision is miraculous, when from the sun-disk a plethora of five-pronged stars comes forth, filling the air. The symbol of the five-pronged stars has been used since ancient Egypt³⁸² and has become part of the cosmology of the ancient world.³⁸³ The air is the sphere above the planetary realm in which the shooting stars are flying about.³⁸⁴

The third image follows in ll. 582–85, again preceded by rituals: σὺ δὲ πάλιν λέγε· σιγὴ σιγὴ. ("But you say again 'Silence! Silence!'") Apparently, the σιγὴ-logos of ll. 573–75 is to be repeated. Then the vision occurs (ll. 583–87: καὶ τοῦ δίσκου ἀνοιγέντος ὄψῃ ἄπειρον κύκλωμα καὶ θύρας πυρίνας ἀποκεκλεισμένας.³⁸⁵ ("And when the sun-disk has opened, you will see the

³⁷⁹ The wording, ὅπου σιγὴ β' καὶ τὰ ἀκόλουθα, is typical of redactional commentary.

³⁸⁰ The pap. reads σιγὴ β'. Dieterich (8) assumes that the "second formula" (ll. 558–59), the pronouncement of σιγὴ σιγὴ σιγὴ three times, is identical with the one in ll. 573–75, which has σιγὴ σιγὴ twice.

³⁸¹ Pap. reads ε' δακτυλίων. Cf. the discussion by Wilhelm Kroll, Ph. 54 (1895) 562–63. – Eitrem proposes προσερχομένους.

³⁸⁴ For the air, see ll. 508, 541, 693. How the air is related to "ether" (αἰθήρ [l. 515]) is unclear. See Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 89; Kingsley, Ancient Philosophy, 15–35.

³⁸⁵ Pap. has ἀνοιγέντος, which Dieterich (8) reads as ἀνοιγέντος, but why Preisendanz keeps ἀνοιγέντος is unclear because σι/υ is one of the most common phonetic exchanges boundless circle and its fiery doors shut tight.”) The opening of the sun-disk means the same as ἀπλωθήσεται (l. 576–77) and must not be confused with the opening of the sun’s doors which is to occur later (ll. 625–26). The question is whether we are to think of two doors or of two wings of one door. The image suggests the latter which has a parallel even in Homer.³⁸⁶ If ἄπυρον is to be read, one would have to conclude that the fire is behind the closed doors;³⁸⁷ thus it is invisible, and the sun-disk appears as fireless.³⁸⁸ If, however, ἄπειρον is correct, as we prefer, it would point to the boundlessness of the κύκλωμα. With this, the third scenario is concluded.

4. Fourth scenario: the opening of the doors to the world of the gods (ll. 585–628)

Compared with the previous scenarios the fourth one is distinguished by several extraordinary features. At the beginning, following a ritual of closing the eyes, stands the recitation of the “third prayer,” addressed to the god Aion: σὺ δὲ εὐθέως δίωκε τὸν ὑποκείμενον λόγον καμμύων σου τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς, “At once close your eyes and recite the following prayer.” While the com-

(so Martinez, referring to Gignac, Grammar, 1.272–73). Also ἀπυρον, read by the pap., is disputed, but Preisendanz (WSr 41 [1919] 143) defends it against Dieterich’s (8) correction to ἄπειρον, and Diels’ to διάπυρον; F. Zucker (ByZ 31 [1931] 362) ἔμπυρον (“feurig, flammend”). Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.168) follows Dieterich; Martinez agrees: “fireless does not make sense here, and υ and ει in the Greek of this period sounded like our long e and were exchanged (not nearly so frequently as οι/υ, however (see Gignac, Grammar, 1.273–73). On the important cosmological term ἄπειρον see Walter Burkert, “Iranisches bei Anaximander,” RhM 106 (1963) 97–134; repr. in Kleine Schriften II: Orientalia (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2003), 192–229, esp. 204, 207–11, 213–14, 220, 227.

The pap. reads ἀποκεκλιμένας, corrected by Dieterich (8) to ἀποκεκλιμένας.

³⁸⁷ Pap. has ἀποκεκλισμένας. For the “fiery doors” (θύραι πυρίνας), see ll. 625–26, 662; cf. 1 En. 14:15–22; 71:5–7; 75:4. That the sun consists of fire was the teaching of philosophy since the Presocratics (Anaximenes, Parmenides, Empedocles); see D.-K. 3.384, index s.v. ἥλιος. For πυρίνος as referring to the highest sphere of the deity, see ll. 521, 584, 589, 637, 638. That the sun-disk has doors reminds Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.240) of the stage in the theater, but it could just as well a pictorial representation of some kind. For the concept of heavenly doors, see Lucian, Icar. 22–27 and the rich collection of material in Weinreich, Religionsgeschichtliche Studien, esp. 239, 343–70.

mand to perform a ritual at once at the beginning of a scenario' is familiar from earlier instances, but the order to close the eyes is new.³⁸⁹

The prayer to be recited is called "third" (λόγος γ').³⁹⁰ It is a petitionary prayer addressed to the god Aion whose name is mentioned in the prayer (l. 594).³⁹¹ The prayer (ll. 587–616) shows the usual composition, opening with an invocation (ll. 587–88), followed by an aretalogical list of epithets (ll. 588–603), a petition (ll. 603–4), a statement of need (ll. 605–6), and a list of secret names (ll. 606–16).

The invocation uses the formula: ἐπάκουσόν μου, ἄκουσόν μου, κύριε, "Give ear to me, hearken to me, O lord." The terms are technical in prayer formulae,³⁹² and, as in the previous prayers, no name is used, but only the divine title κύριος ("lord").³⁹³ Also, the self-identification of the petitioner is offered by way of the symbol Δ, signifying τοῦ δεῖνα τῆς δεῖνα, "N.N."³⁹⁴ The aretalogy (ll. 588–602) takes the form of 21 epithets,³⁹⁵ the first being a participle clause revealing the reason for calling this deity: ὁ συνδήσας πνεύματι τὰ πύρινα κληῖθρα τοῦ (τετρα)λιζώματος ("you who have bound together with your spirit the fiery bars of the fourfold root"). Disputed readings of the papyrus have produced controversy regarding the meaning.³⁹⁶ The problem ³⁸⁹ Further instruction is given below, ll. 617–20 (cf. for the opening of the eyes l. 624). For this gesture see IV.177, 586, 958. It is attested in the LXX, the NT, also in Philo, Somn. 1.164–65: καμύσαντες τὸ τῆς ψυχῆς ὄμμα (note the context of mystery-cult language). Cf. 1 En. 1:2: "... while his eyes were open, and he saw." See BDAG, s.v. καμύω; Thomas Ohm, Die Gebetsgebärden der Völker und das Christentum (Leiden: Brill, 1948), 44, 101, 188–90.

³⁹⁰ Pap. has γ. The comment belongs to the redactional numbering of the prayers; see ll. 486–537 (first), 558–60, 573–75, 582–85 (second prayer).

³⁹² See for other instances, IV.786 (ML), 1064, 1787, 1948, 3064, 3227, 3268, etc.; further instances in Preisendanz, 3.92 (index), s.v. ἐπακούειν; BDAG, s.v. ἐπακούω (with bibliography).

³⁹³ The title κύριος is frequent in the PGM; in the ML it occurs ll. 588, 631, 639, 640, 642, 687, 713, 717, 718, 804. See Preisendanz, 3.126 (index), s.v. κύριος; BDAG, s.v., 2.b (bibliography); Dieter Zeller, "Kyrios," DDD 492–97 (bibliography). Cf. δεσπότης, IV.521, 713.

³⁹⁵ Perhaps, the number is significant: 3 X 7; see Dieterich, 65.

³⁹⁶ Pap. reads κληῖθρα, which Dieterich (8) reads as κλεῖθρα (followed by Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.166). See also Wilhelm Crönert, Memoria Graeca Herculensis (Leipzig: Teubner, 1903; repr. Hildesheim: Olms, 1963), 39, n. 3. Especially difficult has been the reading of the pap. ΤΟΤΑΊΖΩΜΑΤΟΣ, first read by Wessely as ΔΔΙΖΩΜΑΤΟΣ, connected with τετραγώνου; Dieterich (Abraxas, 48; Mithrasliturgie, 8) reads τοῦ οὐρανοῦ διζώματος ("des Himmels, Zweileibiger," ["of the heaven, of two bodies"]); Kroll and Diels (in Dieterich [8]) read διαζώματος (agreed by Burkert [in Betz, GMPT, 49, n. 84]); Crönert (StPP 4 [1905] 100) has τετραδίσματος. Preisendanz (WSI 41 [1919] 143–44) reads τετραλιζώματος may be solved, if the readings relate to the Aion theology in other parts of the ML. Since this theology shows influences of Stoic cosmology, the terminology should be related to this possible background.

The expression δ συνδήσας πνεύματι could be derived from a stoicizing cosmology: συνδεσμός occurs in the cosmology of Chrysippus, but the connection with πνεῦμα is not attested.³⁹⁷ However, the expression might not be only Stoic, since the question of which bond holds the cosmos together was discussed by the Presocratics,³⁹⁸ Plato,³⁹⁹ the Stoics,⁴⁰⁰ Philo,⁴⁰¹ the Hermetica,⁴⁰² and the NT.⁴⁰³ The term τὰ πύρινα κλῆθρα (“the fiery bars”) refers to the bars locking the doors of the sun (l. 584).⁴⁰⁴ The hardest problem for interpretation is the term τοῦ τετραλιζώματος, if that is the right reading. As Eitrem and Merkelbach affirm, the change from the letter ρ to λ can happen easily, so that τετραριζώματος is a strong possibility.⁴⁰⁵ The four roots, how-and translates “des viermal gebunden Gürtels” (similarly Weinreich [in Dieterich, 223], “viermal gewundener Gürtel” [“belt wound fourfold”]; whereas Hopfner has “des vierfach gestützten Himmels” [“of the heaven supported fourfold”]). Eitrem and Merkelbach correct the spelling to τετραριζώματος, but translate differently: “the roots of the four elements” (Eitrem), “des auf den vier Wurzeln (Säulen) ruhenden Alls” (“of the universe standing on the four roots [pillars]”) (Merkelbach).

Hear first the four roots of all things;
 shining Zeus, life-bringing Hera, Aidoneus and Nestis who with her tears fills the springs of mortal men with water.

What appears here in a poetic form became part of Hellenistic cosmologies, in which the fiery sun, the term συνδεῖν, and even the κληδοῦχος ("key-holder") have their place.⁴⁰⁷ Merkelbach's comment calls attention to their syncretistic nature.⁴⁰⁸ Accepting the reading τετραλιζώματος as equalling τετραριζώματος, he bases an Egyptian interpretation on the reference to the four pillars (τέσσαρες στύλισκοι) in l. 669. "According to the Egyptian viewpoint the world rests on four pillars, and these are rooted in four ῥιζώματα."⁴⁰⁹ Indeed, the combination of the older Egyptian worldview with a Hellenistic cosmology would fit as part of the syncretistic Aion-theology of the ML.

Following the first epithet, the remainder of the aretology comprises 20 epithets (ll. 590–602), each of them combining a Greek honorific title with non-Greek voces magicae. These epithets, all of them relating to fire (πῦρ), light (φῶς) and spirit (πνεῦμα), when discussed one by one, throw further light on the syncretistic Aion-theology of the ML.⁴¹⁰

Pythagoras: ἀέανου φύσεως ῥίζωμα (D.-K. 58 B 15 [I.455.10]); CH XVI.4 refers to fire, water and earth as coming from one root (ρίζα).

⁴⁰⁷ See Kirk & Raven, 327–30: "The Four Roots and Love and Strife;" also 332–34, and furthermore 370, 376, 380–81, 383, 399, 432. For Dike and Ananke as κληδοῦχος see Parmenides (D.-K. 28 B 1 [I.229.9]; Kirk & Raven, 284, # 359): τῶν δὲ Δίκη πολύποινος ἔχει κληίδας ἀμοιβούς. Cf. Matt 16:19 (δώσω σοι τὰς κλείδας τῆς βασιλείας τῶν οὐρανῶν); 23:13 (κλείετε τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν ἀνθρώπων).

⁴⁰⁸ Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.240.

⁴⁰⁹ Ibid. As for the Egyptian sources, Merkelbach refers to Dieter Kurth, "Den Himmel stützen". Die 'Tw3pt' Szenen in den ägyptischen Tempeln der griechisch-römischen Epoche (Bruxelles: Fondation Égyptologique Reine Élisabeth, 1975), 90–99. See also Fauth, Helios Megistos, 15.

⁴¹⁰ See Dieterich, 65–67. Remarkably, the great encomium to Wisdom (σοφία) in Wis 7:22–23 (LXX) contains 20 epithets describing the spirit (πνεῦμα); the relationship to philosophical Aion theology is evident from many parallels, especially the formula in v. 18. Cf. furthermore Proclus' Hymn 1 (to Helios), ll. 1–2: Κλυθι, πυρὸς νοεροῦ βασιλεῦ, χρυσήνιε Τιτάν, κλυθι, φάους ταμία...; for commentary see Lewy, Chaldean Oracles, 491–93; van den Berg, Proclus' Hymns, 152–56.

πυρίπολος (“fire-burning”) is found only here in the PGM. LSJ (s.v.), refers to πυρίπολος as associated with lightning (κεραυνός) in Euripides. Suppl. 640.

πεντιτερουνη is corrected by the scribe from πεντετερουνη; it is unexplained and not attested elsewhere in the PGM.

φωτὸς κτίστα (οἱ δέ· συγκλεῖστα) σεμεσιλαμ φωτὸς κτίστης (“creator of light”) is unique in the PGM, but may be related to Parmenides’ idea that fire created light (D.-K. 28 A 34 [I.223.35–36]; Kirk & Raven, 278–81); there may be a connection with Pythagoras’ “ten opposite principles,” one of which is φῶς-σκότος (cf. Kirk & Raven, 257, # 328). Cf. XIII.334–37. Interesting is the redactional gloss: οἱ δέ· συνκλεῖστα (“others have: confiner”); the pap. has συνκλιστα. Perhaps this gloss is motivated by κλήθρα l. 589; cf. συγκλείειν, XIII.360.

σεμεσιλαμ is a known Semitic epithet, meaning “eternal sun”; for passages in PGM see Preisendanz, 3.230 (index) s.v.; for further material see Adolf Jacoby, “Ein Berliner Chnubisamulett,” ARW 28 (1930) 269–85, esp. 276–81; Bonner, Studies, 58; Delatte and Derchain, Les intailles, 328 (index); Michel, Gemmen, ## 310, 311, 312 and index; Daniel and Maltomini, Supplementum Magicum, 1.27–28 (n. 10.4); Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.209; Fauth, Helios Megistos, 26–27, 29, 73, 77, 85, 115, 176; Maria G. Lancellotti, “ΣΕΜΕΣ(Ε)ΙΛΑΜ. Una messa a punto,” ZPE 132 (2000) 248–54 (bibl.).

The adjective πυρίπνους (“fire-breathing”) occurs also in IV.2559, 2727; VII.831; LXXVII.19; πυριπνέος I.34.

ψυρινφευ appears only here in PGM; cf. ψιρινθ, IV.341.

πυρίθυμε ιαω

The adjective πυρίθυμος (“fire-spirited”) occurs only here in the PGM; according to the TLG it is a hapaxlegomenon.

ιαω names Iao, frequently mentioned in the PGM; see Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.3–4, 29, 35, 42–44; 213, 214, 215; Fauth, Helios Megistos, 264 (index); David Aune, “Iao,” RAC 17 (1996) 1–12.

πνευματόφως ωαῖ

The adjective (“spirit-light,” or “shining spirit” [LSJ]) occurs only here.

ωαῖ may be a variation of ιαω (palindrome?); see III.573, 574, 575, 582.

πυριχαρῆ ελουρε

The adjective πυριχαρῆς (“rejoicing in fire” [LSJ]) occurs only here in the PGM; according to the TLG it is a hapaxlegomenon.

Pap. reads ελουρε, a hapax, but Martinez considers ερουρε; ερου is attested in combination IV.672, 1589; V.432 and may be related to the decan Ἐρού or Ἐρώ (see below on l. 672; for combinations with ερου see Preisendanz, index, 3.220, 254).

Preisendanz, however, reads ελουρε and takes it to be a vocative ἔλουρε (αἶλουρε, “cat”), assuming an exchange αι/ε. The connection with αἶλουρος (“cat”) was seen already by Wessely and Dieterich (8, app. crit.). Dieterich (8, 223) has doubts, however, whether among all the voces magicae suddenly a Greek term should occur; he, therefore, takes it to be a scribal addition. Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.240: "Der Sonnengott ist der große Kater;" so also Harrauer, Meliouchos, 13, n. 5, referring to the cat-spells in III.1–164; IV.9–10, 1648; VII.846; XII.107.

Martinez observes that πυριχαρῆ could be a vocative as well; -ῆ as a vocative ending is attested for Koine Greek (Gignac, Grammar, 2.137).

καλλιφως αἶαι

The attribute occurs only here ("light-beauty"); according to the TLG it is a hapaxlegomenon, but cf. καλλιφεγγῆ at PGM IV.1303.

αἶαι is found only here, unexplained. Cf. αἶαζαεισθαλιχ, VII.819; for other combinations with αἶα- see Preisendanz, 3.244 (index). Brashear ("Greek Magical Papyri," 3578) calls attention to the Jewish angel named Azza.

αἰών is apparently used here as an epithet (the pap. reads αἰών), but of course the name Aion is known from the ML elsewhere (see at ll. 520–21). Dieterich (66–67, 233) refers to the images of Aion-Kronos, and to bibliography.

Dieterich (8) reads ακβα, now affirmed by Martinez; the epithet occurs only here. Preisendanz reads αχβα, which Fauth (Helios Megistos, 30) explains as a combination of Egyptian Ah ("Glanz") Ba ("soul").

φωτοκράτωρ πεππερ πρεπεμπιπι

This epithet ("ruler of light," LSJ: "lord of light") occurs only here; according to the TLG it is a hapaxlegomenon.

πεππερ πρεπεμπιπι is explained by Fauth (Helios Megistos, 30) as an anaphorical manipulation of Pre, the Demotic name of the sun-god Re, ending with πιπι, the pseudo-reproduction of the Hebrew tetragrammaton יהוה. See also III.575 (cf. 335); IV.1984–85; XVII.a.1–2. For the problem see Saul Lieberman, Greek in Jewish Palestine (New York: Jewish Theological Seminary, 1942), 120, n. 38; Marc Philonenko, "L'anguipède alectorocéphale et le dieu IAO," CRAI (1979) 291–304; Meyer, in Betz, GMPT, 49, n. 85; Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.240–41) who refers to Jerome, Ep. 25 (cited in Abrasax, 2.29), and Paul de Lagarde, Onomastica sacra (repr. of the 1887 ed.; Hildesheim: Olms, 1966), 228–29. Jordan sees here an imperfect palindrome μεπεμερπεμπεμ.

φνουηνοχ is unexplained, and is found only here.

Pap. reads φωτοδῶτα, corrected by Dieterich (9, 223) to φωτοδότα, but Preisendanz keeps φωτοδῶτα. The attribute φωτοδότης ("light-giver") occurs also in Simplicius, In Epict. 1.410 (ed. Hadot). Preisendanz compares IV.3235: πυριδῶτα (pap. has πυριδωρα). The vox magica is missing.

πυρισπόρε αρει εἵκιτα

The adjective πυρισπόρος (“fire-sower”) occurs only here in the PGM, but according to the TLG it is also attested as attribute of Dionysus in Hymn. Orph. 45, line 1; 52, l. 2; Oppianus, Cyn. Book 4, l. 304.

αρει εἵκιτα are unexplained hapaxlegomena.

πυρίκλονε γαλλαβαλβα

The pap. reads πυριχλone, corrected by Dieterich (8; cf. idem, Abraxas, 49: πυριχλone).

The adjective πυρίκλονος (“fire-thronging” [LSJ]) occurs only here; cf. l. 621: κλόνος.

φωτοβία ιαιαιω

The pap. reads φωτοβία ιαιαιω, corrected by Dieterich to φωτόβιε, αιαιω, Preisendanz-Henrichs to φωτοβίαιε αιω. Martinez takes φωτοβία as a vocative of φωτοβίας (first declension, masc.; see LSJ, s.v. (“powerful of light”), found only here.

αιω may be a variation of ιαω see l. 593; so Crönert, StPP 4 (1905) 100; Michel, Gemmen, ## 1, 267, 282, 471.

πυριδῖνα πυριχι βοοσηια

The pap. reads πυριδεινα. The adjective πυριδῖνος (“fire-whirling”) is found only here.

πυριχι βοοσηια are unexplained hapaxlegomena; Preisendanz suggests πυριχι[τών].

φωτοκινήτα σανχερωβ

The attribute φωτοκινήτης (“light-mover”) is found only here.

σανχερωβ is found only here; Dieterich (223), Jacoby (apud Preisendanz, app. crit., ad loc.) and Brashear (“Greek Magical Papyri,” 3589) suggest the interpretation σαν Χερουβ.

κεραυνόκλονε ιη ωη ιωηω

The adjective κεραυνόκλονος (“lightning-shaker”) occurs only here; cf. l. 621: κλόνος and above πυρίκλονε.

The vowel sequence ιη ωη ιωηω is unexplained.

φωτός κλέος βεεγένητε

The expression φωτός κλέος (“light-famous”) is found only here. Pap. reads βεεγένητε, which Dieterich (10; also Abraxas, 49,5) takes to be βαῖεγέννητε, meaning “Leben-gezeugter” oder “Lebenerzeuger,” “life-begotten or life-begetter” (from Egyptian βαῖ meaning “life” or “soul”), a word inserted by an Egyptian magician-redactor.

Preisendanz keeps βεεγενητε.

αὔξησῖφως σουσινεφι

The attribute αὔξησῖφως (“light-increasing”), with trema in the pap, appears only here. σουσινεφιεν is unexplained; Dieterich (10) reads σουσινεφι as in IV.602; XII.293: σουσηνη; σουσι XLI.3; LXXII.35: [εφε]. According to Dieterich (10), Jordan and Martinez, there is indeed a space between σουσινεφι and εν, which suggests ἐν(for ἐμ)πυρισχησιφως (as in LSJ, s.v. ἐμπυρισχησιφως, “deriving light from the empyrean”).

ἐνπυρισχησίφως σουσίνεφι ἀρενβαραζει μαρμαρεντεν

For the attribute ἐνπυρισχησίφως see above. Preisendanz (see also in Dieterich, 223) prefers σουσινεφιν πυρισχησίφως ("der Licht durch Feuer erhält"), whereupon follows the expansion σουσινεφιαρεν.

σουσίνεφι ἀρενβαραζει μαρμαρεντεν: the vores magicae are found only here, but see l. 601 for σουσίνεφι; combinations using μαρμαρ- are found elsewhere.

Thus ends the invocation; the following attribute ἀστροδάμα, without a vox magica, belongs to the following petition.⁴¹¹ The prayer to Aion leads to the presentation of the petition (ll. 603–4) and the reason for the petition (ll. 604–6). The transition from the preceding aretology to the petition seems to be provided by the address of the god as ἀστροδάμα ("subduer of stars").⁴¹² The petition itself is brief: ἀνοιξόν μοι ("open [for] me"), referring to the closed doors of the sun (ll. 583–85).⁴¹³ Following the petition is a recitation of the προπροφегγη-formula: προπροφегγη εμεθειρε μδριομοτυρηφιλβα.⁴¹⁴ The question, which, given our present knowledge, cannot be answered, is whether this formula is to be recited here in an abbreviated version, or whether the abbreviation is to be completed in accordance with one of the longer versions (see above, on ll. 562–65).

The reason for the petition is given in a long sentence in ll. 604–10, containing two statements, introduced by: ὅτι ἐπικαλοῦμαι ἔνεκα τῆς κατεπειγούσης καὶ πικρᾶς καὶ ἀπαραιτήτου ἀνάγκης ... ("for I invoke, because of the pressing and bitter and inexorable necessity ..."). The term ἐπικαλεῖσθαι ("invoke") is technical in prayer language and occurs in the PGM frequently.⁴¹⁵ The subsequent statement is another instance of the "ananke formula" (see ll. 503–4, 526–27, 534–35). The related statement

⁴¹² The attribute ἀστροδάμας appears only here in the PGM. Cf. Orph. Frag. 47 (ed. Kern; D.-K. I, 18, 6; Zuntz, Persephone, 346–47 [tablet C]): τὴν πάντα δαμασά. This tablet C was re-edited by Alberto Bernabé and Ana Isabel Jiménez San Cristóbal, Instrucciones para el más allá. Las laminillas órficas de oro (Madrid 2001), 273–77: παντοδαμάστα; see also Tablet A1–2, line 4, and on it Zuntz, Persephone, 313–17. Furthermore, Epimenides B 2 (D.-K. I, 33, 4).

⁴¹³ Cf. in the ML also ll. 662 (opening of doors), 624 (opening of the eyes). Commands to open (ἀνοίγειν) occur often in the PGM (see esp. IV.968, 1180; XIII.327–33; XXXVI.298, 312–20; LXII.27–31). The whole matter is related to the Hellenistic miracle topos of door openings; see Otto Weinreich, "Türöffnungswunder bei Zauber und Gebet," in his Religionsgeschichtliche Studien (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1968), esp. 183–89, 201–4; Betz, Lukian, 169–71 (with further bibliography).

⁴¹⁴ The pap. reads μδριο; according to Preisendanz (app. crit.) the papyri often read 8 (or: oo) for the letter omicron (Jordan offers omega with underscoring). Preisendanz reads the formula as μοριομοτυρηφιλβα. For τυρηφιλβα, see also l. 565.

regarding the deity called upon seems well-constructed and looks like a quotation from another context:

τὰ μὴδέπω χωρήσαντα εἰς θνητὴν φύσιν μὴδὲ φρασθέντα ἐν διαρθρώσει ὑπὸ ἀνθρωπίνης γλώσσης ἢ θνητοῦ φθόγγου ἢ θνητῆς φωνῆς ἀθάνατα ζῶντα καὶ ἐντιμα ὀνόματα.

the immortal names, living and honored, which have not yet passed into mortal nature nor have been declared in articulate speech by human tongue or mortal speech or mortal sound.

This strange statement, which is unique in the PGM,⁴¹⁶ is formulated in parallel lines and contains a theory about the nature of the divine vowel sequence to follow. Accordingly, mortal nature (φύσις)⁴¹⁷ corresponds to articulate speech (γλῶσσα),⁴¹⁸ mortal sound (φθόγγος),⁴¹⁹ and mortal voice (φωνή). Therefore, the truly divine names of the gods must be totally different,⁴²⁰ that is, pure sound as in the vowel sequences (ll. 610–16).

Outside of the PGM, however, there are similar statements reflecting a background in prophecy or mystery-cult ideas.⁴²¹ Especially important is the parallel in 1 Cor 2:9:

⁴¹⁶ Cf., however, XIII.763–64: τὸ κρυπτὸν ὄνομα καὶ ἄρρητον (ἐν ἀνθρώπου στόματι λαλῆσαι οὐ δύναται). See for discussion and further materials my article, “Secrecy in the Greek Magical Papyri,” Antike und Christentum, 152–74.

⁴¹⁷ On the phrase θνητὴ φύσις, see ll. 502, 533.

⁴¹⁸ The pap. reads διαρθρώσει, corrected by Usener (in Dieterich, 11) and Kroll (Ph. 53 [1894] 421) to διαρθρῶσει. The term διάρθρωσις (“articulation”) is technical in discussions of language theory; see Plato, Prot. 322a; Leg. 12.963b; Aristotle, Part. 2.17.660a; LSJ, s.v.. For the use of φράζειν in connection with ὄνομα, see XIII.640–41: ἐφελκυσάμενος πνεῦμα πάσαις ταῖς αἰσθήσεσι φράσον τὸ ὄνομα τὸ πρῶτον ἐνὶ πνεύματι ἀπηλιώτη; for φράζειν cf. also I.91, 319; IV.198–200, 945, 1971; XIII.641. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.241; cf. 1.148) refers to a parallel in the mathematician Nicomachus of Gerasa (2nd c. CE), where he says that the theurgists invoke the gods συγμοῖς τε καὶ πομπυσμοῖς καὶ ἀνὰ ἄνθρωποις (ἐν ἀνθρώποις codd.) καὶ ἀσυμφώνοις ἤχοις (Musici scriptores Graeci, ed. K. Jan [BiTeu; Leipzig: Teubner, 1895], 277: Excerpta ex Nicomacho 6). For further material see Willy Theiler, “Die Sprache des Geistes in der Antike,” in: Sprachgeschichte und Wortbedeutung. Festschrift für Albert Debrunner (Bern: Francke, 1954), 431–40; Klaus Thraede, “Inspiration,” RAC 18 (1998) 329–65.

⁴¹⁹ For the use of φθόγγος see ll. 745; also VII.775, 778; XII.253; XIII.393, 545–46, 776; XXI.12.

⁴²⁰ The expression ἐντιμα ὀνόματα occurs in the singular also IV.3272.

⁴²¹ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.241) points to the parallel in Thessalos of Tralles (ed. Friedrich), prooemium, p. 23, line 2; also Totti, Texte, 117 (# 45): in the description of a visit with Asclepius, the officiating priest causes the god to appear by invoking him by his secret names: προσαγαγὼν διὰ τῶν ἀπορρήτων ὀνομάτων τὸν θεόν, “bringing forth the god through his ineffable names.”

ἃ ὁφθαλμός οὐκ εἶδεν καὶ οὖς οὐκ ἤκουσεν καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίαν ἀνθρώπου οὐκ ἀνέβη, ἃ ἡτοίμασέν ὁ θεὸς τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτοῦ.

What the eye has not seen and the ear has not heard, and in the human heart has not arisen (this is) what God has provided for those who love him.

The passage, interpreting the revelation of God's wisdom (v. 7–9a), is introduced as a quotation from scripture, but no such scripture verse can be identified in extant texts. This does not mean that such a text could not have existed.⁴²² There are similar but not identical passages in the apocalyptic and gnostic Apocrypha. The origin of the passage constitutes an unresolved problem.⁴²³

With the vowel sequences (ll. 610–16) the prayer to Aion has come its end.⁴²⁴ What follows in ll. 617–20 is an interesting instruction concerning performance of recitation. Several items are stipulated, the first of which is: ταῦτα πάντα λέγε μετὰ πυρὸς καὶ πνεύματος. ("Recite all of these with fire and spirit.") Apparently, this instruction refers to rhetorical enthusiasm, corresponding to fire and spirit mentioned in the prayer, and comparable to Paul's reference to ἀπόδειξις πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως ("demonstration of spirit and power," 1 Cor 2:4).⁴²⁵

The second rule says that: ... τὸ πρῶτον ἀποτελῶν, εἶτα ὁμοίως τὸ δεύτερον ἀρχόμενος, ἕως ἐκτελέσης τοὺς ζ' ἀθανάτους θεοὺς τοῦ κόσμου⁴²⁶ ("... the first time performing to the end; then in the same way when you begin the second time, until you have gone through the seven immortal gods of the universe"). How is this to be understood? Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.)

⁴²² Cf. also the contrasts in 1 Cor 2:4: ὁ λόγος μου καὶ τὸ κήρυγμά μου οὐκ ἐν πειθοῖς[ς] σοφίας [λόγοις] ἀλλ' ἐν ἀποδείξει πνεύματος καὶ δυνάμεως.

⁴²³ For a collection of parallel passages and discussion of the problems, see Dietrich-Alex Koch, Die Schrift als Zeuge des Evangeliums. Untersuchungen zur Verwendung und zum Verständnis der Schrift bei Paulus (BHTh 69; Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck], 1986), 36–41; Wolfgang Schrage, Die Elia-Apokalypse (JSRZ 5:3; Gütersloh: Mohn, 1980), 195–96; idem, Der erste Brief an die Korinther (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum NT, VII; Zürich: Benziger; Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1991), 1.238–46. The passage from the ML will have to be added to these collections.

⁴²⁴ David Jordan's observation (letter of December 17, 2002) is important at this point: "Several of the clusters of vowels have diacriticals, again as if to show pronunciation, e.g. 615 ὄηεση or 616 ὠή εὐ ὁό. These marks are faint in the photograph and were probably written in a lighter ink, perhaps even added later by a second scribe. It is sometimes hard to distinguish them from natural discolorations on the fibers. Perhaps they were unrecognizable before the Paris conservators removed the shellac from the papyrus."

suggests that the 23 times 7 letters refer to 23 epithets in the list ll. 590–605, but this list has only 21 epithets. Or is, more likely, the vowel sequence to be chanted seven times, so that the seven gods of the universe are addressed?

Whatever the answer may be, following the conclusion of the prayer, the text announces its effect (ll. 620–23): ταῦτά σου εἰπόντος ἀκούσει βροντῆς καὶ κλόνου τοῦ περιέχοντος. (“When you have said these things, you will hear thunder and shaking in the surrounding realm.”) Claps of shattering thunder⁴²⁷ figure prominently into events in the cosmic realm.⁴²⁸ It certainly will shake up the initiate: ὁμοίως δὲ σεαυτὸν αἰσθηθήσῃ ταρασσόμενον (“in the same way you will experience yourself being shaken”).⁴²⁹

Confronting the terror, the initiate is to repeat the σιγή-logos: σὺ δὲ πάλιν λέγε· σιγὴ λό(γος).⁴³⁰ (“But you say again: Silence (prayer).” The prayer so-called has been recited before (see ll. 558–60, 573, 582), but the wording is somewhat different. Which version should then be used? Most likely is the first complete form (ll. 558–60).

Then the practitioner is told to open his eyes and experience the vision (ll. 624–28): εἴτα ἀνοιξον τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς καὶ ὄψῃ. (“Then open your eyes, and you will see.”) The opening of the eyes ends their closing which had been ordered at ll. 586–87. As usual, the vision is announced by ὄψῃ. Its object is presented as a description of an image: ἀνεωγυῖας τὰς θύρας καὶ τὸν κόσμον τῶν θεῶν,⁴³¹ ὅς ἐστιν ἐντὸς τῶν θυρῶν, ὥστε ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ θεάματος ἡδονῆς καὶ τῆς χαρᾶς τὸ πνεῦμά σου συντρέχειν καὶ ἀναβαίνειν. (“You will see the doors opened and the world of the gods, which is within the doors, so that from the pleasure and joy of the sight your spirit runs ahead and ascends”). The doors in the sun, reported as closed in ll. 584–85, are now open, so that the initiate can take a look inside of heaven, the world of the gods. The opening of the doors of heaven is a topos of vision accounts of all kinds, especially in apocalyptic literature.⁴³² Viewing this image turns the previous

⁴²⁹ αἰσθηθήσῃ is a peculiar term, for which Preisendanz refers to Helbing, Grammatik der LXX, 98.

⁴³⁰ Pap. has the symbol Δ; see above on l. 573.

⁴³¹ Pap. reads ἀνεωγυῖας and the abbreviation θν with a stroke above for θεῶν; cf. below, l. 648, and Preisendanz, 2.270.

⁴³² Cf. also Homer, Od. 24.12ff. Merkelbach (Abraxas, 3.241) points to the description of the ὑπερουράνιος τόπος in Plato, Phaedr. 246b–252c, esp. 246e. See also, e.g., Mark 1:10 // Matt 3:16 // Luke 3:21; John 1:51; Acts 7:56; 10:11; Rev 3:7, 20; 4:1; etc. See BDAG, s.v. ἀνοίγω, 2; OTP 2, index s.v. “Heaven, gates of”; Christopher Rowland, The Open Heaven:

fear into pleasure and joy, so that his spirit that he had inhaled before (see ll. 537, 628) runs with him and carries him along on his ascent.⁴³³ With this experience of aesthetic enthusiasm, the fourth scenario has come to an end.

5. Fifth scenario: the encounter with Helios (ll. 628–61)

The fifth scenario shows the initiate at a higher level of the cosmos. He is now ready to encounter the god Helios who has been mentioned before as Helios Mithras (l. 482) as well as the sun disk (548 [πατήρ], 551, 576, 579–80, 583). His relationship with Aion and Mithras appears complicated, but for the author these deities are, in the final analysis, identical.⁴³⁴ As often, the scenario begins with a spatial orientation and commands to perform rituals (ll. 628–29): στὰς οὖν εὐθέως ἔλκε ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ ἀτενίζων εἰς σεαυτὸν τὸ πνεῦμα. (“Now stand still and at once draw spirit from the divine into yourself, while you gaze intently [at the god Helios]”).⁴³⁵ The standing still arrests the upward movement (ll. 627–28). The ritual drawing in from the divine refers to the sun as the source of the spirit (cf. ll. 537–38); the gazing (ἀτενίζειν) has been mentioned before (see above, on l. 556). This leads to the precondition for the next step: ὅταν οὖν ἀποκατασταθῇ σου ἡ ψυχὴ ... (“Then when your soul has been restored ...”). While the initiate’s self had been shattered because of the thunder (ll. 622–23), an additional inhalation of the divine spirit will now restore his soul (ψυχὴ). The concept of the soul as an individual’s self has been mentioned before,⁴³⁶ although not in ll. 622–23. At any rate, the term needs to be taken in a non-Platonic sense as describing the spirit-self (πνεῦμα), as

A Study of Apocalyptic in Judaism and Early Christianity (London: SPCK, 1982), 53, 78, 359, 369, 372, 378, 389, 415; Aune, Revelation, 1.279–82.

⁴³⁴ See for a general discussion the Introduction, above, 34–38.

⁴³⁵ Translations differ at this point: Dieterich: “Tritt nun hin sogleich und ziehe von dem Göttlichen gerade hinblickend in dich den Geisthauch”; Preisendanz: “Nun bleib stehn und ziehe gleich von dem göttlichen Wesen, es unverwandt anblickend, in dich den Geisthauch”; Meyer: “So stand still and at once draw breath from the divine into yourself, while you look intently”; Merkelbach: “Stelle dich also auf, blicke auf die Gottheit und ziehe ihren Lebenshauch in dich selbst”; Festugière: “Reste en place cependant, et aussitôt, de ce monde divin, le fixant du regard, attire à toi le souffle.”

The sentence construction is awkward, but it should be clear that what is to be drawn in from the divine (Helios) is the spirit, and what is to be gazed at is the deity (Helios). Cf. Barn. 5.10 about the inability of humans to gaze into the sun rays: ἐμβλέποντες οὐκ ἰσχύουσιν εἰς τὰς ἀκτῖνας αὐτοῦ ἀντοφθαλμῆσαι.

⁴³⁶ See ll. 475, 498, 524, 535, 710, 725. For the concept of world-soul see the discussion on l. 475.

having grown weak and in need of another infusion of the divine spirit.⁴³⁷ When this has taken place, the moment for calling forth the god has come: λέγε· πρόσσελθε, κύριε (“speak: come forward, lord”).⁴³⁸ A series of voes magicae follows (631–33), most of them unexplained: αρχανδαρα⁴³⁹ φωταζα⁴⁴⁰ πυριφωταζαβυθιζ⁴⁴¹ ετιμενμερο φοραθην⁴⁴² εριη προθρι φοραθι.

After this command, the epiphany of Helios begins: τοῦτο <σοῦ> εἰπόντος στραφήσονται ἐπὶ σε αἱ ἀκτῖνες ...⁴⁴³ (“When you have spoken this, the sun rays will turn themselves upon you ...”). The sun-beams, mentioned before in IV.461, 538, focus on the initiate like a search light. This event can perhaps relate to images in the Mithraic iconography, where Mithras turns around to look at Helios as he slays the bull.⁴⁴⁴ The text then instructs: ἔσειδε αὐτῶν μέσον (“look into the center of them”).⁴⁴⁵

The ritual continues: ὅταν οὖν τοῦτο ποιήσης, ὄψη ... (“Then, when you do this, you will see ...”).⁴⁴⁶ What follows is an iconographic portrait of Helios (ll. 635–37): θεὸν νεώτερον, εὐειδῆ, πυρινότριχα, ἐν χιτῶνι λευκῷ καὶ <χ>λαμύδι κοκκίνη ἔχοντα πύρινον στέφανον⁴⁴⁷ (“a youthful god, beautiful in appearance, with fiery hair, in a white tunic and a scarlet cloak, and wearing a fiery crown”). The portrait is constructed of adjectives and participles typical of Helios. Although the deities are different, there are also remarkable parallels between his and Mithras’ portrait (ll. 696–702).⁴⁴⁸

⁴³⁷ As Reitzenstein (HMR, 72–73) notes, ψυχή is not a prominent concept in the ML; in that regard CH XIII is similar.

⁴³⁸ For the command λέγε, see l. 623; for πρόσσελθε see also ll. 580, 756 (on the departure see ll. 655–57). For the title κύριος see above, on l. 588. Martinez calls attention to the liturgical call “Lord, come!” (μαράνα θά, 1 Cor 16:22; Did 10:6); cf. ἔρχου κύριε Ἰησοῦ (Rev 22:20). See BDAG, s.v. μαράνα θά.

⁴³⁹ Cf. αρχανδαβαρ XII.156, χανδαρα V.433.

⁴⁴⁰ Cf. next πυριφωταζα (?), φωσζα πυρι βελια Ἰάω ιαο ευω etc. (l. 962).

⁴⁴¹ So the pap. Adolf Deissmann (Bible Studies [trans. Alexander Grieve; Edinburgh: Clark, 1901; repr. Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1988], 130–32) proposes ζαβυθ, with the remaining πυριφωτα. Or should it perhaps be πυριφωταζα βυθιζ?

⁴⁴⁴ See, e.g., the Mithras reliefs in Cesare Letta, “Helios/Sol,” LIMC 4:1–2 (1988), ## 368, 373, 376; Rainer Vollkommer, “Mithras,” ibid., 6:1–2 (1992), ## 113, 132, 135, 136, 153; Merkelbach, Mithras, fig. 50, 54, 71, 73, 116.

⁴⁴⁵ Pap. reads εσειδε. Cf. Dieterich (10, l. 27) and Hopfner who read ἔσει: δέ and translate: “und du wirst mitten unter ihnen sein” (“and you will be in their midst”). Riess reads ἔσιδε; Jordan takes it as εἰσιδε.

⁴⁴⁶ For this phrase, cf. ll. 569, 629–30, 692, 757; also IV.634–35, 1431; for ὄψη, see above, on l. 539.

⁴⁴⁷ Jordan reads <χ>λαμύδι; Dieterich, Preisendanz have χλαμύδι.

⁴⁴⁸ For the iconography of Helios, see Dieterich (67–68) who refers to Cumont (Textes et monuments, 1.123–24); for representations of the god on Mithraic monuments, see also

The terms θεὸς νεώτερος and ἐν χιτῶνι λευκῷ are also used of Mithras (ll. 697–98), while εὐηδής, πυρινόθριξ, χλαμὺς κοκκίνη are applied to Helios only;⁴⁴⁹ en lieu of a πύρινος στέφανος Mithras is crowned with a χρυσὸς στέφανος.

At the appearance of Helios, he is to be greeted at once⁴⁵⁰ with a special greeting called πύρινος ἀσπαστικός (l. 638):⁴⁵¹ εὐθέως ἄσπασαι αὐτὸν τῷ πυρίνῳ ἀσπαστικῷ (“At once greet him with the firey greeting”). The prayer so named is contained in ll. 639–55. Beginning with the invocation, it shows the usual composition: the invocation (ll. 639–42), and the presentation of a petition (ll. 642–55). The prayer may even be influenced by court ceremonial.⁴⁵²

The invocation is carefully composed, beginning with the address κύριε (“lord”)⁴⁵³ and χαῖρε (“Greetings!” “Hail”),⁴⁵⁴ and followed by an aretology of three attributes using μεγα-: μεγαλοδύναμις (“great power”),⁴⁵⁵ με<γα>λο-

It is noteworthy that the verbal portrait in Orph. Hymn. 8 uses entirely different terms. Cf. the iconography of Christ in Rev 1:12–16, and the collection of parallels in Aune, Revelation, 1.71–100.

⁴⁴⁹ Cf. of Helios ἐν τῇ πυρίνῃ χλαμύδι, XIV.7–8.

⁴⁵⁰ This scene may be compared to one of the fresco paintings from the Isis temple in Herculaneum. A black dancing figure emerges in the door of the temple and is greeted by worshipers raising their hands or kneeling down, also using the sistrum. See Tran Tam Tinh, Essai, 100–102 and plate XXIV; Merkelbach, Isis Regina, color plate V and description p. 554 (fig. 73). – On εὐθέως in the ML, see on l. 557.

⁴⁵¹ There are no parallels known of this greeting formula, which is apparently the name of the following prayer. Cf. Proclus’ “Fire Song” (Hymn 1), discussed by Lewy, Chaldaean Oracles, 202–203, 491–93; van den Berg, Proclus’ Hymns, 145–89. For ἀσπάξασθαι in the ML, see ll. 666, 677, 712. Vorgeschichte eines Grußwortes,” MH 55 [1998] 65–75) connects the greeting with the giving of gifts and sacrifices. For the hymns to Helios see the reconstructions by Ernst Heitsch, in Preisendanz, 2.237–46; also, with commentary, Merkelbach, Abrasax, 1–2; Assmann, Liturgische Lieder, 111–12.

⁴⁵³ See also l. 588, with note; for comparative material on addressing persons, see Henrik Zilliakus, “Anredeformen,” RAC.S, fasc. 3–4 (1985–86) 465–97.

⁴⁵⁴ This greeting is actually an appeal (“be glad”); it occurs frequently in the ML; see ll. 713–14; also 666, 670–72, 678, 688–91, 1048, 2242; XII.182; XIII.609. Cf. ⁴⁵⁵ μεγαλοδύναμος occurs also l. 519; IV. 1345–46; VII.881; XII.374–75.

κράτωρ βασιλεῦ (“great-mighty king”),⁴⁵⁶ μέγιστε θεῶν (“greatest of gods”).⁴⁵⁷ Then comes the god’s name, Helios and two more attributes: ὁ κύριος τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τῆς γῆς (“the lord of the heaven and the earth”),⁴⁵⁸ and θεὸς θεῶν (“god of gods”).⁴⁵⁹ Next come two parallel verbal forms: ἰσχύει σου ἡ πνοή (“mighty is your breath”), and ἰσχύει σου ἡ δύναμις⁴⁶⁰ (“mighty is your power”); both of them are hapaxlegomena in the PGM. The conclusion (l. 642; cf. l. 639) repeats the address κύριε.

The presentation of the petition (ll. 642–55) is equally elaborate and begins with some formalities: ἐάν σοι δόξῃ, ἀγγελιὸν με τῷ μεγίστῳ θεῷ, τῷ σε γεννήσαντι καὶ ποιήσαντι ... (“If it be your will, announce me to the greatest god, the one who begat and made you ...”). The polite formula, “If you please,” or “if you will,” expresses submission to the divine will.⁴⁶¹ The role of Helios as an announcer has an interesting parallel in Acts 12:14 (ἀπαγγέλλειν), showing that it may belong to domestic practices.⁴⁶² Helios functions here as a gate-keeper and messenger to announce visitors to Mithras.⁴⁶³

⁴⁵⁷ The epithet occurs frequently in the PGM; see II.126; IV. 987, 1598; XIII.1019, 1046; and for further references, Preisendanz, index, 3.133–34, s.v. μέγας; Furley & Bremer, Greek Hymns, 2.4.

⁴⁵⁸ The epithet is found only here in the PGM; parallels occur in the LXX and in the NT (Matt 11:25 // Luke 10:21 [Q]; Acts 17:24). See BDAG, s.v. κύριος, II.2.b.

⁴⁵⁹ The pap. reads θε (with superscripted ε) θεων. See for this epithet θεὸς θεῶν PGM II.53; IV.180, 218, 641, 992, 1048, 1195, 1200; XXII.b.20. For other parallels, see BDAG, s.v. θεός.

⁴⁶⁰ Pap. has ἰσχύει.

⁴⁶¹ The petition (in Greek called ἔντευξις) begins with the polite phrase ἐάν σοι δόξῃ, see Preisigke, Wörterbuch, 4:1 (1944), s.v. δοκέω (cols. 609–10); BDAG, s.v. δοκέω, 2.b.β. See Anna di Bitonto, “Le petizioni al re. Studio sul formulario,” Aegyptus 47 (1967) 5–57, esp. 17–18 on the “formule attentuative.” Cf. Jesus’ prayer in Gethsemane, Matt 26:39, 42, and parr.; Nock (Essays, 1.192–93) refers to ML passages on the divine will: ll. 499, 642, 648.

⁴⁶² Eduard Norden (in Dieterich, 233) notes that the visitor had to be announced and points to Seneca, Apoc. 5; the question of the Sibyll to Musaeus (Virgil, Aen. 6.666–71). See also Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 1.28–29.

⁴⁶³ Dieterich (67–68) raises the question whether this role of Helios has any connection with the heliodromus, the second to last grade of the Mithraic mysteries: “Wie weit der vorletzte Grad der Mithrasmythen, der ἡλιοδρόμοι – die Weihe des vorletzten Grades heißt ἡλιακά (C[umont] I 317, 3) – zur Erklärung dieser Rolle dienen könnte, läßt sich schwerlich sagen.” For further literature and discussion see Wünsch’s (Dieterich, 233) reference to René Dussaud, “Notes de mythologie archéologique syrienne,” § 4: “Hélios psychopompe,” RAr, 4ème série, t. 1 (1903) 142–48.

To call Mithras ὁ μέγιστος θεός (l. 643) apparently contradicts l. 640, where the epithet belongs to Helios. The epithet which follows clarifies the issue (ll. 643–44): τῷ σε γεννήσαντι καὶ ποιήσαντι (“[Mithras] who begat and made you”). According to Dieterich (68), Mithras is defined here as the father and Helios as the son, but the title ὁ μέγας θεός “Ἡλῖος Μίθρας (l. 482) means that at least for the author father and son are one. Dieterich observes that “the idea of the unio mystica of father and son was not completely alien to ancient religious sentiment.”⁴⁶⁴ In other words, the idea does not result from Christian influence. Fauth (Helios Megistos, 22–23) argues against Dieterich that Mithras is not called the μέγιστος θεός, but ὁ θεὸς ὑπερβαλλόντως ἀγαθός, that is Agathos Daimon or the Iranian Ahura Mazda. Also, because both are called “young gods,” one can hardly be the father of the other. There is no question, however, that Helios will announce the visitor to Mithras who, he says emphatically, has begotten Helios.⁴⁶⁵ The contradiction seems to be the result of the competition between the two gods.⁴⁶⁶

In ll. 644–49 the initiate asks Helios to pass on to Mithras the self-identification of the initiate, a kind of passport. This self-identification contains important information about the anthropology of the ML.⁴⁶⁷ The section conforms to a synthema and has two parts.⁴⁶⁸

On the heliodromus, see Merkelbach, Mithras, 118–27. For comparable messengers, see Lucian, Icarom. 20–22; also Betz, Lukian, 109, n. 9. For the handing over of a petition to the Lord of Heaven, see 1 En. 13:4–6; 14:4–7.

⁴⁶⁵ For the fatherhood of Mithras, see Porphyry, Antr. nymph. 6: τοῦ πάντων ποιητοῦ καὶ πατρὸς Μίθρου; and Julian, Caes. 336c: τὸν πατέρα Μίθραν. These passages are cited by Dieterich, 68, n. 1; 135, notes 1–3.

⁴⁶⁶ On the competition between Mithras and Helios, see Julien Ries, “Le culte de Mithra en Iran,” ANRW II.18:4 (1990) 2728–75, esp. 2767–68: “Le Soleil, Mithra et le Feu.”

⁴⁶⁷ Thus adding to the other self-identifications in the ML in ll. 517–37 and 718–24. See also Festugière, Révélation, 4.220–41.

⁴⁶⁸ Cf. the parallel self-introduction and its implied anthropology in the Katharmoi of Empedocles (D. L. 8.62 and 66; D.-K. 31 B 112 [I, 354, 14–18]; Kirk & Raven, # 478 [p. 354]). Empedocles addresses his friends: ὦ φίλοι, ... χαίρετ’ ἐγὼ δ’ ὑμῖν θεὸς ἀμβροτος, οὐκέτι θνητὸς πωλεῖσθαι μετὰ πᾶσι τετιμένος (“Friends, ... Rejoice! To you I am as an immortal god, no longer a mortal, going about honored among all, ...” [my trans.]). For the interpretation, see the quotations of Empedocles in later sources, esp. Clemens Alex., Strom. 6.30.3; Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 1.1; Plotinus, En. 4.7.10, 38: χαίρετ’, ἐγὼ δ’ ὑμῖν

First, the initiate identifies himself as an individual belonging to the human species: ὅτι ἄνθρωπος ἐγὼ ὁ δ(ε)ῖ(να) τῆς δ(ε)ῖ(να),⁴⁶⁹ γενόμενος ἐκ θνητῆς ὑστέρας τῆς δεῖνα καὶ ἰχώρος σπερματικοῦ (“that a human being am I, NN, whose mother is NN, who was born from the mortal womb of NN and the fluid of semen”).⁴⁷⁰ His species is called ἄνθρωπος (“human being”), vis à vis a divine being (ll. 646–48);⁴⁷¹ the individual is identified by the personal name to be inserted as well as, in matrilinear descendance, by the name of the mother. A human being must be from the mortal womb of the mother,⁴⁷² again identified by her name,⁴⁷³ and the semen of the father, not identified by name.⁴⁷⁴

Second, the initiate identifies himself by his divine nature, which is the result of his ritual rebirth (ll. 646–49): καὶ, σήμερον τούτου ὑπό σου με<τα>γεννηθέντος, ἐκ τοσούτων μυριάδων ἀπαθανατισθῆις ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ κατὰ δόκησιν θ(εο)ῦ ὑπερβάλλοντος ἀγαθοῦ⁴⁷⁵ (“and who, since he has been born again from you today, has become immortal out of so many myriads in this hour according to the wish of the exceedingly good god”).

The reference to time (“and today”) implies that the rebirth has taken place on the same day.⁴⁷⁶ The term for “being reborn” (μεταγεννηθῆναι) is almost technical in mystery-cult language.⁴⁷⁷ Such rebirth cannot be enjoyed by every

⁴⁷⁰ Different from Preisendanz, but with Dieterich (12), I am placing no comma after ἄνθρωπος.

⁴⁷¹ See also ll. 523–24, 533, 535, 739–40.

⁴⁷² See also above, on ll. 517–18.

⁴⁷³ The symbol Δ is used again.

⁴⁷⁴ The phrase ἰχώρος σπερματικοῦ is hapaxlegomenon in the PGM. See LSJ, s.v. ἰχώρ, “fluid,” used mostly with regard to blood.

⁴⁷⁵ Pap. reads μεγεννηθέντος, corrected by Dieterich (12) and Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.) to με<τα>γεννηθέντος; differently Dieterich (Abraxas, 104, n. 8): καὶ ἰχώρος σπερματικοῦ με γεννήσαντος. Preisendanz points to a similar scribal error in l. 639: με<γα>λοκράτωρ. Also, pap. reads an abbreviation θυ for θεοῦ, noted by Dieterich and Preisendanz, ad loc.; cf. the abbreviation θν (θεῶν) above, l. 625. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.242) regards the words σήμερον τούτου ὑπό σου με<τα>γεννηθέντος as a secondary addition.

Preisendanz puts a comma after θεοῦ and translates “nach dem Ratschluß des über-schwänglich guten Gottes.” Dieterich (12) and Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.170) have no comma, without change in the translation. Indeed, there is no need for a comma either in l. 648.

⁴⁷⁶ For σήμερον (“today”) see ll. 516, 651, 686. For significant parallels in the NT, see Luke 2:11; 13:32; 19:9; 23:43; 2 Cor 6:2; furthermore BDAG, s.v. σήμερον. For the formula as a whole see above, ll. 516–29.

human being, but only a few will be elected “out of the many myriads” of the massa perditionis.⁴⁷⁸ The god Helios does this by making the initiate immortal (ἀπαθανατισθείς),⁴⁷⁹ that is, through the ritual called ἀπαθανατισμός.⁴⁸⁰ That this ritual has occurred “at this hour” and “in accordance with the divine will” seems part of the traditional formulae.⁴⁸¹ The resulting rebirth and immortalization is of course a gift of divine beneficence.⁴⁸² The question as to which god is meant remains unclear. Is it Helios, Mithras, or a god even higher than Mithras? Merkelbach suggests that the expression belongs to the author’s conception of one metaphysical deity and that it expresses assimilation to Plato.⁴⁸³

Following the self-presentation, the initiate offers his petition, continuing in the descriptive style appropriate for the occasion (ll. 649–50: ... προσκυνῆσαι σε ἄξιόι καὶ δέεται κατὰ δύναμιν ἀνθρωπίνην (“... requests to worship you, and supplicates with as much power a human being can have”).⁴⁸⁴ He first ⁴⁷⁸ Cf. the self-presentations on the Orphic gold tablets (A 1–3 and 5), where the initiate claims to be “a pure from the pure”; for the texts see Riedweg in Graf, Ansichten griechischer Rituale, 392–94; Betz, ibid., 412; Antike und Christentum, 236.

⁴⁸² The formula is ὑπερβαλλόντως ἀγαθοῦ (θεοῦ). The pap. reads ὑπερβαλλοντος, corrected by Dieterich and Preisendanz to ὑπερβαλλόντως, but Jordan keeps ὑπερβάλλοντος; cf. XII.284–85: (θεός) ὑπερβάλλεις τὴν πᾶσαν δύναμιν.

⁴⁸³ Merkelbach (Abraxas, 3.242): “Angleichung an den e i n e n, jenseitigen Gott Platons. Vgl. z. B. Phaedr. 246d: τὸ δὲ θεῖον καλόν, σοφόν, ἀγαθόν.” The author’s tendency of seeing the deity as totally transcendent is stated in the prooemium (the “great god Helios Mithras” [l. 482]), but this tendency may reflect his Stoic orientation, rather than direct assimilation of his ideas to Plato’s.

See also similar expression in the NT: 2 Cor 3:10, 9:14; Eph 1:19; 2:7; 3:19; and, more generally, ὑπερβολή in 2 Cor 4:7, 17; 12:7. See BDAG, s.v. ὑπερβολή.

expresses his devotion by prostration (προσκύνησις),⁴⁸⁵ then his submission by supplication (ἄξιον, δέεσθαι),⁴⁸⁶ commensurate with his limited human power.⁴⁸⁷

In ll. 651–55 the author sees the need to insert a redactional comment which interprets “human power” astrologically: – ἵνα συμπαράλαβης τὸν τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας καὶ ὥρας ὠρονόμον (“that you may take along with you the horoscope of the day and hour today”).⁴⁸⁸ That the author interconnects the ritual with astrology can be seen also in ll. 686–87. The initiate is told to carry the horoscope⁴⁸⁹ of the day and the hour along with him, so he can determine the gods of the day and hour.⁴⁹⁰ The name Θραψιαρι μοριροκ occurs only here in the ML.⁴⁹¹

Finally, the request is specified (ll. 653–54): ἵνα φανείς χρηματίσῃ ἐν ταῖς ἀγαθαῖς ὥραις (“that he may appear and give revelation during the good hours”). These words clearly state that the purpose and goal of the ritual is to obtain an oracular session with the god.⁴⁹² The request concludes with a sequence of voces magicae (654–55): εωρω ρωρε ωρρι ωριωρ ρωρ ρωι ωρ ρεωρωρι

⁴⁸⁵ For this gesture of prostration, which occurs only here in the ML, see also I.191; III.417, 470, 606; XIa.14; XII.118; XIII.844; LXXVII.10. On prostration as a Persian and Byzantine ritual, see Dölger, Sol Salutis, 24–26; See Preisigke, Wörterbuch, s.v.; Heinrich Greeven, TDNT 6 (1959), s.v.; BDAG, s.v. προσκυνέω.

⁴⁸⁷ Cf. ll. 523–24: πρὸς ὅλιγον τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης μου ψυχικῆς δυνάμεως. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.242) points out that the phrase κατὰ δυνάμιν ἀνθρωπίνην is a Platonic echo (Theaet. 176b; Phaedr. 246d; Resp. 613b).

⁴⁸⁹ The astrological term ὠρονόμος (“marker, divider of the hour” [LSJ]) is mentioned only here in the PGM. Cf. also Damascius, Princ. 351: οἱ δεκαδάρχαι καὶ ζωδιοκράτορες καὶ ὠρονόμοι καὶ κραταιοί.

⁴⁹⁰ See on this Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 47, n. 35. He takes it to mean that the planets in their function as lords of time are being asked to assist, and translates: “petition... that you take along with you the regent of the present day and hour, whose name is Thrapsiari.” So also Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.171, 252) who points out the importance of the planetary deity governing the day of the rebirth (cf. also ll. 544–47).

⁴⁹² For χρηματίζειν and χρησμός see ll. 717, 724–25, 727, 732; the technical terms are frequent in the PGM.

εωρ εωρ εωρ εωρ εωρε. The pap. divides these into twelve groups, suggested by Preisendanz as representing the twelve hours of the day, but Gundel questions it.⁴⁹³

After this the god leaves to carry the request to Mithras (ll. 655–57): ταῦτά σου εἰπόντος ἐλεύσεται εἰς τὸν πόλον, καὶ ὄψῃ αὐτὸν περιπατοῦντα ὡς ἐν ὁδῷ (“After you have said these things, he will come to the celestial pole, and you will see him walking as if on a road”). While the time indicator (“after you have said these things”) marks the progress in the ritual: the initiate will see (ὄψῃ)⁴⁹⁴ Helios on his way to the axis-pole of the world, around which the stars rotate.⁴⁹⁵

The fifth scenario concludes with the performance of protective rituals. First, there is the familiar “gazing” (ἀτενίζειν),⁴⁹⁶ then a strong bellowing sound (μύκωμα μακρόν),⁴⁹⁷ to be performed κερατοειδῶς (“like with a horn”),⁴⁹⁸ and ὅλον ἀποδιδοῦς τὸ πνεῦμα, βασανίζων τὴν λαγόνα, μυκῶ (“by giving off your whole breath and squeezing your loins, bellow”). Finally, καὶ καταφίλει τὰ φυλακτήρια καὶ λέγε, πρῶτον εἰς τὸ δεξιόν· φύλαξόν με προσυμηρι (“kiss the phylacteries and say, first to the right: protect me, PROSYMĒRI”).⁴⁹⁹

6. Sixth scenario: the encounter with the deities of the Bear constellation (ll. 661–92)

The sixth scenario begins, like the others, with an orientation (ll. 661–62): ταῦτα εἰπὼν ὄψῃ θύρας ἀνοιγομένας (“After you have said these things, you ⁴⁹⁵ The cosmological technical term πόλος occurs only here in the ML, but cf. 676 πολοκράτωρ. For πόλος, see II.93, 120; IV.438, 1026, 1280, 1302, 1305–6, 1307, 1731, 1959, 2327, 2384, 2480; V.284; VIII.15; XIII.34, 76, 538, 588. See Dieterich, 70; Boll, Bezold, Gundel, Stern Glaube, 179; Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 45–48. – What is meant by the “road” (ὁδός)? Has the phrase anything to do with the heliadromus? See above, at l. 642, n. 463).

⁴⁹⁴ On this term, see l. 539.

⁴⁹⁶ For this term, see ll. 556, 629, 693, 711.

⁴⁹⁹ For kissing the phylacteries see also ll. 707–8; 813–14. Dieterich (13, app. crit.) notes that an element is missing from the text: εἴτα εἰς τὸ ἀριστόν, then to the left.” Cf. l. 819, where both sides occur. Preisendanz (WSt 41 [1919] 143, n. 1) wants to write, therefore: καὶ λέγε, πρῶτον.... For the command “protect me” see also l. 560. The name προσυμηρι is unexplained, but cf. l. 819 προσυμηρι; see Preisendanz, ibidem.

will see [the] doors opening”).⁵⁰⁰ In terms of time, the preceding protective rituals have ended, and the next visionary episode can begin.⁵⁰¹ The initiate is still at the same level as before (cf. ll. 628–29), except that the gates of the sun are now open (cf. ll. 624–25).

He sees that seven virgins emerge (ll. 662–63): καὶ ἐρχομένας ἐκ τοῦ βάθους ζ' παρθένους⁵⁰² (“and (you will see) seven virgins coming from the deep within”). The expression “from the deep” refers to the world of the gods behind the gates of the sun (cf. l. 625).⁵⁰³ The idea is that they are stepping forward out of the fiery gates. Dieterich’s proposal that one should imagine seven gates finds support in the mosaic of the Mitreo delle sette sfere at Ostia, taking its name from the mosaics and Origen’s reference to the κλῖμαξ ἐπτάπυλος (“seven-gated ladder”).⁵⁰⁴

In ll. 663–65 an iconographic description of the seven virgins follows: ... ἐν βυσσίνους, ἀσπίδων πρόσωπα ἐχούσας. αὗται καλοῦνται οὐρανοῦ Τύχαι, κρατοῦσαι χρύσεα βραβεῖα⁵⁰⁵ (“... dressed in linen garments, and with the faces of asps. They are called the Fates of heaven, and wield golden wands”).

Who are these seven virgins that occur only here in the PGM? Already Dieterich (69–72) had identified them as seven Hathors, combined with the seven fixed stars of the constellation of the Great Bear.⁵⁰⁶ He argues against their being planetary gods because earlier in his ascension the initiate has passed the planets and has moved to the higher sphere of the gods. At any rate, the ⁵⁰⁰ Since there is no article before “doors,” Dieterich (13, 69, n. 3) raises the question of whether one should imagine seven doors to open. If one follows Dieterich, the translation should be: “you will see seven doors opening.” Cf. the seven flaming altars in the top register of some Mithraic reliefs; see Vermaseren, Mithriaca III, plate XVI; Idem, Mithriaca IV, plates XII and XVII.

⁵⁰⁶ The constellation of the Bear is prominent in the PGM (see IV.1293; VII.687, 862; XII.190; XXII.b.26; LXXII). See Franz Boll, Sphaera, 92–95; idem, Aus der Offenbarung Johannis, 21, 111; idem, “Fixsterne,” PRE 6 (1909) 2407–31; Franz Boll & Wilhelm Gundel, “Sternbilder, Sternglaube und Sternsymbolik bei Griechen und Römern,” in Roscher, Lexikon 6 (1924–37), esp. 869–81; Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 59–64; Roger Beck, “Interpreting the Ponza Zodiac II,” JMiS 2:2 (1978) 87–147, esp. 116–26; Wolfgang Fauth, “Arktos in den griechischen Zauberpapyri,” ZPE 57 (1984) 93–99.

figures are a syncretistic combination of the Fates, the sphere of the fixed stars, of which the constellation of the Great Bear is one, and the Egyptian Hathors; the seven virgins are parallel to the pole lords described next. Further clues come from a formula attested several times in the PGM, which invokes various astral forces: αἱ ἀγαθαὶ ἀπόρροιαὶ τῶν ἀστέρων εἰσὶν δαίμονες καὶ Τύχαι καὶ Μοῖραι ("the good emanations of the stars, daimons, Fates, and Moirae").⁵⁰⁷

A somewhat different interpretation has been offered by Gundel: "The seven Fates with their asp faces are meant to be the seven stars of the Pleiads; one has rightly called them the seven Hathors. This has been made certain by the seven erect asps, which appear on the tomb painting of Athribis, placed closely behind each other as a group of decanic powers under Orion.... That they are the guards of the four pillars – one may see in them either the personified Kentra or the stars in the square of the Great Bear – can be explained from the eminent importance which in many places is attributed to the seven stars of the Pleiads."⁵⁰⁸

The iconography most certainly has a pictorial background of some kind, although none has been identified with certainty. That the virgins are clothed in fine byssos garments may mean that the material was linen or even silk.⁵⁰⁹ That they have faces (or carry masks) of asps is not attested elsewhere, except on the tomb painting of Athribis.⁵¹⁰ Their identification with the Fates is

⁵⁰⁸ Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 58–59: "Unter den 7 Tychai mit den Schlangengesichtern sind die sieben Sterne der Pleiaden gemeint; man hat sie mit Recht als die sieben Hathoren angesprochen. Das wird zur Gewißheit erhoben durch die sieben aufgerichteten Schlangen, die eng hintereinander zu einer Gruppe komponiert auf dem Grabgemälde von Athribis als Dekanmächte unter Orion erscheinen, ... Daß sie die Wächterinnen der vier Säulen sind – man darf in ihnen entweder die personifizierten Kentra oder die Sterne im Viereck des Großen Bären sehen –, erklärt sich aus der eminenten Bedeutung, die den sieben Sternen der Pleiaden vielerorts zugesprochen worden ist." Following the epiphany, a formal ritual of greeting seems to conform to etiquette, first greeting all of them as a group (665–69), and then individually (670–72). The moment of the greeting is set: ταῦτα ἰδὼν ἀσπάζου οὕτως (“When you see these things, greet in this manner ...”), whereupon the greeting is cited: χαίρετε, αἱ ζ΄ Τύχαι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, σεμναὶ καὶ ἀγαθαὶ παρθένοι, ἱεραὶ καὶ ὁμοδαίτοι τοῦ μινιμιρροφορ, αἱ ἀγιώταται φυλακίσσαι τῶν τεσσάρων στυλίσκων (“Hail, O seven Fates of heaven, O noble and good virgins, O sacred ones and companions of MINIMIRROPHOR, O most holy guardians of the four pillars”). The exclamatory “Hail” or “Greetings to you,” a form of wish, is followed by the name of the seven Fates, and three divine epithets. (1) This epithet, σεμναὶ καὶ ἀγαθαὶ παρθένοι appears to be one of general politeness and has no parallel in the PGM; (2) the second, ἱεραὶ καὶ ὁμοδαίτοι τοῦ μινιμιρροφορ, stands in the middle and has an unexplained vox magica attached;⁵¹³ (3) the third is special and also without parallel in the PGM, αἱ ἀγιώταται φυλακίσσαι τῶν τεσσάρων στυλίσκων, referring to the four pillars of the Egyptian cosmology, of which the sacred Fates are guardians.⁵¹⁴

The individual greetings are also very formal and exactly parallel, consisting of the exclamatory wish, χαῖρε (“Hail!”), identification by number,⁵¹⁵ and their magical names (cf. ll. 677–78). The magical names are mostly unexplained, but some of them may reflect the names of decans, μεχραν resembling a decan by the name of Μαχράμ,⁵¹⁶ ἀραρμαχης pointing to Ἄραρα, ὀφιόμορφος god of the Ophite gnostics; ὀφιοειδής Epiphanius, Haer. 37.5 (56.15); Athanasius (Gent. 9) mentions Egyptian gods as ὀφιοκέφαλος. See with further passages and bibliography, Robert Eisler, Orphisch-dionysische Mysteringedanken in der christlichen Antike (Vorträge der Bibliothek Warburg 1922–1923 II; reprinted Hildesheim: Olms, 1966), 316–28 (“Die Tiermaskenriten in den mithräischen und in den Kabirenmysterien”); Betz, Lukian, 35–37, 104; L. ⁵¹⁴ The connection with Egypt was pointed out by Dieterich, 71; idem, Kleine Schriften, 27 (with a collection of parallels); Alan H. Gardiner, “Magic, Egyptian,” ERE 8 (1915) 266a (referring to Pap. Leyden 348 verso, 3.3.5.410 etc.; Pap. mag. Harris 7.4); Gundel, Weltbild und Astrologie, 58–59; Ritner, in Betz, GMPT, 51, n. 92; Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.47–48. How this epithet is to be related to the four roots (τετραλιζώματα [see above, l. 585–90]) is unclear.

⁵¹⁵ Pap. has the numbers as β, γ, δ, ε, ζ, ζ (with strokes over γ, ε, ζ).

another decan.⁵¹⁷ ερου and ρομβρης have also been taken to refer to decans: Έροϋ and Ρομβρομάρε.⁵¹⁸

After the seven virgin seven male deities appear (ll. 673–76): προέρχονται δὲ καὶ ἑτεροὶ ζ' θεοὶ ταύρων μελάνων πρόσωπα ἔχοντες ἐν περιζώμασιν λινοῖς κατέχοντες ζ' διαδήματα χρύσεια (“There also come forth another seven gods who have faces of black bulls, in linen loincloths, and in possession of seven golden diadems”). These deities (θεοί) come forward (προέρχονται) through the same gates as the virgins.⁵¹⁹ There is no parallel for this iconography elsewhere in the PGM. The faces of black bulls are difficult to explain. Figures of bulls stand among Egyptian imagery of stars, but also the initiates of the Mithraic mysteries were under the tutelage of planetary deities.⁵²⁰ The figures wear linen aprons and hold golden diadems in their hands.⁵²¹ Their title is revealed: οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ καλούμενοι πολοκράτορες τοῦ οὐρανοῦ (“These are the so-called Pole Lords of heaven”).⁵²² The greetings must conform to the previous ritual: οὓς δεῖ σε ἀσπάσασθαι ὁμοίως ἕκαστον τῷ ἰδίῳ αὐτῶν ὀνόματι⁵²³ (“You must greet in the same manner each of them with his own name”). Now we learn that the voces magicae in ll. 670–72 are actually names. The greeting therefore begins with that of the group first. The exclamatory wish is called out, to be followed by three epithets: (1) οἱ κνωδακοφύλακες (“O warders of the pivot of the celestial sphere” [LSJ]),⁵²⁴ (2) οἱ ἱεροὶ καὶ ⁵¹⁷ Gundel, Dekane, 58, 79 (# 25). Cf. Ritner (in Betz, GMPT, 51, n. 93) compares Egyptian harmachis (“Horus who is on the horizon”).

⁵¹⁸ For Έροϋ see also IV.1589: V.432; Preisendanz, app. crit., ad loc., and Gundel, Dekane, 45, 373. Jordan prefers Preisendanz’s earlier suggestion (in Roscher, Lexikon, 5.963) *αρουρ –ομβρης; cf. PGM IV.3023 ὁ ἐν μέσῃ ἀρούρης καὶ χιόνος καὶ ὁμίχλης.

⁵¹⁹ Is there any significance to the fact that the virgins were not called θεοί or rather, θεαί? Instead of προέρχονται l. 662 has ἐρχομέναις.

⁵²⁰ Dieterich (72–73) confesses puzzlement. Do these figures represent the constellation of the Little Bear? – So Franz Boll, ed. Griechische Kalender (5 vols.; SHAW.PH 1910–1920; Heidelberg: Winter 1910–1920), vol. 1 (1910:16): Das Kalendarium des Antiochos; idem, Sphaera, plate II; Boll, Bezold, Gundel, Stern Glaube, plate I/2; Dieterich, 72–73; Roger Beck, “Interpreting the Ponzia Zodiac,” JMiS 1:1 (1976) 1–19, esp. p. 2, fig. 1; Merkelbach, Weihegrade, 13–14; idem, Mithras, 77–86; idem, Abraxas, 3.243.

⁵²¹ Cf. the fiery crowns in ll. 521–22. Golden diadems are a rather common symbol.

⁵²³ Pap. reads ὡς, corrected by Dieterich to οὓς; Preisendanz considers ὡς or <οὔτ>ως (cf. l. 666).

⁵²⁴ According to the TLG, κνωδακόφυλαξ is a hapax. κνώδαξ, a hapax in the PGM, is the pin or pivot on which something turns (κνωδακίζειν). See LSJ, s.v. Cf. the Tübingen ἄλκιμοι νεανίαι (“O sacred and brave youths” – the term ἄλκιμος occurs in hymnic language);⁵²⁵ (3) the final epithet is in fact a longer and detailed aretology describing the work of the pole lords: οἱ στρέφοντες ὑπὸ ἐν κέλευσμα τὸν περιδίνητον τοῦ κύκλου ἄξονα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ βροντάς καὶ ἀστραπάς καὶ σεισμῶν καὶ κεραυνῶν βολὰς ἀφιέντες εἰς δυσσεβῶν φῦλα⁵²⁶ (“who turn at one command the revolving axis of the vault of heaven, who send out thunder and lightning and jolts of earthquakes and thunderbolts against the nations of impious tribes”). The cosmic tasks performed by the pole lords cover three areas. First, they are in charge of turning the axis mundi, a concern of a number of passages in the PGM.⁵²⁷ Second, they send out thunder, lightning, and cosmic quakes, terms often mentioned in the PGM.⁵²⁸ The third task is distributing punishments to the godless⁵²⁹ and rewards to the godly.

While there is no list of the punishments meted out, the initiate carefully details the benefits for the pious, such as himself (683–87),⁵³⁰ not as a fact but as a petition: ἐμοὶ δὲ εὐσεβεῖ καὶ θεοσεβεῖ ὄντι <δότε> ὑγείαν καὶ σώματος ὁλοκληρίαν, ἀκοῆς τε καὶ ὁράσεως εὐτονίαν, ἀταραξίαν ἐν ταῖς ἐνεστώσαις τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας ἀγαθαῖς ὥραις⁵³¹ (“but to me, a religious and godfearing man, [give] health and soundness of body, and acuteness of hearing and seeing, and calmness in the present good hours of this day”). Such lists of benefits, as the individual benefits, are found also elsewhere in the PGM.⁵³²

⁵²⁷ See also IV.1279, 1358 (στρεψηλάκατος, “spindle-turner”); 2936; VII.686–87, 832; XII.60–61; for more instances see Preisendanz, 3.179–80 (index), s.v. στρέφειν. For περιδίνητος (“spin around”) see III.557: περιδινοπλανήτας (Hymn 2, l. 7); IV.2918–20: πυρὸς μεγάλου περιδινήτειρα, ἡ τὸν ἀεικίνητον ἔχεις περιδινέα βαρῖζαν ἄρρηκτον; for ἄξων (“axis”) III.572, 574; VII.688; for κύκλος (“heavenly circle”) III.480; IV.1015; and often; see Preisendanz, 3.124 (index), s.v.; Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.243.

⁵²⁸ On this topic, see above at ll. 571, 621. The σεισμοί in this case are not earthquakes but cosmic quakes, since the area is in the upper spheres of the cosmos. Cf. Rev 6:12; 11:19; 16:18; see Aune, Revelation, 2.559–60, 627–28.

⁵²⁹ The expression δυσσεβῶν φῦλα is found only here in the PGM.

⁵³² For ὑγεία (“health”) see III.577; XXXVI.223 (in lists); also III.260; IV.2997–3002; VII.333; XIII.802. For ὁλοκληρεῖν, ὁλοκληρία, ὁλόκληρος, IV.136, VII.590; XXVII.3.

The last phrase in the clause “in the present good hours of this day” should be read in connection with the horoscope (see ll. 651–52). Finally (l. 687–88), the pole lords are again hailed: οἱ κύριοί μου καὶ μεγαλοκράτορες θεοί (“O my lords and powerfully ruling gods.”)⁵³³

The sixth scenario ends with the recitation of the individual greetings (688–92). These greetings also follow the previous pattern of the exclamatory wish (χαῖρε), the number,⁵³⁴ and the secret names (ὄνομα), all of them unexplained hapaxlegomena in the PGM.

7. Seventh scenario: the encounter with Mithras (ll. 692–732)

The sixth scenario passes over to the seventh with the usual orientation concerning time and place: ὅταν δὲ ἐνστῶσιν ἐνθα καὶ ἐνθα τῇ τάξει...⁵³⁵ (“Now when they take their place, on the one side and on the other, in their order ...”). The idea is that the two groups of seven form a kind of chorus facing each other, and that all are taking their assigned places.⁵³⁶ This kind of arrangement appears to have been somewhat typical of worship services. Two parallels are especially informative.

One parallel is part of the description of the community of the Therapeutae by Philo of Alexandria.⁵³⁷ He describes their festival of Pentecost, which he says is patterned on the Bacchic rituals;⁵³⁸ it begins with a community prayer, followed by a symposium and an all-night Pannychis. During the initial prayer, “they take their stand in a regular line in an orderly way, their eyes and hands lifted up to Heaven, eyes because they have been trained to fix their gaze on things worthy of contemplation, hands in token that they are clean from gain-taking and not defiled through any cause of the profit-making kind. So standing they pray to God that their feasting may be acceptable and proceed as

The terms play a significant role in the NT; see Acts 3:16; 1 Thess 5:23; and BDAG, s.v. For εὐτονία there is no other reference in the PGM; ἀταραξία, a technical term in Greek ethics, occurs also in IV.69 (ἀτάραχος).

⁵³⁴ Pap. reads the numbers as in ll. 671–72; see above.

⁵³⁵ On the textual questions concerning ἐνστῶσιν, see Preisendanz, WSt 42 (1920–21) 24, section 7.

⁵³⁶ So Dieterich, 76; Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.243.

⁵³⁷ Philo of Alexandria, De vita contemplativa, cited according to the edition and translation by F. H. Colson, Philo (10 vols.; LCL: London: Heinemann; Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1929–62), 9.112–69.

⁵³⁸ See Contemp. 88–89 (cited below, n. 542); also 12; the highly polemical description of pagan banquets in 40–64 does not explicitly focus on the Bacchic ones, but it does include comments on Xenophon’s and Plato’s Symposia (57–60); see also Ebr. 123, 146; Her. 69; Somm. 2.205.

He would have it.”⁵³⁹ During the symposium⁵⁴⁰ and the Pannychis, the community is separated in two choir groups: “After the supper they hold the sacred vigil which is conducted in the following way. They rise up all together and standing in the middle of the refectory form themselves first into two choirs, one of men and one of women, the leader and precentor chosen for each being the most honored amongst them and also the most musical. Then they sing hymns to God composed of many measures and set to many melodies....”⁵⁴¹ At dawn they reunite on the beach to conclude the celebrations with a greeting of the rising sun.⁵⁴²

The other parallel is pictorial and part of the frescoes from the Isis temple in Herculaneum showing scenes from worship performed there. A chorus of two groups is standing on the steps of the temple, facing each other, with the choir master directing in the middle.⁵⁴³

To return to the text, the command is given: ἀτενίζε τῷ ἀέρι (“gaze in the air”).⁵⁴⁴ Air has been mentioned before, but not as one of the four elements; presumably it is identical with πνεῦμα.⁵⁴⁵ As a result, the initiate will see spectacular cosmic phenomena (ll. 693–96):⁵⁴⁶ καὶ ὄψη κατερχομένης ἀστραπᾶς καὶ φῶτα μαρμαίροντα καὶ σειομένην τὴν γῆν καὶ κατερχομένον θ(εὸν)... (“you will see lightening bolts going down, and lights flashing, and the earth shaking, and a god descending...”). While lightnings and earthquakes have been mentioned before (l. 681–82), the stereotypical picture overlooks that the author has left behind the earth some time ago. The “flashing lights” are preferred language in the PGM.⁵⁴⁷ The god emerges out of the interior of the temple and, like the figure on the painting from Herculaneum, walks down the stairs; symbolically this means that he leaves the highest sphere, which is unreachable even for other deities, and descends to the seventh below.

This god is certainly Mithras, although it is peculiar that his name is not mentioned.⁵⁴⁸ His portrait can be confirmed by representational art (ll. 696–704): κατερχόμενον θ(εὸν) ὑπερμεγέθη, φωτινὴν ἔχοντα τὴν ὄψιν, νεώτερον, χρυσοκόμαν, ἐν χιτῶνι λευκῷ καὶ χρυσῷ στεφάνῳ καὶ ἀναξυρίσι... (“and a god descending, immensely great, with a shining face, youthful, golden-haired, with a white tunic and a golden crown and trousers...”). That the highest god is of immense size⁵⁴⁹ is part of the style of the epiphany,⁵⁵⁰ just as

⁵⁴⁷ Cf. the flashing lamp in the temple at Jerusalem, IV.1221 (μαρμαίρων), 3069–70 (see Betz, GMPT, 97, n. 407 with further references); PDM xiv.490; also Karl Preisendanz, “Zum großen Pariser Zauberpapyrus,” ARW 17 (1914) 347–48. For the epithet of Apollo, see Furley & Bremer, Greek Hymns, 2.325.

⁵⁴⁸ Pap. reads the abbreviation θν.

⁵⁴⁹ The term ὑπερμεγέθης is peculiar; LSJ calls it a Ionic form and notes ὑπερμεγέθης, ὑπέρμεγας. It is, however, a topos, attested in the PGM only here; see also CH I.1 regarding the epiphany of Poimandres: ἔδοξά τινα ὑπερμεγέθη μέτρῳ ἀπεριορίστῳ... (“there seemed to appear to me a gigantic figure of immense size...”). Nock & Festugière, Corpus Hermeticum, I.8, n. 3 list further instances of the topos.

⁵⁵⁰ In the PGM the immense size of the deity conforms to the attribute of Aion (cf. XII.238–44; XIII.761–94). Cf. the Homer Hymn to Demeter, ll. 188–89 regarding the epiphany of Demeter: ἥ δ' ἄρ' ἐπ' οὐδὸν ἔβη ποσὶ καὶ ῥά μελάθρου κύρε κάρη, πλῆσεν δὲ θύρας σέλαος θεῖοιο (“But she stepped on the threshold and her head reached the roof, and she filled the door with divine splendor”); *Orph. his shining face.⁵⁵¹ His youth is analogous to Helios (l. 635), as is his golden hair (cf. l. 636),⁵⁵² white tunic (cf. l. 636), and golden crown (cf. l. 637).⁵⁵³ There are, however, special traits: with the Persian or Phrygian cap missing he looks like a Greek god, namely Helios-Mithras, but he does wear the Persian trousers called ἀναξυρίδες.⁵⁵⁴ This last feature is also present on paintings from Dura Europus (Syria), Capua Vetere, Ponza, and San Marino (Italy).⁵⁵⁵

After the description of the figure attention turns to the mythological insignia, symbolically interpreted as astronomical phenomena (ll. 699–702): κατέχοντα τῇ δεξιᾷ χειρὶ μόνου ὄμου χρύσεον (“and holding in his right hand a golden shoulder of a young calf”). This statement has given rise to extended controversies past and present. While Dieterich rightly saw this to be evidence of Mithraism, now confirmed by subsequently discovered frescoes,⁵⁵⁶ others denied or belittled it.⁵⁵⁷

A symbolic interpretation of this detail is on the one hand in accord with the author’s interest, but on the other hand astronomical interpretations have been ⁵⁵¹ The shining face of the deity is a common element of epiphanies, whether in texts or artistic representations. Cf. the NT in Mark 16:15; Matt 17:2; Luke 9:29; Acts 6:15; 9:1–9; 2 Cor 4:6; Rev 1:14; 10:1; 22:4.

⁵⁵² The epithet χρυσοκόμων is standard for Helios in III.207; IV.437, 1958; VIII.75; for its attribution to Apollo see Furley & Bremer, Greek Hymns, 2.87, 325.

⁵⁵³ For the golden crown, see also III.485; IV.1027–28. Cf. in the NT Rev 4:4; 9:7; 14:14. See Hans-Jürgen Horn, “Gold,” RAC 11 (1981) 895–930, esp. 910–12: “Gold in der Magie”; Aune, Revelation, 1.172–75.

⁵⁵⁴ This garment worn by eastern peoples is mentioned only here in the PGM; it is attested since Herodotus (1.71; 5.49; 7.61; Lucian, Hist. cons. 19; Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 1.25). See also LSJ, s.v. ἀναξυρίδες.

⁵⁵⁷ For a careful analysis of Cumont’s position, see Dieterich, 234–40. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.243–44) admits that the god is Mithras, but for him he is Helios-Mithras; remarkably Merkelbach ignores the newly discovered frescoes. Also, his work on Mithras, in the tradition of Cumont, has no comment about the Mithras Liturgy. See Roger Beck, review of Merkelbach, Mithras, Phoe. 41 (1987) 296–316, esp. 310.

connected with the Mithras cult much earlier.⁵⁵⁸ The text itself presupposes such a connection (ll. 700–1): ὃς ἐστὶν Ἄρκτος ἡ κινουῖσα καὶ ἀντιστρέφουσα τὸ οὐρανόν, κατὰ ὥραν ἀναπολεύουσα καὶ καταπολεύουσα (“this is the Bear which moves and turns the heavenly vault around in the opposite direction, with its upward and downward seasonal revolutions” [as translated by Martinez]). The conceptuality is technical but has problems. Which Bear does the author have in mind, the Little Bear (Ursus minor) or the Great Bear (Ursus maior)? Griffiths opts for the Great Bear,⁵⁵⁹ while Merkelbach for the Little Bear.⁵⁶⁰

A decision is difficult to make. The Bear constellations play an important role in the PGM, but this does not necessarily mean that all references point to the same constellation.⁵⁶¹ As far as ll. 700–1 goes, identification with Artemis as well as comparison of the zodiacs from Ponza and Tentyra point to the Great Bear.⁵⁶²

That the Bear “moves and turns the heavenly vault around in the opposite direction” is confirmed in part by parallel references in the PGM, but it is not clear what is meant by ἀντιστρέφειν. One possibility is that the god turns the heavenly vault contrariwise to the motion of the planets.⁵⁶³ Also unclear is the ⁵⁵⁸ See Beck, Planetary Gods; idem, “The Mysteries of Mithras: A New Account of Their Genesis,” JRS 88 (1998) 115–28.

⁵⁶¹ For other passages on Bear constellations, see IV.1275–1330; 1331–89; VII.633, 686–702, 861; XII.190–92; XXIII.10; LVII.18. See Betz, GMPT, 137–38, esp. nn. 123–28; Beck, “Interpreting the Ponza Zodiac II,” 120–27.

⁵⁶² Cf. the Bear charm VII.686–702, identifying the constellation with Artemis, but identifications with other deities are made as well. See Beck, Planetary Gods, 79; idem, “Interpreting the Ponza Zodiac,” JMiS 1:1 (1976), 2, fig. 1.

⁵⁶³ ἀντιστρέφειν is found only here in the PGM. Cf. IV.1307: στρέφειν τὸν ἱερὸν πόλον; VII.687: ἡ στρέφουσα τὸν ἄξονα; IV.1275–80. See Beck, “Interpreting the Ponza Zodiac II,” 121–22; LSJ does not list ἀντιστρέφω as a mechanical term, but ἀντίστρεπτος, referring to astrological comment of “with its upward and downward seasonal revolutions.” Who is causing this revolving? Dieterich suggests the pole lords,⁵⁶⁴ but according to Gundel the text refers to the Bear who moves the gods of the days and hours, causing them to wander up and down along the pole.⁵⁶⁵

Following the interpretative lines 701–2, the text returns to the description of the figure of Mithras (ll. 702–4): ἔπειτα ὄψη αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῶν ὀμμάτων ἀστραπὰς καὶ ἐκ τοῦ σώματος ἀστέρας ἀλλομένους (“Then you will see lightning bolts leaping from his eyes and stars from his body”).⁵⁶⁶ Since the references to time and vision are stereotypical in the ML, the cosmic features seem to reflect dramatic representations.⁵⁶⁷ The author could have seen this feature on representational portraits of Mithras, whose open mantle shows stars on the inside; he therefore imagines that those stars jump out of his body.

When confronted with this awesome vision, the initiate is ordered at once to perform rituals. The first one is the bellowing sound (704–7): σὺ δέ, εὐθέως <μυκῶ> μύκωμα μακρόν, βασανίζων τὴν γαστέρα, ἵνα συνκινήσης τὰς πέντε αἰσθήσεις, μακρόν εἰς ἀπόθεσιν μυκῶ, καταφιλῶν πάλιν τὰ φυλακτήρια.⁵⁶⁸ (“And at once make a long bellowing sound, straining your belly, that you may excite the five senses; bellow long until out of breath, and again kiss the phylacteries.”)

This bellowing sound has been mentioned before,⁵⁶⁹ but further intensity is added at this point. Not only must the initiate perform it “at once,” a stereotypical prescription in the ML,⁵⁷⁰ the roaring or bellowing sound is to be loud (μακρόν), achieved by pressing the belly (cf. l. 659) until total exhalation.

⁵⁶⁸ Eitrem adds a verb <μυκῶ> before μύκωμα; Jordan agrees. The punctuation follows Dieterich (14); Preisendanz has a different punctuation: αἰσθήσεις, μακρόν εἰς ἀπόθεσιν, μυκῶ.... See Preisendanz, WSI 42 (1920–21) 24, sec. 8; idem, app. crit., ad loc. Jordan considers συνκινήσης but keeps συνκινήσης.

⁵⁶⁹ It occurs elsewhere in the ML at ll. 490, 657–59, 712; see also XIII.942, 945.

⁵⁷⁰ See for this reference ll. 557, 576, 579, 585, 628, 638, 724, 755–57.

tion.⁵⁷¹ The purpose of the exercise is to arouse the five senses together, a strange remark, since the mortal body must be left behind (ll. 529–30, 533–34). Rather than postulating an inconsistency on the part of the author, however, one may conclude that he views the five senses not to be a part of the mortal body, but of the reconstituted perceptions of the intellect, sharpened up by the spirit (ll. 502–13, 520–28).

The second ritual is kissing the pylacteries (ll. 707–8), which, the text says, has been mentioned before (πάλιν, “again”).⁵⁷² Together with this ritual, a prayer for protection must be recited (καὶ λέγων, “and saying”). This prayer has the usual structure of invocation, self-identification of the orant, request, identification of the authority. However, there are special features that make this prayer different from others (ll. 708–11).

The invocation (ll. 708–9) begins with what may be a divine name: μοκριμο φερεμο φερερι.⁵⁷³ This divine name is followed by an epithet: ζω<ή> μου (“my life”).⁵⁷⁴ With the symbol Δ (τοῦ δεῦνα) a space is indicated, into which the orant must insert his name.⁵⁷⁵

The reading of ll. 709–10 is contested. According to Preisendanz three commands are presented: μένε σύ, νέμε ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ μου, μὴ με καταλείψης (“Stay! Dwell in my soul! Do not abandon me!”). The first request has many parallels in the PGM.⁵⁷⁶ The second is read by Preisendanz,⁵⁷⁷ but the use of ⁵⁷¹ The expression εἰς ἀπόθεσιν is unclear, and so are translations; cf. Preisendanz: “bis zum Nachlassen”; we follow a suggestion by Martinez. According to Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.244), εἰς ἀπόθεσιν means “Ruhepunkt,” derived from the language of music. This idea is interesting because the various vocal sounds in the ML may be regarded as a kind of music.

⁵⁷² See 659–60, cf. also 789.

⁵⁷³ The name occurs only here in the PGM; it is unexplained.

⁵⁷⁴ Pap. reads φερερι ζων μουτουΔ, but ζων may be a scribal error for ζωή. See Karl Preisendanz, “ΦΕΡΕΡΙΖΩΝ,” WKP 32 (1915) 763. For ζων as a divine epithet see Martinez, Baptized, 12–15; for ζωή in magical inscriptions, see Erik Peterson, ΕΙΣ ΘΕΟΣ. Epigraphische, formgeschichtliche und religionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen (FRLANT 41; Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1926), 26; in PGM ζωή occurs also at XII.255–56; XIII.261 (κύριε τῆς ζωῆς), 880–81 (γενοῦ μοι... ζωή); for Jesus as ζωή see John 11:25; 14:6 (see BDAG, s.v., 2.a). Jordan prefers the pap. reading ζων μου.

⁵⁷⁶ For passages, see Preisendanz, 3.135 (index), s.v. μένω; BDAG, s.v. μένω, 1.a.β (bibliography); Reitzenstein, HMR, 44, 73, 177–84, 709. The concept, sometimes called “mystical,” is important especially in the Fourth Gospel (John 6:56; 14:10; 15:4–7; etc.); see Dölger, Sol Salutis, 1–2 (with important passages from Origen and Augustine, in fact agreeing with the Stoic position of the “deity within”); Festugière, Révélation, 3.172–73; Jürgen Heise, *Bleiben. ⁵⁷⁷ Pap. reads μενεσυνεμε, which Dieterich (14) reads as μένε σὺν ἐμε, Wunsch (in Dieterich, 107) emends to σύναιμε, Kroll to μένε, but Jordan prefers Dieterich. For νέμε

the term νέμω in PGM elsewhere is different.⁵⁷⁸ The final request states the matter with a different term, for which parallels can be adduced as well.⁵⁷⁹

Dieterich has recognized that this prayer is “mystical” and seems to come from a tradition different from the views presented so far in the ML: “We recognize in the background the most massive and ancient concept of the union of the human being and the god: the god comes into the human being physically.”⁵⁸⁰ For the background he refers to parallels in the PGM and elsewhere.⁵⁸¹ It is true that up to now the initiate did not ask for this indwelling of a god. However, if one realizes the fundamental importance of inhaling the divine spirit (πνεῦμα) for generating “enthusiasm,” the idea is not strange at all. We find it not only in the PGM,⁵⁸² but in many other Hellenistic Weinreich (in Dieterich, 224) has an important comment: “Man hat dann νέμειν (wie Pind. Ol. 2.13; Aisch. Eum. 971) als νέμεσθαι zu fassen mit dem Sinn des Wohnens: ‘bleibe du, wohne in meiner Seele’. Das entspricht der Auffassung vom Wohnen des Gottes im Menschen und seiner ἐνώσεις mit dem Gläubigen durchaus, vgl. unten S. 110,2. Vielleicht darf man auch weitergehen und das Bild der [sic! des] νέμειν unterstreichen; dann ist das Gleichnis vom Hirten und dem Gotte da.” On νέμω act. as med. see LSJ, s.v., III. If Preisendanz is correct, a play on words may be intended: μένε / νέμε. Cf. also the hymn to Eros IV.1763–64: ὁ ἐπινεμόμενος πάσαις ψυχαῖς (“the one who dwells in all souls”).

⁵⁷⁸ Cf. VII.761–63: ἵνα... πνεῦμα νέμης; XII.247: πᾶσιν ψυχὰς σὺ νέμεις. For the indwelling of the divine πνεῦμα see XIII.761–805; XII.238–57; cf. the NT, where the spirit does not dwell (οἰκέω, ἐνοικέω) in the soul but in the heart or body (e.g., Rom 5:5; 8:9, 11, 15–16; 1 Cor 3:16; Eph 3:17; 2 Tim 1:14).

⁵⁸⁰ Dieterich (96–97): “Wir erkennen im Hintergrunde deutlich die massivste ursprüngliche Vorstellung von der Vereinigung des Menschen und des Gottes: der Gott kommt körperlich in den Menschen hinein.”

⁵⁸¹ Dieterich (96–97, 116–31, 134–37, 240) refers to Otto Weinreich’s essay on the formula of reciprocal identity (“reziproke Identitätsformel”): “Religiöse Stimmen der Völker,” ARIW 19 (1916–1919) 165–68. For the NT see John 10:38; 14:10–11, 20; 17:21.

⁵⁸² See I.20–21: καὶ ἔσται τι ἐνθεον ἐν τῇ σῇ καρδίᾳ; VIII.2–3: ἐλ[θ]έ μοι, κύριε Ἑρμῆ, ὡς τὰ βρέφη εἰς τὰ <ς> κοιλίας τῶν γυναικῶν (“Come to me, lord Hermes, as fetuses come into the wombs of women” [my trans.]). The formula of mutual identity occurs several times in this papyrus: σὺ γὰρ ἐγὼ καὶ ἐγὼ σὺ, τὸ σὸν ὄνομα ἐμὸν καὶ τὸ ἐμὸν σόν· ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι τὸ εἰδωλόν σου (“For you are I, and I am you, your name is mine, and mine is yours; for I am your image” [VIII.36–37; see also ll. 49–50; XIII.795]). The erotic connections should be obvious. See Dieterich, 96–98; Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 242–46; idem, HMR, 245–52; Bousset, Kyrios Christos, 48–50, 111–20, 343; Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 165–69.

texts.⁵⁸³ Also the ancient theories about the inspiration of the Delphic Pythia are especially important for comparison.⁵⁸⁴

Finally, the nature of the request is stated. It is an order, ὅτι κελεύει σοι ("for the [magical name] commands you"),⁵⁸⁵ which, as indicated by the magical names ενθο φενεν θροπιωθ, has the divine authority to enforce.⁵⁸⁶

Before making his appearance, however, the god needs to be greeted appropriately. This greeting follows in ll. 712–17, showing the same pattern as the previous greeting before: invocation, self-presentation, and petition (see 639–55, 665–92).

First, however, the necessary rituals have to be performed. They include the gazing (see at l. 556) and the loud roaring or bellowing sound (see ll. 704–7): καὶ ἀτένιζε τῷ θεῷ μακρὸν μυκώμενος καὶ ἀσπάζου οὕτως ("and gaze at the god while bellowing loudly, and greet in this manner").

Then the prayer itself is to be recited (713–17), beginning with the address "Lord" (κύριε), and followed by three greetings, consisting of the exclamation "Hail!" and a divine attribute: χαῖρε, δέσποτα ὕδατος, χαῖρε, κατάρχα γῆς, χαῖρε, δυνάστα πνεύματος ("Hail, O master of the water! Hail, O founder of the earth! Hail, O ruler of the wind!"). The god is called upon as the ruler of the elements of water,⁵⁸⁷ earth,⁵⁸⁸ and wind/air/spirit.⁵⁸⁹ This is complemented by two further attributes: λαμπροφεγγῇ and προπροφεγγῇ, which are both associated with fire.⁵⁹⁰ The conclusion consists of the string of vores magicae, similar to those found in ll. 562–65, 603–4):⁵⁹¹ εμεθιρι αρτεντεπι θηθ μινεω νεναρω φυρχεχω ψηρι δαριω φρη φρηλβα.⁵⁹²

⁵⁸⁵ The terms κελεύειν (ll. 482–83, 710) and κέλευμα (l. 680) occur also elsewhere in the PGM in connection with issuing orders to deities. See Preisendanz, 3.119 (index), s.v.

⁵⁸⁶ The magical names are found only here in the PGM, and unexplained. Cf. Brashear ("The Greek Magical Papyri," 3584) who points to εντω (IV. 711; VIII.7; cf. εντω VII.556; XIX.a.1: ενθι εντω) as representing Egyptian ndw, "Glänzender" (?). Already Preisendanz, 3.253 (index), s.v., adds: "'Sonnenglanz, Glänzender, Voller' (Hermes/Thoth)"; the reference is by K. F. W. Schmidt, GGA 1934, 183.

The final step is the presentation of the petition (717–24). After the long and arduous ascension, the actual petition is surprisingly brief (cf. the petition to Helios, ll. 642–55). Addressing the god again as “lord” (κύριε),⁵⁹³ the initiate requests an oracular session with the god: χρημάτισον, κύριε, περὶ τοῦ δεῖνα πράγματος (“Give revelation, O lord, concerning the NN matter”). The term χρηματίζειν is technical and means “to grant an oracular response.”⁵⁹⁴ The subject matter of the inquiry has to be filled in by the petitioner; it is of course not mentioned in the text because every petitioner will want to have his or her own business to present. Merkelbach comments at this point: “This would mean that the oracle inquirer could ask the god for a revelation concerning any subject matter whatsoever. One would then certainly also have to assume that the question would have been submitted in written form the evening or night before. However, it is more likely that the long-winding ceremony was used originally on only a few issues of great importance, and that it was only secondarily applied to all kinds of purposes.”⁵⁹⁵ An ordinary oracular inquiry would indeed proceed as Merkelbach suggests, but then the question arises, Why is such an extensive ascension ⁵⁹⁰ For λαμπροφεγγής cf. IV.386; according to PGL and TLG, the term is attested in patristic and Byzantine literature (Gregory of Nazianzus, Christus patiens [PG 38.208]; Germanus I of Constantinople [died 733], Or. 3.1 [PG 98.292C]); for προπροφεγγή, see the logos in ll. 562–65, 603–4, with proximity of φιλβα; according to the TLG, there is no other attestation.

⁵⁹⁵ Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.244: “Dies würde bedeuten, daß der Orakelsucher über jedes beliebige Thema einen Wahrspruch des Gottes erbitten konnte. Man müßte dann sicherlich außerdem annehmen, daß die Anfrage schon am Vorabend oder in der Vornacht schriftlich eingereicht worden ist. Man wird doch eher vermuten, daß die aufwendige Zeremonie ursprünglich nur zu wenigen, ganz besonderen Anlässen benützt worden ist und erst sekundär zu verschiedenen Zwecken herangezogen wurde.”

ritual necessary, if no more than a simple answer is expected? Merkelbach concludes that the ascension ritual must have been put to a secondary usage. In other words, the magician would go through a lot of ritualistic pomp and circumstance, just to give greater status to what in reality could be done in a less spectacular way. This suggestion takes up ideas of Dieterich who sees the redactor as having caused the problem. He "uses the liturgy for obtaining oracular responses." Nobody can of course say what portion of the text he may have excised, or what may have been the content of the omission.⁵⁹⁶

It seems more likely, however, that the reference to the subject matter (πρᾶγμα) of the inquiry was not ordinary but extraordinary. After all, the practitioner is seeking a personal interview with the highest god Helios-Mithras-Aion. It would be odd to assume that the inquirer who exhibits a philosophical interest in cosmological and anthropological questions would approach this god with mundane banalities. Rather, one should remember the highflying aims stated already in the exordium (483–84) of "walking (into) heaven and looking over all things." Consequently, one should assume that the inquirer will seek answers to questions of ultimate concern, including the nature of the cosmos and his own self.⁵⁹⁷ Before the gods grant the request (ll. 724–27), however, the inquirer needs to present himself and his credentials as an initiate.⁵⁹⁸

The great synthema in ll. 719–24 appears to be a citation,⁵⁹⁹ by repeating it from an earlier initiation ritual the present inquirer demonstrates his qualifications. This synthema has close parallels in the Orphic-Dionysiac gold-tablets,

⁵⁹⁶ Dieterich (82): "... so kommt hier der umarbeitende Magier zu Wort, der die Liturgie benutzt zur Erlangung von Wahrsagungen. Was er etwa abgeschnitten hat an dem Texte, was etwa noch folgte nach dem von uns Herausgehobenen, kann natürlich niemand sagen. Ich habe wohl diese und jene Vermutung, aber da ich nicht einmal Sicherheit geben kann, da ß etwas fehlt, lasse ich sie unausgesprochen."

⁵⁹⁷ Note also PDM xiv.670–74 (Janet H. Johnson, in Betz, GMPT, 232): "...the gods never go away without you having questioned them about everything so that they say to you the answer about heaven, earth, the underworld, a distant inquiry, water and fields." Cf. the physician Thessalos who has a session with the god Asclepius to learn from him the most effective healing plants. See, also for other parallels, Merkelbach, Abraxas, 3.84–85.

⁵⁹⁸ Cf. the previous self-presentations to the elements (ll. 516–37), and to Helios (ll. 644–49).

⁵⁹⁹ For the concept of synthema, see above, p. 170. Griffiths (Apuleius, 294–308) discusses the passage in connection with the famous synthema in Metam. 11.23, ll. 11–15; cf. also what Firmicus Maternus (Err. prof. rel. 18, ed. Ziegler) reports about σύμβολα (symbola) in a mystery cult; he cites the tripartite password needed to enter into the inner chambers of the temple: ἐκ τυμπάνου βέβρωκα, ἐκ κυμβάλου πέπωκα, γέγονα μύστης Ἀττεως ("I have eaten from the kettle-drum, I have drunk from the cymbal, I have become an initiate of Attis"). Note that the Greek formula and the Latin translation do not conform (De tympano manducavi, de cymbalo bibi, et religionis secreta perdidici); that there are other versions as well (see Dieterich, 216–17). Of interest are also his comparisons with analogous Christian formulas.

especially the one from the Thessalian Pelinna (end of the 4th c. BCE):⁶⁰⁰ The tripartite formula, referring in cryptic abbreviations to decisive ritual acts, has so far not been conclusively explained.

Kid, you jumped into milk;

Ram, you fell into milk.

You have wine as your fortuitous honor.

And below the earth there are ready for you the same prizes [or: rites] as for the other blessed ones.

To return to the synthema in ll. 718–24, Mithras is addressed again as “lord” (κύριος), after which the initiate offers three fundamental statements of self-understanding:

First, he affirms his human and divine self-understanding by three statements (ll. 718–22):

παλινγενόμενος ἀπογίγνομαι, αὐξόμενος καὶ αὐξηθεὶς τελευτῶ, ἀπὸ γενέσεως ζωογόνου γενόμενος, εἰς ἀπογενεσίαν ἀναλυθεὶς πορεύομαι.

Having been born again, I am passing away;

while growing and having grown, I am dying;

Having been born from a life-generating birth, I am passing on, released to death.⁶⁰¹

⁶⁰⁰ Cited according to Christoph Riedweg, “Initiation – Tod – Unterwelt. Beobachtungen zur Kommunikationssituation und narrativen Technik der orphisch-bakchischen Goldblättchen,” in Graf, Ansichten griechischer Rituale, 359–98 (the citation, 392; the interpretation, 370–75); Betz, “Zur Lehre vom Menschen,” ibid., 411 (also Antike und Christentum, 234–35). The translation follows, with some variation, Fritz Graf, “Dionysian and Orphic Eschatology: New Texts and Old Questions,” in Thomas H. Carpenter & Christopher A. Faraone, eds., Masks of Dionysus (Ithaca, NY: Cornell University Press, 1993), 239–58 (the citation and interpretation, 241–50).

⁶⁰¹ Scholars are divided on the translation of the phrase εἰς ἀπογενεσίαν ἀναλυθεὶς. Clearly, ἀπογενεσία is the opposite of γένεσις, γενόμενος, and παλινγενεσία; ἀναλυθεὶς

The structure of polarity is apparent, although the meaning can only be guessed. If the inquirer speaks as an initiate, which seems an obvious conclusion, what do the self-definitions define, his newly achieved divine status or his human status? Since he states his achievement of rebirth and regeneration as past experiences, the verbs in the present tense must define his imminent condition.⁶⁰² Although the formula is now part of the greeting of Mithras, the words seem to point to a different context, such as that of a formula recited before the initiate's natural death, a kind of "Sterbeformel" comparable to Rom 14:7–9:

οὐδείς γὰρ ἑμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῆ καὶ οὐδείς ἑαυτῷ ἀποθνήσκει·
 ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν, τῷ κυρίῳ ζῶμεν, ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τῷ κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκομεν. ἐάν τε οὖν ζῶμεν ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, τοῦ κυρίου ἐσμέν.

We do not live to ourselves and we do not die to ourselves.
 If we live, we live to the Lord, and if we die, we die to the Lord;
 so then, whether we live or whether we die, we are the Lord's.⁶⁰³

Second, three further statements affirm the divine authority which supports the initiate's present self-understanding:

ὥς σὺ ἔκτισας
 ὥς σὺ ἐνομοθέτησας, καὶ ἐποίησας μυστήριον.

"as you have founded,
 as you have decreed,
 and have authored (the) mystery."

corresponds to τελευτῶ. For a discussion of ἀπογενεσία see Festugière (Révélation, 1.307, n. 6) who points to the parallels in PGM V.155 (ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ γεννῶν καὶ ἀπογεννῶν) and Plotinus, En. III.4.6.12 (εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ σχῆμα ἐλθεῖν μετὰ τὴν ἀπογένεσιν). Reitzenstein (GGA 185 [1923] 51) renders it as "entferne ich mich" ("I remove myself"); Erwin Rohde (Psyche, 2.421–22); Dieterich (15): "werde ich in den Tod erlöst"; Preisendanz: "zum Sterben aufgelöst"; Festugière (Révélation, 1.307): "je me dissous pour entrer dans la mort"; Meyer: "I am passing on, released to death"; Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.175): "ins Ablegen des Lebens aufgelöst werde(n)."

⁶⁰² As an important parallel, Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.244) refers to the Christian formulation in Firmicus Maternus, Err. prof. rel. 22 (ed. Konrat Ziegler [München: Huber, 1953], 70): ut sepulto prima homine ex eodem statim homine homo alius felicius <re>nascatur ("that when the first man is buried, from that same man at once another, happier, man is reborn" [my trans.]).

⁶⁰³ The text is cited according to Nestle–Aland, 27th ed. rev.; the translation is that of NRSV. Cf. also for baptismal formulae Rom 6:1–12, and my essay, "Transferring a Ritual: Paul's Interpretation of Baptism in Romans 6," Paulinische Studien, 240–71, esp. 261–70.

The precise meaning of this part of the formula seems unclear. It appears originally to belong to a different hymnic context unknown to us.⁶⁰⁴ The object μυστήριον, without article, may refer to all three lines; since it names an object known to the practitioner, the article (the) may fit in English. That object seems to be the ritual as a whole.⁶⁰⁵

Third, the resultant self-definition of the initiate is summed up in a very concise statement. The decisive insight gained from his initiation is that he has come to understand himself as an individual self (ἐγὼ εἰμι),⁶⁰⁶ identified by his secret name.⁶⁰⁷ ἐγὼ εἰμι φερουρα μιουρι.

Rather arbitrarily, Dieterich believes that the immortalization ritual (ἀπαθανατισμός) ends at this point, and that a new section dealing with the granting of an oracular response begins.⁶⁰⁸ “We feel in these last words a kind of conclusion of the consecration, its purpose being the rebirth, the immortalization of the initiate after the needs of the bodily life. This aim is stated in the text time and again with great clarity. When, therefore, in the papyrus the sentence follows: ταῦτά σου εἰπόντος εὐθέως χρησμοδῆσει (Μίθρας), this is the statement by the magician who is reworking the liturgy for the purpose of ⁶⁰⁴ Martinez rightly proposes the sense of a recusatio: “not I but you...” He refers to a parallel in an Egyptian charm translated by Borghouts: “it is not I who have said it, it is not I who have repeated it. It is this magic that comes for NN born of NN that has said it, that has repeated it...” Cited and discussed in Martinez, P. Michigan XVI, 72–73.

⁶⁰⁵ See also Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 170, n. 75; 224, 258; Antike und Christentum, 170, 178). For the term μυστήριον, without article, as referring to the mystery ritual as divinely authored (ποιεῖν), see also Dieterich (14–15), Preisendanz, Festugièrè, Meyer, and Merkelbach (Abraxas, 3.175–76, 244); μυστήριον (l. 723) can, as instances in ll. 746, 794 show, refer also to things other than the ritual as such (l. 476: plural, τὰ μυστήρια). That the mystery cult has been instituted by the deity is a common doctrine. E.g., the Eleusinian mysteries were instituted by Demeter (Hom. Hymn to Demeter 473–76: δρησμοσύνην θ' ἱερῶν καὶ ἐπέφραδεν ὄργια πᾶσι (“She showed the conduct of her rites and taught them all her mysteries”). According to CH, Frag. XXIII (Kore Kosmou), § 68, the mysteries of Isis and Osiris were revealed by the νομοθεσεῖται of Hermes. For more material see Hopfner, OZ 2/1, Chapter 1. Cf. Col 1:26–27; 2:2–3.

⁶⁰⁷ The name is found only here, and unexplained.

obtaining an oracular response.”⁶⁰⁹ Consequently, he assumes that the words φρη φρηλβα· χρημάτισον, κύριε, περὶ τοῦ Δ πράγματος (ll. 717–18) have been secondarily inserted by the redactor, in order to coordinate the two sections (15, 16).⁶¹⁰

There is nothing in the text, however, to suggest such a redactional seam. The elements of the phrase, ταῦτά σου εἰπόντος εὐθέως χρησμοδῆσει (“after you have said these things, he will immediately respond with a revelation”), have appeared before in different situations to indicate progress in the narrative.⁶¹¹ The term χρησμοδεῖν is technical and designates the oracular response.⁶¹² As already mentioned above, the text does not report any material content of questions and answers. Rather, the purpose and aim of the ritual is to bring the inquirer up to the point of meeting the god in person, leaving a space for the consultation to take place and for the issue (πρᾶγμα) to be submitted in conversation.⁶¹³

The very next step comments on the condition of the inquirer during the consultation (ll. 725–26): ὑπέκλυτος δὲ ἔσει τῇ ψυχῇ καὶ οὐκ ἐν σεαυτῷ ἔσει, ὅταν σοι ἀποκρίνηται (“now you will grow weak in your soul, and you will not be in yourself, when he answers you”). Several parallel passages confirm that this is the typical condition of a person in ecstasy or thereafter.⁶¹⁴

⁶¹⁰ On the methods of collating sources used by ancient scribes, see Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.86–90.

⁶¹¹ See the parallels in ll. 576, 620–21, 633, 655–56. For εὐθέως (“at once”), see at l. 557.

⁶¹⁴ Actually, “not being in (or: by) yourself” defines ecstasy (ἔκστασις), see below, ll. 737–38. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.240) points to Thessalos’s encounter with Asclepius (Prooem. 24, ed. Friedrich, p. 53, l. 14; also Totti, Texte, 117 [# 45]). When the god appeared, Thessalos almost lost his mind: καθεζομένου δέ μου καὶ ἐκλυομένου τοῦ σώματος

Dieterich's comment is to the point: "The phenomenon of ἐνθουσιασμός ["enthusiasm, ecstasy"] in the proper sense is well-known to us. Primarily it is meant to be physically possessed by the god. This idea changes time and again with the other, that the human being, the soul, or the spirit ascends to the sphere of the god. ἔκστασις ['ecstasy'] is derived from this viewpoint."⁶¹⁵

The session with the god then concludes (ll. 727–28): λέγει δέ σοι διὰ στίχων τὸν χρησμόν καὶ εἰπὼν(ν) ἀπελεύσεται⁶¹⁶ ("he, however, speaks the oracle to you in verses, and after speaking he will depart"). Dieterich's (82–83) astute observation that the session ends rather abruptly is one of the reasons why he assumes that a section at the end may have been excised by the redactor, which in turn supports Dieterich's ideas concerning the composition. He perceives the absence of a narrative of a ritual dealing with the inquirer's return from heaven to earth.⁶¹⁷ It is the case, to be sure, that the ML

The opening paragraph of the "Poimandres" (CHI.1) presents a kind of classic statement: Ἐννοίας μοί ποτε γενομένης περὶ τῶν ὄντων καὶ μετεωρισθείσης μοι τῆς διανοίας σφόδρα, κατασχεθεισῶν μου τῶν σωματικῶν αἰσθήσεων, καθάπερ τῶν ὕπνῳ βεβαρημένοι ἐκ κόρου τροφῆς ἢ ἐκ κόπου σώματος... So I fell upon my face." Paul's vision of Christ on the road to Damascus causes his physical collapse, described in Acts 9:3–9; 22:6–11.

⁶¹⁶ Pap. reads εἰπὼ with the ν expressed by a supralinear stroke; thus, the reading εἰπὼν by Dieterich (16) is correct.

says nothing about a ritual of return⁶¹⁸ or of the god's dismissal.⁶¹⁹ Also, there is no indication of how long the session would last. Rather than being short, the epilogue even presupposes that the revelation could include thousands of verses, which would require a considerably longer time. How then can the missing return of the inquirer be explained?

The conclusion of the ritual again looks at the inquirer and provides several instructions (ll. 728–32). The first of these involves his resulting condition (ll. 728–29): σὺ δὲ στήκεις ἐνεὸς, ὡς ταῦτα πάντα χωρήσεις αὐτομάτως⁶²⁰ (“but you stand speechless, [wondering] how you will by yourself comprehend all these things”).⁶²¹ It appears that after having received the response, the inquirer is faced with two questions, one being comprehension, and the other, recollection.⁶²² Two promises deal with them. The first assures him that he will indeed comprehend everything αὐτομάτως (“by himself, spontaneously”).⁶²³ The other promise assures him unfailing remembrance (ll. 729–30): καὶ τότε μνημονεύσεις ἀπαραβάτως τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου θεοῦ ῥηθέντα, καὶ ἦν μυρίων στίχων ὁ χρησμός (“for at a later time you will remember ⁶¹⁸ For such narratives of return, see Plutarch, Gen. Socr. 22, 592E; Lucian, Icarom. 2; 34; 2 Cor 12:2–4.

⁶¹⁹ For such ritual dismissals, see, e.g., I.94–95, 170, 184–86, 334–47; II.176–83; III.258; IV.252–53; XI.a.35; (Demotic) xiv.110, 505, 670.

⁶²¹ Cf. after Paul’s vision of Christ, the men accompanying him stand speechless, Acts 9:7: οἱ δὲ ἄνδρες... εἰστήκεισαν ἐνεοί.

⁶²² Translations differ at this point because ἐνεὸς can be taken in two ways, either as “speechless and wondering how ...” or “stand in amazement that you will by yourself comprehend all these things” (Preisendanz: “Du aber steh stumm, denn du wirst das alles von selbst verstehen”; Meyer: “But you remain silent, since you will be able to comprehend all these matters by yourself”; Merkelbach: “aber du wirst stumm dastehen und darüber staunen, daß Du alles von selbst behältst, was der große Gott gesagt hat”).

⁶²³ For the term χωρεῖν (“comprehend”), see Dieterich (16, app. crit.; 83); BDAG, s.v. χωρέω, 3,b,β; αὐτομάτως, an important term in miracle stories, is a hapax in the PGM; see BDAG, s.v. αὐτόματος.

Cf. the concern in 1 En. 1:2 (OTP 1.13): “(This is) a holy vision from the heavens which the angels showed me; and I heard from them everything and I understood.”

infallibly the things spoken by the great god,⁶²⁴ even if the oracle contains myriads of verses”).⁶²⁵ Several things are made known here about the nature of the revelation.

First, ll. 725–26 lead to the conclusion that the journey to heaven as a whole is experienced in ecstasy. According to the worldview expressed in the text, this means that the initiate “left the earth” in a state of trance, which for him is physical, and not only a mental experience. One must be cautious at this point. The experience is, of course, imaginative, but it is nonetheless “real” in the sense that the initiate’s physical as well as mental state is participating. If, however, it appears to us as outsiders that the initiate does not move an inch off the ground and that there is no account of a return, this fact only reveals our lack of understanding of what is implied in an ecstatic experience. Therefore, when the god departs the initiate comes out of his trance, this is the moment when he finds himself “standing speechless” (ll. 728–29).⁶²⁶

Second, the oracular response envisaged is called “the words of the great god,” revealed directly without a mediating interpreter, a mouth-to-mouth (στόμα πρὸς στόμα) or face-to-face (πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον) revelation.⁶²⁷ Furthermore, they are given in verse, as such oracles should be.⁶²⁸ Surprisingly, they add up to a collection of myriads of verses. Regarding this last point, one wonders whether the author has oracle collections, perhaps even a ⁶²⁴ That the problem of remembering the revelation was an important concern is shown by parallels in connection with the oracle of Trophonius (see Pausanias 39.8–14, and Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 185–86, and Plutarch, Sera 33, 568A): At his return from the journey to the afterlife, Thespesius is touched with a glowing-hot rod, so as to preserve the memory (see Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 204). Cf. also the charms in PGM called “memory spells” (μνημονική), I.232–47; II.40–42; III.424–66, 467–78; etc.

⁶²⁶ Cf. also Paul’s intended ambiguity in 2 Cor 12:2–4. Regarding the man snatched up into the third heaven, he confesses “whether in the body I don’t know, whether out of the body I don’t, God knows.”

⁶²⁷ See I.2–3: τὸ στόμα πρὸς τὸ στόμα συνόμιλος τῷ θεῷ (“mouth to mouth he was a companion of the god”). According to ancient views, these oracles had the highest value. Cf. of Moses LXX Num 12:6–8; Deut 5:4; also 1 Cor 13:12, and BDAG, s.v. πρόσωπον, 1.b.

⁶²⁸ See Plutarch’s essay “Why oracles are no longer given in verse” (De Pythiae oraculis), in which he discusses current theories of decline of the Greek oracles because they are turning to prose. See Schröder, Plutarch’s Schrift, 53–55, 67 n. 1; 314.

specific one, in mind.⁶²⁹ At any rate, he names a problem that no doubt has led to such collections.⁶³⁰

With l. 732 the ritual of immortalization (ἀπαθανατισμός) concludes. What follows are supplementary instructions.

III. Supplemental rituals (ll. 732–819)

As the analysis shows, part III (ll. 732–819) contains supplemental rituals. There are two kinds of those supplements: first, three options for including a fellow-initiate in the oracular consultation (ll. 732–50); second, three additional instructions for preparing ingredients to be used in the ritual (ll. 750–819).⁶³¹

A. Optional rituals for including a fellow-initiate in the consultation (ll. 732–50)

The three optional rituals, coordinated by ἐὰν δὲ καὶ..., ἐὰν δὲ καὶ..., ἐὰν δὲ καὶ...,⁶³² concern the oracular consultation presented above (ll. 724–28). These rituals are not to be confused with initiations, because the additional person to be included in the consultation must be someone who, just as the first inquirer, is already an initiate (συμμύστης); the initiations of both consultants are therefore presupposed as having occurred prior to the present ritual text.

1. In the first option (ll. 732–36), the fellow-initiate is to serve as a medium in the consultation: ἐὰν δὲ θέλῃς καὶ συμμύστη χρήσασθαι ὥστε τὰ λεγόμενα ἔχεῖνον μόνον σὺν σοι ἀκούειν... (“But if you want to consult the oracle by using a fellow-initiate [as medium], so that he hears only the things spoken together with you...”). The phrase “if you wish” (ἐὰν δὲ θέλῃς), stating ⁶²⁹ Such as the “Chaldean Oracles” (see Edouard Des Places, “Les Oracles Chaldaïques,” ANRW II.17:4 [1984] 2299–2335); Porphyry, De philosophia ex oraculis exhaurienda librorum reliquiae (ed. Gustav Wolff; Berlin: Springer, 1856). See Nilsson, GGR 2.478–85; Herbert W. Parke & D. E. W. Wormell, The Delphic Oracle (2 vols.; Oxford: Blackwell, 1966); Aune, Early Christian Prophecy, 77–79.

⁶³⁰ Cf. also Apollonius’ consultation of Trophonius, when he reappears from the cave with a book containing the teachings of Pythagoras (Philostratus, V. Apoll. 8.19–20; see Betz, Hellenismus und Urchristentum, 187–88).

⁶³² For καὶ almost equalling αὖ (“again,” “once more” vel sim.) see Denniston, Greek Particles, 305.

options, is attested elsewhere in the PGM.⁶³³ The term συμμύστης is technical and indicates that the adept has been initiated, but perhaps at a lower rank or as child medium.⁶³⁴ The verb χρᾶσθαι appears often in the magical literature, but here it seems to have the more specific meaning of “to make use of a medium.”⁶³⁵ The meaning of the ὥστε-sentence is, at first sight, obscure, but appears to become clearer when compared with the two other options. If the role of the fellow-initiate is that of a medium, a limit is imposed on that role: “so that he hears only the things spoken together with you” (ὥστε τὰ λεγόμενα ἐκεῖνον μόνον σὺν σοι ἀκούειν).⁶³⁶ In the PGM, as well as in the language of the mystery cults, this term usually refers to the words to be spoken by the practitioner of the ritual, but in this context it is more likely that it signifies the utterances of the god (see ll. 731, 737).⁶³⁷

The following statement specifies the conditions the medium has to meet before performing his role: συναγνεύετω σοι <ζ> ἡμέρας καὶ ἀποσχέσθω ἐμψύχων καὶ βαλανείου (“let him be pure together with you for [seven] days, and abstain from meat and bath”).⁶³⁸ These conditions are typical for prelimi-

⁶³³ See I.124; III.495; IV.1720, 2252, 2257, 2301, 3125; XXXVI.151.

⁶³⁵ For the verb referring to a substance see IV.792–93: εἶπεν δέ μοι ὁ θεός· μηκέτι χρῶ τῷ συγχρίσματι). For child mediums see I.86–87; II.56; III.710; IV.89, 850–51; V.1–53 (title: μαντεῖον Σαραπιακόν [ἐπὶ] παιδός, ἐπὶ λύχνου καὶ φιάλας καὶ β[ά]θρου), 375–76; VII.348–58 (title: μαντεῖον ἐπὶ παιδός), 544, 572; XIII.749; LXII.32; PDM xiv.5–10, 150–55, 285–90, 410–15, 460–65, 480–85, 490–95; 515–20, 530, 695, 815–20, 856, 870–75; see Theodor Hopfner, “Die Kindermedien in den griechisch-ägyptischen Zauberpapyri,” in Recueil d'études dédiées à la mémoire de N. P. Kondakov (Prague: Seminarium Kondakovianum, 1926), 65–74.

⁶³⁸ Dieterich adds [ζ] (“seven”) because of the parallel in IV.52. For the importance of seven days, see also I.41 (ἐν ἡμέρ[αις ζ]); II.141–44; III.425–39, 695–97; IV.767, 3209–10; V.244–45; VII.526–27; XIII.114, 671; XCIV.10; PDM xiv.1040–45.

nary purifications or sanctifications.⁶³⁹ The emphasis on “together with you” indicates the role of the mentor/teacher as supervisor, and that of the fellow-initiate as being of lower status. Abstention from “ensouled” food (ἐμψυχος),⁶⁴⁰ that is meat, as well as from bath⁶⁴¹ are the common requirements for sanctification,⁶⁴² however, a third typical requirement, sexual intercourse, is not mentioned.⁶⁴³ These requirements of purity are preconditional for the person’s function as a medium.⁶⁴⁴

2. The second option applies to prophecy without a medium (ll. 736–38): ἐὰν δὲ καὶ μόνος ᾖς καὶ ἐγχειρῇς τὰ ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ εἰρημμένα, λέγεις ὥς ἐν ἐκστάσει ἀποφοιβώμενος⁶⁴⁵ (“But if you are alone, and you are [directly] engaged with the pronouncements of the god, you speak as inspired in ⁶³⁹ The term συναγνεύειν is rare and found only here in the PGM; cf. συναγνίσθητι ἐπευχῇ, “be sanctified together by prayer,” IV.2997–98 (for other readings, see Preisendanz, app. crit., ad loc.). Cf. προαγνεύειν, IV.52; XIII.113, 671. The simplex ἀγνεύειν (“sanctify”) occurs II.149, 151; IV.3209; VII.334, 846; XIII.347; XXII.b.27. See Jan Bremmer, “‘Religion’, ‘Ritual’ and the Opposition ‘Sacred vs. Profane’: Notes Towards a Terminological ‘Genealogy’,” in Graf, Ansichten griechischer Rituale, 9–32, esp. 24–31.

⁶⁴⁰ For ἐμψυχος, see also IV.1766; LXVII.2; cf. ἄψυχος I.23; IV.498; VII.441. Abstention from meat was widespread in antiquity; see also IV.53, 3079–80; LXVII.2. On the whole, see Wächter, Reinheitsvorschriften, 76–102; Parker, Miasma, 357–65.

⁶⁴³ On abstention from sex, see I.41–42; IV.897–98; XXXVII.1–2; PDM xiv.65–70, 145–50, 765–70, 815–20. On the subject see Eugen Fehrle, Die kultische Keuschheit im Altertum (RVV 6; Gießen: Töpelmann, 1910); Gerhard Delling, “Geschlechtsverkehr,” RAC 10 (1978) 812–29 (bibliography); Burkert, Ancient Mystery Cults, 107–8.

⁶⁴⁴ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.245) notes that no such requirements are reported at the beginning of the ML, and he concludes that the redactor must have omitted them. This conclusion leaves three possible ways of understanding the matter: Did the redactor omit the requirements as they apply to the author himself from the written source material? Or did he regard them as unwritten preconditions for the practitioner/teacher because they are self-evident and do not need to be written out? Or did he spell them out as preconditions for the medium? A decision is difficult, but the latter option seems to be the more likely answer.

⁶⁴⁵ According to Weinreich (in Dieterich, 224), Preisendanz apparently later proposed the reading λέγε ὅσως, “speak in the same way as...” Martinez suggests that Preisendanz may be right because also in the other two ἐὰν-clauses the protasis is followed by an imperative apodosis.

ecstasy”).⁶⁴⁶ The absence of a medium means that, like Trophonius, the prophet receives the utterances of the god directly. More complex are the theories concerning the Delphic Pythia’s ecstatic inspiration by Apollo.⁶⁴⁷ The terms ἔκστασις (“ecstasy”) and ἀποφοιβάομαι (“inspired by Phoebus”) occur only here in the PGM.⁶⁴⁸

3. The third option is most difficult to understand because the formulation is ambiguous (ll. 738–40): ἐὰν δὲ καὶ δεῖξαι αὐτῷ θέλῃς, κρίνας, εἰ ἄξιός ἐστιν ἀσφαλῶς ὡς ἄνθρωπος ...⁶⁴⁹ (“But again if you wish to show him, after you judge whether his worth as a man is secure ...”).⁶⁵⁰ Depending on the interpretation, translations differ; the problem is the missing object of δεῖξαι αὐτῷ, “to show him” – what? Judging from the context (ll. 741–46), the most likely object would be a revelatory symbol belonging to what in mystery-cult language is called τὰ δεικνύμενα (“things shown”).⁶⁵¹ Before this optional

⁶⁴⁶ The translations differ at this point because of what appear to be misunderstandings of the options. Preisendanz: “Wenn du aber auch allein bist und an dem vom Gott mitgeteilten Zauber dich versuchst, sprich, wie in Ekstase voll prophetischer Begeisterung;” Meyer: “And even if you are alone, and you undertake the things communicated by the god, you speak as if prophesying in ecstasy”; Merkelbach: “Wenn du aber allein bist und ihm das vom Gott Gesagte mitteilen willst, dann wirst du es in prophetischer Begeisterung sagen, als wärest du in Ekstase.” In other words, the present option is different from the previous one. For dispensing with a medium, see also PDM xiv.285–95, 420–26, 525–30, 815–25.

Conceivable if unlikely in the present passage is that the expression ὡς ἐν ἔκστασει could be taken as faking the ecstasy (see Apuleius, Metam. 8.27–28: velut numinis divino spiritu repletus; Lucian, Alex. 12; Diodorus Siculus 34/35.2.5–7: καὶ οὕτω τὰ μέλλοντα ἀπεφοιβάειν); Origen, Cels. 7.9.9–10: κινεῖνται δὴθεν ὡς θεοσίζοντες. (I am indebted for these passages to Cristiano Grottanelli.)

⁶⁴⁸ For ἔκστασις (“ecstasy”), see above, n. 614; also Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational, 64–101; Friedrich Pfister, “Ekstase,” RAC 4 (1959) 944–87; Hartmut Zinser, “Ekstase,” HRWG 2 (1990) 253–58 (bibliography); Henrichs, “Dromena und Legomena,” in Graf, Ansichten griechischer Rituale, 55–57: “Rituelle Ekstase”; BDAG, s.v. ἔκστασις, 2. The rare term ἀποφοιβάομαι (“inspired by Phoebus”) is found only here (LSJ, s.v.), but it shows that this type of prophecy has become part of common religious parlance. Cf. Acts 16:16: ἔχεν πνεῦμα πύθωνα, “having a Python spirit.”

⁶⁴⁹ Wunsch (in Dieterich, 16) regards ὡς as dittography and proposes ὁ; cf. also Crönert’s discussion (“Zur Kritik,” 100–1); but Preisendanz, Meyer, and Merkelbach keep ὡς.

⁶⁵⁰ Preisendanz: “Willst du es aber auch ihm (dem Miteingeweihten) zeigen, ...”; Meyer: “And if you also wish to show him ...;” Merkelbach: “Aber wenn du es ihm mitteilen willst, (so tue das) ...”

⁶⁵¹ Cf. the similar phrase ἐὰν δὲ ἄλλω θέλῃς δεικνύειν (l. 772), but there the meaning is clear (cf. above, n. 637).

ritual can be performed, the fellow-initiate has to be evaluated whether he is worthy as a human being.⁶⁵²

If he passes the test, the following procedure should be followed (ll. 740–41): *χρησάμενος τῷ τόπῳ, ὡς <σὺ> ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ κρινόμενος ἐν τῷ ἀπαθάν <ατ>ισμῷ*⁶⁵³ (“handling the occasion as though in the immortalization ritual you yourself were being judged in his place”).⁶⁵⁴ This method conforms to the moral standard of fairness, or even to the Golden Rule.⁶⁵⁵

At the beginning, the great “first prayer” should be recited (ll. 741–44): τὸν πρῶτον ὑπόβαλε αὐτῷ λόγον, οὗ ἡ ἀρχή· γένεσις πρώτη τῆς ἐμῆς γενέσεως αἰησιουω (“recite for him the first prayer, of which the beginning is, ‘First origin of my origin, AEEIOYO’”). This “first prayer” is the one fully set out in ll. 486–537; it is to be recited to the fellow-initiate, so that he can repeat it.⁶⁵⁶ What follows after that is to be handled differently: *τὰ δὲ ἐξῆς ὡς μύστης λέγε αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς ἅ{υ}τόνῳ*⁶⁵⁷ φθόγγῳ, ἵνα μὴ ἀκούσῃ .. (“And say the successive things as an initiate, over his head, in a soft voice, so that he may not hear ...”). The terms are insider language: τὰ δὲ ἐξῆς seems to refer to what comes after the “first prayer,” but it is not clear what exactly is included. There are three possibilities for understanding it: First, it may include the entire ritual of ascension (ll. 539–731); this is, however, least likely since what follows is to be spoken in a special way.⁶⁵⁸ The procedure is further specified as ⁶⁵² For this kind of test of one’s worthiness, which was common in the mystery cults, see also I.131; III.176–77; IV.477; XI.a.15; furthermore II.177; XXX.e.3. See also Burkert, Ancient Mystery Cults, 30–65, 145–52; BDAG, s.v. ἄξιος, 2.a.

⁶⁵⁴ Following the translation by Martinez. Others differ: Preisendanz: “lege dabei den Maßstab an, als würdest du selbst bei der Verewigung an seiner Statt geprüft”; Merkelbach: “tue das in der Weise, als ob du an seiner Statt bei der Unsterblichkeitsweihe geprüft würdest”; Meyer: “treat him just as if in his place you were judged in the matter of immortalization.”

⁶⁵⁵ See Gal 6:1, and the interpretation in my Galatians, 298; for the Golden Rule (Matt 7:12//Luke 6:31), see my The Sermon on the Mount, 508–19.

⁶⁵⁶ The verb ὑποβάλλειν has the prayer as object; it means “inform” or “instigate,” like a prompter (cf. Preisendanz: “vorsprechen”; Merkelbach: “vorsagen”). See LSJ, BDAG, s.v.

⁶⁵⁷ The pap. reads αυτονῳ, corrected to ἅτόνῳ by Dieterich (17), Rieß, CIR 10 (1896) 411; Kroll, Ph. 53 (1894) 421; cf. Gignac, Grammar, 1.226–27, and below on l. 749 παραγγελλμαγῳ.

⁶⁵⁸ Cf. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.245) concludes, “therefore silently” (“also schweigend”). However, it is clearly explained by the following remark.

“over the head” of the fellow-initiate, “in a murmuring voice,”⁶⁵⁹ so that he cannot make out the actual words. Second, and most probable, the recitation sotto voce includes the second and third prayers (ll. 559–65, 587–616). The final option is that the words are not in the written text at all, but oral and secret; this is unlikely in a written instruction.

At any rate, while the formulae are murmured, the practitioner is told (l. 746): *χρίων αὐτοῦ τὴν ὄψιν τῷ μυστηρίῳ*⁶⁶⁰ (“as you are anointing his face with the mystery”). The anointing (χρίειν) refers to the iatromagical tradition dealing with salves and ointments of all sorts.⁶⁶¹ This particular ointment is intended to improve vision (cf. ll. 772–75).⁶⁶² The name of the ointment is μυστήριον (“mystery”); its preparation is described in ll. 751–78, below. While the term μυστήριον can refer to different matters (cf. ll. 476, 723, 794), there seems to be no other such attribution of this name, the purpose of which is, one may conclude, to enable the eyes to see the mystery that is shown (l. 738).

4. After the additional rituals for the participation of a fellow-initiate in the oracular consultation have been presented, a few stipulations bring the section to its conclusion (ll. 746–50). The first stipulation concerns the frequency of usage (ll. 746–48): γίνεται δὲ ὁ ἀπαθανατισμός οὗτος τρις τοῦ ἐνιαυτοῦ (“This immortalization takes place three times a year”). In other words, the ritual called “immortalization”⁶⁶³ may be performed three times a year, but not more. How this relates to the stipulation in ll. 796–98 is not clear (see below).

Another stipulation concerns defection, apparently by someone who wishes to discontinue the practice (ll. 748–50): ἐὰν δὲ βουληθῇ τις, ὃ τέκνον, μετὰ

⁶⁵⁹ For parallels, see Firmicus Maternus, Err. prof. rel. 22.1: lento murmure susurrat, “he whispers [sc. the formula] with a soft murmur”; Apuleius, Metam. 1.3. ⁶⁶⁰ The pap. reads χρείων (itacism).

⁶⁶¹ See, esp., 1.255–60; Firmicus Maternus, Err. prof. rel. 22.1: Tunc a sacerdote omnium qui flebant fauces unguentur... (“Then all who lamented have their throats anointed...”). For further references to anointing, see Preisendanz, 3.203 (index), s.v. χρίειν, χρίσμα.

τὸ παράγγελμα {τῷ} παρακοῦσαι, <τῷ> οὐκέτι ὑπάρξει⁶⁶⁴ (“And if anyone, my child, wishes after the instruction to disobey, then for him it will no longer be in effect.”) The meaning of the statement is disputed, and hence the translations vary.⁶⁶⁵ Apparently, the case envisages a person who has received the instruction of the initiation but wishes to quit, disobey or deviate from the received tradition; for him the ritual is no longer at his disposal or loses its efficaciousness. The παράγγελμα seems to refer to the instruction as a whole.⁶⁶⁶ A statement such as this assures the teacher and warns the student.⁶⁶⁷ With this, the section ends.

B. Additional instruction (ll. 750–819)

A special section of further instructions follows after the “supplemental rituals.” This new section carries an explicit title: διδασκαλία τῆς πράξεως (“instruction for the performance”). The instruction includes prescriptions for three items to be used in the main ritual. First, a prescription is provided ⁶⁶⁴ Pap. reads παραγγελαγο. Dieterich omits τῷ, but Preisendanz rearranges and puts τῷ before οὐκέτι (so also Jordan); Wünsch reads παράγγελμα αὐτῷ; Ludwig Radermacher (Ph. 63 [1904] 4–5; idem, Neutestamentliche Grammatik, 56) prefers μετὰ τὸ παραγγέλατον. Dieterich (17) reads οὐκέτι and connects ὑπάρξει (ἀπαθανατισμός); according to Weinreich (in Dieterich, 224), Preisendanz later proposed to read: μεταθεῖναι τὸ παράγγελμα τῷ παρακοῦσαι, “if someone wants to bend the prescript by disobedience” (“wollte einer die Vorschrift beugen durch Ungehorsam”). Preisendanz (ibid.) also withdrew his proposal of παραγγελά πω (WSt 42 [1920–21] 27 no. 10). Martinez comments: “I think that Wünsch’s reading is closest to the truth; in documentary papyri αὐτός etc. are very frequently written ἄτός etc. (see Gignac, Grammar, 1.226–27 with 227 n. 1, noting examples in defixiones; Martinez, P. Michigan XVI, 67); cf. above l. 745 αὐ > α. So I would write παραγγελμ’ α <ὀ>τῷ. As to what αὐτῷ is doing here is another issue. Displacement is possible (as Preisendanz supposes with τῷ). We could also interpret the form as a genitive (οὐ > ω(ι), fairly frequent either for phonetic reasons or syntactic confusion between genitive and dative (see Gignac, Grammar, 1.208ff.). In that case the translation would be: ‘If anyone wishes after his instruction to disobey...’”

⁶⁶⁷ It may be related to similar quasi-legal rules; see, e.g., Matt 5:19, and for further material and discussion my commentary, The Sermon on the Mount, 184–89. Cf. XIII.379–80: εἰ μὴ γὰρ αὐτοὺς καλέσῃς, οὐκ ἑπακούουσι ὡς ἀμυστηριάσω σοι ὑπάρχοντι (“For if you do not invoke them [sc. the gods of the hours], they will not hear you, as being uninitiated”). See also BDAG, s.v. ὑπάρχω, 1.

for making the sun-scarab ointment (ll. 751–78); second, the information and preparation of the plant called kentritis (ll. 778–813); and third, the preparation of phylacteries (ll. 813–19).

1. The title διδασκαλία τῆς πράξεως (“instruction for the performance”), most likely given to this section by the final author/redactor may appear surprising, but it should be remembered from the exordium (ll. 475–84) that the overall purpose of the text of the Mithras Liturgy is intended to be didactic.⁶⁶⁸

2. All three items involve rituals as well as alchemical and biological information. The technical terminology used is Greek in origin and often difficult to identify.⁶⁶⁹ The difficulties arise from the fact that the papyrus originated in Egypt and describes Egyptian materials and plants; the terminology, however, is Greek. While alchemical ingredients are often common, plants are geographically specific, so that their identifications by Greek names become difficult to verify. The fact that the author supplements information from Greek plant books shows that even he had difficulties in identifying the Egyptian plants and that he does not seem to know their Egyptian names.

The preparation of the rituals should precede the actual performance of the main ritual, because they have to be ready to be used when their place and time of performance has come, which is mentioned in the main ritual.⁶⁷⁰ Hence, pace Merkelbach, the additional instruction does not imply a criticism by the redactor who regards his Vorlage to be deficient. Also Dieterich separates the additions as secondary from the “liturgy” proper. He attributes them to the final redactor who uses the earlier “liturgy” as a source for an altogether different magical procedure.⁶⁷¹ However, a distinction has to be kept in mind

⁶⁶⁹ For plant biology in connection with rituals and astrology, see the parallels in Thessalos of Tralles, De virtutibus herbarum (ed. Friedrich, passim); for the text see also Totti, Texte, # 45; Armand Delatte, Herbarius. Recherches sur le cérémonial usité chez les anciens pour la cueillette des simples et des plantes magiques (3rd. ed.; Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe des lettres et des sciences morales et politiques, Mémoires, 54.4; Bruxelles: Palais des Académies, 1961); cf. the review by Friedrich Pfister, ByZ 37 (1937) 381–90; idem, “Pflanzenaberglaube,” PRE 19.2 (1938) 1446–56; Heinrich Marzell, “Der Zauber der Heilkräuter in der Antike und Neuzeit,” SAGM 29 (1936) 3–26.

⁶⁷¹ Thus, Dieterich (17–22) omits translating the additions, but he provides valuable notes on the text. See the Introduction, above pp. 11, 26–27.

between textual and ritual sequences. The textual sequences are what is written down, whereas the ritual sequences are known to the practitioner from practice.⁶⁷²

1. First ritual: the sun-scarab ointment (ll. 751–78)

The first item involves a sun-scarab ointment, most likely the same as the one called μυστήριον (“mystery,” l. 746).⁶⁷³ The section shows careful composition and has its own little epilogue (ll. 776–78), features indicating that it was taken from a source. The preparation of the ointment has two stages.

The first stage (ll. 751–57) begins with the procurement of the ingredients. The first item is a sun-scarab (ll. 751–53): λαβὼν κἀνθαρὸν ἡλιακὸν τὸν τὰς ὑβ’ ἀκτῖνας ἔχοντα ποίησον εἰς βησίον καλλαῖνον βαθὺ ἐν ἀρπαγῇ τῆς σελήνης βληθῆναι⁶⁷⁴ (“Take a sun scarab which has twelve rays, and make it fall into a deep, turquoise cup, at time when the moon is invisible”).⁶⁷⁵ The term λαβὼν (“take!”) is technical and common. As the name indicates, the “sun scarab” (κἀνθαρὸς ἡλιακός)⁶⁷⁶ represents the old solar deity Khepri.⁶⁷⁷ The Greeks were fascinated by the symbolism, which is reflected by Plutarch who theorizes that the beetle is an image (εἰκὼν) of “the power of the gods, like the image of the sun in rain-drops.”⁶⁷⁸ Apparently, the scarab with the

⁶⁷⁵ As a result of the uncertainties in identifying the technical language, translations of the vessel differ at this point. Preisendanz: “Gefäß aus Goldstein”; Meyer: “turquoise cup”; Merkelbach: “blaugrünes Gefäß.”

⁶⁷⁶ The term is found also in VII.974–75; XII.274 (ἔστω δὲ ἐντὸς τοῦ δράκοντος κἀνθαρὸς ἀκτινωτὸς ἱερός); LXI.34; cf. Horapollo, Hier. 2.41; see Heinz-Josef Thissen, Des Niloten Horapollon Hieroglyphenbuch, vol. 1 (APFB 6; München: Saur, 2001), 8–10 (# 10).

twelve sun-rays⁶⁷⁹ is a special kind which is attested, as far as I can see, only here.⁶⁸⁰ The preparation involves the killing of the scarab by letting it drop⁶⁸¹ into a deep vessel (βησίον)⁶⁸² made from a natron and sulphur concoction (καλλάϊνον).⁶⁸³ This should take place at the time of the new moon.⁶⁸⁴

Hecataeus of Abdera (according to Diogenes Laertius, prooemium 10); Aelianus, Nat. an. 10.15.

⁶⁸² Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.245) thinks of a vessel that looks like the god Besas. For this god, see IV.807; VII.203, 245; VIII.64–65. See Betz, GMPT, 333, s.v. Bes; Hartwig Altenmüller, “Bes,” LÄ 1 (1975) 720–24. For vases in the form of Bes, see Tran Tam Tinh, “Bes,” LIMC 3.1 (1986) 98–108, esp. # 24.a–d; # 81.a–e; 3:2, p. 85, # 81.d.

⁶⁸³ So Hopfner, OZ 2/1, § 121: “aus Natron und Schwefelmasse.” Meyer has in mind a turquoise-colored glass vessel. For καλλάϊνος see also IV.1090; V.222; XIII.1068–69. Cf. below, l. 758–59.

The next ingredients are from plants and serve to make a kind of small cake (ll. 754–55): συνεμβάλων αὐτῷ λωτομῆτρας σπέρμα καὶ μέλι λειώσας ποιήσων μαζίον⁶⁸⁵ (“put in together with it the seed of the fruit pulp of the lotus, and after grinding it with honey prepare a cake”). The name λωτομῆτρα refers to the lotus plant.⁶⁸⁶ Honey is a substance often used in magical practices.⁶⁸⁷ The mixture is then ground up⁶⁸⁸ and formed into a small cake.⁶⁸⁹

The purpose of the cake is to cause the death of the scarab (ll. 755–57): καὶ εὐθέως αὐτὸν ὄψῃ προσερχόμενον καὶ ἐσθίοντα, καὶ ὅταν φάγῃ, εὐθέως θνήσκει (“and at once you will see it [viz. the scarab] moving forward and eating; and when it has consumed it, it immediately dies”). Therefore, the sudden death of the scarab is caused by eating from the cake, but not by drowning.⁶⁹⁰

The second stage also begins with the acquisition of the ingredients (ll. 757–59): τοῦτον ἀνελόμενος βάλε εἰς ἀγγεῖον ὑελοῦν μύρου ῥοδίνου καλλίστου, ὅσον βούλει⁶⁹¹ (“Pick it up and throw it into a glass vessel of excellent rose oil, as much as you wish”). One will notice that the ingredients are now becoming more expensive. The glass vessel seems more valuable, and rose oil certainly is an expensive perfume, to be used here in quantity.⁶⁹² The vessel needs then to be placed properly (ll. 759–61): καὶ στρώσας καθαρεῖως⁶⁹³ ἄμμον ἱερὰν ἐπίθες τὸ ἀγγεῖον ... (“and spreading sacred sand in a pure manner, and set the vessel on it ...”). What this “sacred sand” is and how one spreads it in a ⁶⁸⁵ Pap. reads λιώσας, corrected by Wessely to λείωσας.

⁶⁸⁶ λωτομῆτρας σπέρμα is the name for the fruitpulp of the lotus plant (LSJ, s.v.). See also III.333; IV.3009; Merkelbach, Abrasax, 3.245. For λωτός, see II.102–3; IV.1683; XII.87; LXI.32; λωτίνος XIII.25, 355; μελίλωτος IV.941. See Hopfner, OZ 2/1, § 216; August Steier, “Lotos,” PRE 26. Halbbd. (1927) 1515–32, esp. 1520–21.

⁶⁸⁸ A technical procedure in ancient pharmacy and alchemy. See also III.189; IV.1880; VII.225; VIII.87; XIII.320.

⁶⁸⁹ The term μαζίον (“amalgam”) occurs only here in the PGM, but it is technical in the language of pharmacy and alchemy; cf. also the role of cakes in sacrifice.

⁶⁹⁰ Pace Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.246) who argues that the scarab gets stuck in the honey and thus suffocates and drowns (“erstickt = ertrinkt”).

⁶⁹¹ Pap. reads αγγιον as in l. 761; cf. l. 752. See Delatte, BCH 38 (1914) 246. For βάλε, see l. 753; also Thessalos, 1, prooemium, section 38 (ed. Friedrich, 64): βάλλε εἰς ἀγγεῖα ὑέλινα.

⁶⁹² For the rose oil, see below, ll. 789–90; also VII.337–38; VIII.108–9; cf. the costly perfume used by the woman in Mark 14:3 par.

⁶⁹³ Pap. reads καθαριως and αγγιον.

pure manner, seems to have a mythological background known to the magicians.⁶⁹⁴

At any rate, with all done, the consecration can take place. The formula has to be pronounced (ll. 761–62): καὶ λέγε τὸ (ὄνομα)⁶⁹⁵ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἄγγους ἐπὶ ἡμέρας ζ' ἡλίου μεσουρανοῦντος. “and say the name over the vessel for seven days, while the sun is in midheaven”). The time is during seven days at high noon,⁶⁹⁶ and the formula has to be spoken over the vessel.⁶⁹⁷

The formula (ὄνομα) itself is cited in full in ll. 762–67, addressing the scarab: ἐγὼ σε ἐτέλεσα, ἵνα μοι ἡ σου οὐσία γένῃ χρήσιμος, τῷ δ(ε)ῖ(να) μόνῳ ιε ια η εη ου εια· ἐμοὶ μόνῳ χρησιμεύσης ἐγὼ γάρ εἰμι φωρ φορ α φως φοτιζαας – οἱ δέ· φωρ φωρ οφοθειξαας.⁶⁹⁸ (“It is I who have consecrated you, that your substance may be useful to me, NN alone, IE IA E EE OY EIA, that you may prove useful to me alone, for I am PHOR PHOR A PHOS PHOTIZAAS” [others: “PHOR PHOR OPHOTHEIXAAS”]).⁶⁹⁹

The scarab which at its death became associated with the invisible moon (l. 753) becomes deified and related to the sun. Since the beetle is being addressed as a person, one must assume that it is alive, albeit in a divine way. The formulaic ἐγὼ εἰμι (“I am”)⁷⁰⁰ secures emphatically ownership and use of divine beetle. The verb form ἐτέλεσα presupposes, as often in rituals, an ingressive or durative aorist.⁷⁰¹ What the scarab has thus become is called

⁶⁹⁶ On this point, see IV.173, 2992; XII.45; also Thessalos, 1, prooemium, section 39 (ed. Friedrich, 64).

⁶⁹⁷ For λέγειν τὸ ὄνομα ἐπὶ τοῦ ἄγγους, cf. III.410–13; IV.223–30; V.197–212; LXI.5–6.

⁶⁹⁹ The form γένῃ needs explanation. Dieterich (17) points to parallels listed by Georgios Chatzidakis [Hatzidakis], Einleitung in die neugriechische Grammatik (Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel, 1892), 198. Wessely changed to γένῃ[ται]; see also Ernst Kuhnert, “Feuerzauber,” RhM 49 (1894) 37–58, esp. 46. Martinez, however, proposes convincingly to take the form γένῃ just as “the second person sing. of the normal deponent form, written mistakenly because ἡ σου οὐσία, ‘your essence’ becomes in the scribe’s mind simply a collocation for ‘you.’” The same second person sing. is used in the following repetition of the formula, “that you may be useful to me alone.”

οὐσία, a technical term frequent in magical contexts, which means materia magica, a substance of divine power.⁷⁰² However, determination of the meaning of οὐσία in the present context is more difficult. Does it refer to the scarab's immaterial divine nature, or to the materia magica in the vessel, or to Merkelbach's rendering as "inner being"?⁷⁰³ Although all three possibilities play some role, the author's primary concern is with the handling of sacred substance in the vessel. Therefore, in the present context οὐσία is rather specialized when compared with the usual "property" of a person (such as hair, clothing) affixed to spells. In order to make sure that this substance is useful to the practitioner alone,⁷⁰⁴ he inserts his name twice (l. 764), once by inserting his ordinary name NN,⁷⁰⁵ together with a vowel sequence, and once by repeating the purpose clause (χρησιμύσης) and by self-identification through divine names (ll. 765–67). The latter are obviously related to φῶς ("light"), that is, the sun.⁷⁰⁶ As a redactional comment by the final author/redactor shows, he has carefully compared the names and inserts a variant reading that "others" (plural!) have.⁷⁰⁷

Once the divine substance has been procured, it must be properly preserved and stored (ll. 767–69): τῇ δὲ ζ' ἡμ(έ)ρ(α) βαστάξας τὸν κἀνθαρο(ν), θάψας ζμύρνα καὶ οἶνω Μενδησίῳ καὶ βυσσίῳ ἀπόθου ἐν κυαμῶνι ζωοφυτοῦντι.⁷⁰⁸ ("On the seventh day pick up the scarab, and bury it with myrrh and Mendesian wine and fine linen; and deposit it in a flourishing bean field"). The term βαστάξειν ("acquire") appears to be technical,⁷⁰⁹ referring to handling of ingredients. Preservation of the material happens by burial of the scarab, the process of which is briefly described.⁷¹⁰ The ingredients of

⁷⁰³ Martinez raises the question whether the Egyptian name for the scarab, hpr ("come into being") is of influence and points to "manifestation."

⁷⁰⁴ The formula of exclusivity is found elsewhere in the ML; see ll. 476, 484, 736; XII.37–38; etc.

⁷⁰⁵ The pap. reads the symbol Δ, meaning τῷ δεῖνα. See on this above, on l. 495.

⁷⁰⁶ For other such names in the ML, see the index below.

⁷⁰⁷ For another such insertion, see l. 500.

⁷⁰⁸ Pap. reads the symbol ζ ΗΥ, equalling ἐβδόμη ἡμέρα (see Preisendanz, 2.269); pap. also reads κἀνθαρο (corrected by Dieterich [18]) and θαψας (changed by Dieterich [18] to βάψας); Preisendanz keeps θάψας. Preisendanz reads σμύρνη, Jordan prefers σμύρνα (see n. 711 below).

⁷⁰⁹ For βαστάξειν, see also l. 779.

⁷¹⁰ Interestingly, the materia magica is still called "scarab."

myrrh⁷¹¹ and Mendesian wine⁷¹² are used for the embalming and wrapping in linen cloth.⁷¹³ Thus embalmed the scarab is deposited in a sprouting bean field.⁷¹⁴ Why such a place is chosen can only be guessed.⁷¹⁵ Merkelbach's suggestion that κύαμος Αἰγύπτιος ("Egyptian bean") is another name for the Lotus flower may be right, but why would another name be preferred?⁷¹⁶

Another comment relates to proper storage, but its place in the ritual is unclear (ll. 770–71): τὸ δὲ χρῶσμα ἐστιάσας καὶ συνευωχηθεὶς ἀπόθου καθαρῶς εἰς τὸν ἀπαθανατισμόν ("then, after you have entertained and feasted together, deposit the ointment in a pure way for the immortalization"). Because of the occurrence of χρῶσμα (ll. 770, 773–74, 793), this comment is concerned with the ointment, the preparation of which is described in ll. 751–78, but the situation envisaged in ll. 770–71 appears out of context in that no common dining has been mentioned before.⁷¹⁷ Merkelbach concludes: "The initiate should entertain the dead scarab in a symbolic fashion, and eat himself a meal together with him (which almost leads to a sacramental communion), and then he should carefully store the oil and the scarab for later use in the consecration."⁷¹⁸

⁷¹⁴ The aorist imperative form ἀπόθου from ἀποτιθέναι ("deposit") is almost technical in the PGM; see V.228–29; VII.225, 875, 915; XII.315. Cf. LSJ, s.v. ἀποτίθημι, II.3.

⁷¹⁵ Dieterich (18) refers to Richard Wünsch, Das Frühlingsfest der Insel Malta; ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der antiken Religion (Leipzig: Teubner, 1902), 41 (31–46: "Die Bohnenblüte"); Hopfner, OZ 2/1–2, §§ 121–22, 214–16, 219. For other instances of preservation, see IV.2465–66: ἀποθέμενος εἰς πυξίδα μολιβῆν; XV.17–20; XXXVII.7(?).

⁷¹⁷ For ἐστιᾶν, ἐστία ("winning and dining"), see VII.172; for συνευωχεῖσθαι ("feasting together with") see IV.3150–51.

⁷¹⁸ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.246): "Der Myste soll den toten Sonnenkäfer symbolisch bewirten und auch selbst mit ihm eine Mahlzeit einnehmen (was fast auf eine Kommunion

This interpretation is derived from other PGM parallels which mention such meals.⁷¹⁹ According to the text, however, the object to be wined and dined remains unclear; it must be the scarab, now also called ointment (χρῖσμα). The latter is mentioned first in ll. 738–46, then in ll. 772–75, and finally in l. 793; this ointment is the materia magica, but in l. 767 it is also called the scarab. If, therefore, the scarab is to be entertained, which is most likely, the question is also whether one should speak, as Merkelbach does, of “the dead scarab” after it has become immortalized.

Another possibility would be to allow for a metatextual reference. Since the presumed meal is without a precedent in the ML, the passage may have been copied from an earlier Vorlage. This earlier Vorlage may have presupposed a ritual context of a sacramental meal, within which the ointment for the eyes was to be used. Thus, one should not automatically assume a complete homogeneity between literary and ritual sequences. Rather, the case may be that the author/redactor has copied from a Vorlage which comprised a broader spectrum of prescriptions, and by copying from it he transposed the passage into the new context of his own practices in the ML.⁷²⁰ This assumption could find support in the author/redactor’s later correction to the effect that the scarab ointment is no longer to be used (see below, on ll. 792–96). At any rate, the materia magica is to be safely stored to be ready for future use in the main ritual of immortalization.

A further optional ritual concerning an eye ointment follows in ll. 772–75: ἐὰν δὲ ἄλλῳ θέλης δεικνύνειν, ἔχε τῆς καλουμένης βοτάνης κεντρίτιδος χυλὸν περιχρίων τὴν ὄψιν, οὗ βούλει, μετὰ ὀδίνου, καὶ ὁψεται δηλαυγῶς ὥστε σε θαυμάζειν⁷²¹ (“If you want to show this to someone else, get the juice of the ⁷²⁰ As an example of this Dieterich (18) refers to a scarab amulet of stone with an inscription which contains voces magicae and these words: χρημάτων μοι ἐν τῇ νυκτὶ ταύτῃ ἐπ’ ἀληθεία μετὰ μνήμης (see Richard Wünsch, “Sopra uno scarabeo con iscrizione greca,” Bullettino della Commissione archeologica comunale di Roma 27 (1899) 294–99 (cf. IGSI 2413, 16, ed. Kaibel).

⁷¹⁹ See I.22–24 on dining with an immortalized falcon; III.424–30: eating the heart of a kakkouphat bird (cf. II.17–20; VII.412). Meals with deities are mentioned I.2–3: a meal with a familial spirit (πάρεδρος δαίμων): [συνόμιλος καὶ συ]ναριστῶν ἔσται σοι καὶ συνκοιμωμένος (“he will be your [companion and] will eat and sleep with you”); I.85–89: a meal with an angel; VII.644–51: consumption of a magical potion. See also Hopfner, OZ 2/2, §§ 264–66.

herb called kentritis, and smear it, along with the rose oil, around the eyes of whomever you wish; and he [or: she] will see so clearly that you will be amazed”). The relationship of this procedure to the one mentioned before (ll. 738–46) is unclear. Both are introduced in a similar manner as optional: ἐάν δὲ καὶ δεῖξαι αὐτῷ θέλης (ll. 738–39), and ἐάν δὲ ἄλλω θέλης δεικνύειν (l. 772); both are dealing with eye ointments for the improvement of vision.⁷²² It is this improvement of eye-sight that provides the link with the main ritual’s concern for the transformation of visual sense-perception (see ll. 501–15, 516–27).

In the first instance, however, the ointment is called τὸ μυστήριον (“mystery,” l. 746) and involves the sun scarab (l. 770), while in the second instance the plant kentritis is the major ingredient (ll. 773–74).⁷²³ The most likely explanation for what appears to be a conflict is that the author/redactor excerpted two procedures for the preparation of eye-salve from his Vorlage. He then explained the preparation of these ointments by drawing on additional iatromagical information. While in the earlier instance, the ointment is explained by the procedure involving the scarab (ll. 751–78), the present procedure is explained by the information about the plant kentritis (ll. 778–813).

The preparation of the eye ointment (ll. 772–75), since it is parallel to the previous one (ll. 738–46), uses similar terms. The use of “juices” (χυλός) is of course frequent in the PGM.⁷²⁴ The expression περιχρίειν is found only here in the PGM; the meaning can simply be an emphatic χρίειν, or a description of the application of the ointment (“around,” or “covering”) the face or the eyes (ὄψις).⁷²⁵ Rose-oil was mentioned before (l. 790). The phrase stating the success of seeing clearly (καὶ ὄψεται δηλαυγῶς) may explain what is meant by δεικνύειν.⁷²⁶ Who or what is bringing about the amazement (ὥστε σε ⁷²² For δεικνύει see ll. 738, 785, 805; Merkelbach’s (Abrasax, 3.246, 248; also 2.156, 164), with references to δεικνύει as a mystery cult term.

⁷²⁴ For other passages, see below at l. 803.

⁷²⁵ For the meaning of ὄψις, see also above l. 746; XIII.274; and often in PGM. For the terms περιχρίειν and περιχρίστα (“lid salve”), see for references in the medical writers the TLG, s.v.; and Kind, PRE 21st Halbband (1921) 1105. Cf. V.64; VII.337; Rev 3:18 for ἐνχρίειν τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς; for ἐπιχρίειν, see following note.

θαυμαίνειν), is left open; most likely, it is the ointment. The improvement in vision is clearly related to the doctrine discussed at l. 511.

The concluding statement takes the form of a "commercial,"⁷²⁷ typical of many magical procedures in the PGM (ll. 776–77): τούτου μεῖζον' οὐχ εὑρον ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ πραγματεῖαν, "I have not found a greater procedure than this in the world." Which "procedure" (πραγματεῖα) is meant here specifically, is not entirely clear, but it seems to belong to the previous ointment.

The final sentence is a maxim that shows no connection with the context and seems to be of a general nature (l. 778): αἰτοῦ δὲ, ἃ βούλει, τὸν θεὸν, καὶ δώσει σοι ("Ask the god what you want, and he will give it to you"). The maxim has a parallel in IV.2172: αἰτήσας λήμψει, "When you ask, you will receive."⁷²⁸

2. Second ritual: the plant kentritis (ll. 778–92)

The second ritual is most probably excerpted from a source and included because of the previous mention of the plant kentritis. This section provides an excellent opportunity to study how the author/redactor worked. It appears that while reading in his excerpt (ll. 772–75) he came upon the plant name kentritis (ll. 773, 779, 798). He did not know, however, what plant it was. The material assembled in ll. 778–813 must therefore be the fruit of his investigations in other sources. He included from these sources excerpts together with his own interpretative comments.⁷²⁹

The earlier context, from which the kentritis ritual was derived,⁷³⁰ apparently had section titles which identified and classified the separate items. This ritual has the section title in ll. 778–79: ἡ τοῦ μεγάλου θεοῦ σύστασις ἐστίν ⁷²⁷ For other instances of such "commercials" see, e.g., I.262: ἔχε<ι> λίαν καλῶς ("This works very well"); III.439: τῆς] πράξεως ταύ[της] μεῖζον οὐκ ἔστιν ("A procedure greater than this one does not exist. It has been tested by Manethon [who] received [it] as a gift from god Osiris the greatest" (trans. W. Grese in Betz, GMPT, 31).

⁷²⁹ The redactional comment in l. 779, τὴν προκειμένην ("the afore mentioned") distinguishes between the author/redactor and his source.

ἦδε (“The encounter with the great god is as follows”). The term σύστασις is technical in the magical and astrological literature,⁷³¹ but translators differ how they interpret and render it into modern languages.⁷³² The connection with “the great god” does not identify him expressly with Helios-Mithras, but this identity can certainly be assumed as the view of the present author (see l. 482).

The procedure itself begins with the acquisition⁷³³ of the ingredients (ll. 779–80): βασιτάξας κεν’σ’τρῖτιν τὴν προκειμένην(ν) βοτάνην τῇ συνόδῳ τῇ γενομένη λέοντι⁷³⁴ (“Having acquired the above mentioned herb kentritis, at the conjunction [of the sun and the moon] occurring in the Lion...”).⁷³⁵ The “encounter” (σύστασις) is to be correlated with the “conjunction” (σύνοδος)⁷³⁶ between sun and moon. As Merkelbach points out, it refers to the day of new moon of that month in which the sun comes to stand in the zodiac’s sign of the Lion.⁷³⁷ It “takes place at every day of new moon and full moon, when sun, moon, and earth (or sun, earth, and moon) are positioned at about the same line.”⁷³⁸

⁷³³ The term βασιτάζειν as in l. 773.

⁷³⁴ Pap. has προκειμένη. Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.178, 247) reads <έν> λέοντι, which emphasizes the conjunction taking place in the zodiac sign.

⁷³⁶ This astronomical term occurs also in III.482; XIII.5, 116, 672. See LSJ, s.v. σύνοδος, II. 2.

⁷³⁷ For the sign of the Lion, see also V.379; VII.299. See also Orac. Chald. 147.1 (ed. Des Places, p. 102); Thessalos 1.5 (ed. ⁷³⁸ Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.247): “Am Neumondstag desjenigen Monats, in welchem die Sonne im Zodiakalzeichen des Löwen steht. Das trifft ziemlich genau auf diejenige Zeit, zu welcher die Sonne am höchsten steht. Gegen das Ende des Monats setzt die Nilflut

The next ingredient to be prepared is the ink (ll. 781–82): ἄρον τὸν χυλὸν καὶ μίξας μέλιτι καὶ ζιμύρῃ ... (“take the juice and, after mixing it with honey and myrrh ...”). Apparently, the author found this recipe for the making of ink and took it up here because of the mentioning of the kentritis plant (l. 779).⁷³⁹ Mixture with honey and myrrh was also mentioned before (see l. 768, cf. μέλι l. 755).

Next the leaf from the persea tree must be prepared (ll. 782–83): γράψον ἐπὶ φύλλου περσέας τὸ ὀκταγράμματον ὄνομα, ὡς ὑπόκειται⁷⁴⁰ (“write on a leaf of the persea tree the eight-letter name, as given below”). Writing on leaves is mentioned as part of other procedures in the PGM,⁷⁴¹ and so is the persea tree.⁷⁴² The eight-letter name is cited below, l. 788.⁷⁴³ ein; sie fällt zusammen mit dem Aufgang des Sothis-Sterns (des Sirius), und der Tag dieses Aufgangs ist der sakrale Neujahrstag der Ägypter (der 1. Thoth des Sothis-Jahres). – Eine σύνοδος von Sonne und Mond findet an jedem Neumondtag und Vollmondtag statt, wenn Sonne, Mond und Erde (oder Sonne, Erde und Mond) ungefähr auf derselben Linie stehen.” See also ll. 786–87; and Merkelbach, 3.69–76.

⁷³⁹ For ink and recipes of its preparation, see I.233–34, 243–46; III.178 (mostly reconstructed); IV.815, 2237, 3199–3204, 3213, 3248; VII. 468, 521, 940–41; XIII.315, 409; XXXVI.103, 257–58, 265–66; XXXVIII.2. Lucas, Ancient Egyptian Materials and Industries (4th ed.; London: Arnold, 1962), 362–64; Rosemarie Drenkhahn, “Tinte,” LÄ 6 (1986) 595.

⁷⁴⁰ Pap. reads φύλλου correctly (cf., e.g. IV.304ff.), not φύλλον (Wessely, “Zu den griechischen Papyri,” 14). Also, pap. reads ὀκταγράμματον. There was some discussion, however. Wessely (“Griechische Zauberpapyrus,” 64), saw οκτωγραμματον, but N. Novosadsky wanted οκτωγραμματον ὄνομα (“Ad papyrus magicam bibliothecae parisinae nationalis additiones palaeographicae,” Journal of the Ministry of National Education [in Russian], part 302, December 1895 [St. Petersburg: V. S. Balashev, 1895, 81–87], 83); in n. 1 he questions whether ὀκτὼ γράμμάτων ὄνομα should be read in light of Dieterich, (Abbrasax, p. 194, l. 1): τὸ ἡ γράμμάτων ὄνομα. Dieterich (Mithrasliturgie, 18), however, reads ὀκτωγράμματον, but Preisendanz, Wünsch (in Dieterich, 224), Meyer, and Merkelbach (Abbrasax, 3.178) prefer the regular ὀκταγράμματον.

⁷⁴³ The redactional comment ὡς ὑπόκειται, “as (written) below,” has parallels in III.385–86; IV.408; VII.724. See Preisendanz, 3.194 (index), s.v. ὑποκεῖσθαι; also Daniel & Maltomini, Supplementum Magicum., ## 71 (2.95–105); 94 (2.211–21). For the eight-letter name, see also PGM LXII.9: τὰ ὀκτὼ γράμματα Σελήνης, “which are tied to the heart of Helios.” Cf. Preisendanz, 2.192, app. crit.

With these preparations completed, their application follows (ll. 783–85): καὶ πρὸ γ' ἡμερῶν ἀγνεύσας ἐλθὲ πρωίας πρὸς ἀνατολάς, ἀπόλειχε τὸ φυλλὸν δεικνύων ἡλίῳ ...⁷⁴⁴ (“and having kept yourself pure for for three days in advance, come at morning to face the sunrise, lick off the leaf while you show it to the sun ...”). Prior to the application there has to be a three-day period of sanctification; what this consists of can be seen from the parallels.⁷⁴⁵ The application begins early in the morning, in order to face the sun rising in the east.⁷⁴⁶ It consists of licking the inscription off from the leaf,⁷⁴⁷ after or while showing it to the sun (Helios).⁷⁴⁸

The result is that the god Helios will listen (ll. 785–86): καὶ οὕτως ἐπακούσεται τελείως (“then he will listen attentively”). The question here relates to the possible context of this assurance: Does it refer to the consultation with Helios-Mithras (ll. 724–28)? Or does it originally apply to a source and only secondarily to the present context? It can be taken for granted, however, that for the present author/redactor the god to listen is none other than Helios-Mithras.⁷⁴⁹

Three additional instructions regarding this procedure follow in ll. 786–92. First, regarding the specification of time (ll. 786–87): ἄρχου δὲ αὐτὸν τελεῖν τῇ ἐν λέοντι κατὰ θεὸν νομηνίᾳ (“Begin to consecrate him on the new moon in the Lion, according to the god[’s reckoning].”)⁷⁵⁰ The instruction supplements l. 780, but what is meant by αὐτὸν τελεῖν? Preisendanz, Meyer, and Merkelbach believe it to be the sun-scarab to be consecrated (cf. l. 779).

⁷⁴⁴ Pap. reads γ for the number three.

⁷⁴⁶ For further references, see I.34; VII.524 (πρὸς ἀνατολάς); XII.282.

⁷⁴⁸ For parallels, see PGM VII.524, 915; XIII.1045.

⁷⁴⁹ The terminology is common not only in the PGM: for ἐπακούειν (“listen”), see l. 587.

⁷⁵⁰ Preisendanz (app. crit., ad loc.) raises the question whether, because of the new moon the goddess Selene is meant; in IV.2389, the reference is stated: κατὰ θεὸν νομηνίαν, but no name is given there either. The expression κατὰ θεόν is technical in calendrical procedures; see (with further literature) W. Kendrick Pritchett, “Postscript: The Athenian Calendars,” ZPE 128 (1999) 79–93.

Second, the eight-letter name, mentioned in ll. 782–83 is revealed, introduced by a citation formula (l. 788): τὸ δὲ ὄνομά ἐστιν τοῦτο· ἱ εε οο ἱαῖ (“The name, however, is: I EE OO IAI.”).

Third, a specification of the leaf (cf. l. 785) is added (ll. 788–90): τοῦτο ἐκλειχε, ἵνα φυλακτηριασθῇς, καὶ τὸ φύλλο(ν) ἐλίξας, ἐμβαλε εἰς τὸ ῥόδινον⁷⁵¹ (“Lick this up, so that you may be protected; and rolling up the leaf, throw it into the rose-oil.”). The purpose of the licking off⁷⁵² is now explained as a phylacterion, a measure of protection.⁷⁵³ After having licked it off, the leaf is to be rolled up⁷⁵⁴ and thrown into the rose-oil (l. 759).⁷⁵⁵ The conclusion to the passage (778–92) takes the form of another “commercial” (ll. 790–92): πολλάκις δὲ τῇ πραγματείᾳ χρυσάμενος ὑπερεθαύμασα (“Many times I have used the spell, and have been absolutely amazed”). A similar commercial has occurred before (see on l. 776); doubtless it was taken over from the source.⁷⁵⁶ The “commercial” combines two topoi: frequent use as evidence of effectiveness,⁷⁵⁷ and great amazement on the part of the practitioner.⁷⁵⁸

3. Further items of information (ll. 792–813)

Another supplement is added to the previous rituals (ll. 792–813), consisting of three pieces of “information” pertaining to the sun-scarab, the main ritual of the consultation of Mithras, and the plant kentritis. Regarding composition, the three items were appended by the author/redactor who derived them

⁷⁵¹ Pap. reads ἐκλειχε ἵνα and φύλλο(ν) (the final ν is written with a supralinear stroke).

⁷⁵² For the term ἐκλείχειν, see also VII.523 (ὄνομα); XIII.889–90, 898, 1051 (φύλλον). Cf. l. 785 ἀπολείχειν.

⁷⁵³ The peculiar term φυλακτηριασθῆναι (“to be furnished with an amulet” [LSJ]) occurs also in IV.2626–27: ἴσθι δὲ πεφυλακτηριασμένος; VII.897–99; Horapollo, Hier. 1.24, l. 4.

⁷⁵⁴ For ἐλίσσειν, see also VII.360, 413, 463 (ἐλίξον καὶ βάλε εἰς θάλασσαν); VIII.67; XXXVI.234.

⁷⁵⁵ The rose-oil is simply called τὸ ῥόδινον, a substantive adjective (“made from roses”); see above, ll. 757–59, 774; also I.62; VII.230; XIII.1018; for the adjective ῥόδιος, see I.278 (ἐλαῖον); VII.337–38; VIII.108–9 (μύρον). For rose-oil, see Hopfner, OZ 2/1, §§ 121–22; Franz Olck, “Gartenbau,” PRE 13th Halbband (1910), esp. 774–76.

⁷⁵⁶ ὑπερθαυμάζειν is found only here in the PGM, but it is rather frequent in Hellenistic and Roman period literature; see Aelian, Var. hist. 12.49; Anth. pal. 15.16.2; Athenaeus, Deipn. 7.23 (285d); Heliodorus, Aeth. 5.8.5; Lucian, Macrob. 24; Var. hist. 1.34; Pro imag. 18; Zeux. 3; Am. 52; etc. (see also LSJ, TLG, s.v.); for πραγματεία, see l. 776–77; PGM IV.254–55, 853–54, 1954, 2079, 2099, 2628, 2630, 3271.

⁷⁵⁸ For parallels, see I. 775 and XIII.250; and Preisendanz, 3.105 (index), s.v. θαῦμα, θαυμάζειν, θαυμάσιος, θαυμαστός.

from personal revelation as well as source materials different from the Vorlage of the preceding rituals. This shows that when he added the information he had the complete text before him, and that he was careful to preserve the excerpts as they were copied. Forming a kind of appendix, the new information contains the results of further research, in which he noted differences as well as his own judgment, validated by divine revelation.

The first item concerns a correction to be made in the previously recorded ritual. This correction is needed because of a personal revelation of the author (ll. 792–96): εἶπεν δέ μοι ὁ θεός· (“But the god spoke to me: ...”) This formula presupposes the author has received a personal revelation from the god (no doubt, Helios-Mithras), which supersedes the previous tradition. Nothing is said about what kind of revelation it was; it could have been a dream or a vision, in which the god appeared to order the change. The revelation concerns the preparation of the ointment as stated in ll. 751–78: μηκέτι χρῶ τῷ συγχρίσματι, ἀλλὰ ῥίψαντα εἰς ποταμὸν <χρῆ> χρᾶσθαι φοροῦντα τὸ μέγα μυστήριον τοῦ κανθάρου τοῦ ἀναζωπυρηθέντος διὰ τῶν κε΄ ζῶων ὄρνεων⁷⁵⁹ (“Use the ointment no longer, but, after casting it into the river [you must] consult while wearing the great mystery of the scarab revitalized through the 25 living birds”). Several points are controversial, so that the translations also differ.⁷⁶⁰ Which object is to be thrown into the river? Is it the persea leaf (Preisendanz), or the ointment of the sun scarab (Merkelbach)? Most likely the text refers to the ointment in l. 770 (χρῖσμα), the σύγχρισμα⁷⁶¹ which is no longer to be used, but is to be disposed of by throwing it into the river, presumably the Nile.⁷⁶² Such a disposal, of course, turns it over to Osiris who is identical with the Nile.⁷⁶³ The term χρᾶσθαι refers to the oracular ⁷⁵⁹ The word <χρῆ> has been supplied by Eitrem. Preisendanz assumes the object of ῥίψαντα to be τὸ φύλλον; the pap. reads ποταμο with a supralinear stroke indicating final ν; the number 25 is written in the pap. as κε (meaning εἴκοσι πέντε).

⁷⁶¹ The noun occurs only here in the PGM, but see for the verb II.75; XXXVI.285. The term is technical in ancient medicine and pharmacy; see Dioscorides, Mat. med. 1.16.2; Galen, Compos. med. 1 (ed. Kühn, 12.411, l. 8; 12.412, l. 5); Aetius of Amida, Iatr. 1.136 (ed. Olivieri, 1.69, lines 13, 17); 4.45 (1.389, l. 1), etc. See LSJ, s.v. σύγχρισμα.

⁷⁶² For things thrown into the river, cf. also IV.40; VII.420, 450.

⁷⁶³ So Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.247): “Da die Sonnenkäfer-Salbe nun doch einmal bereitet war, sollte sie in den Nil geworfen werden. Damit erleidet das σύγχρισμα dasselbe Schicksal wie Osiris, den Seth-Typhon in den Fluß geworfen hatte. In IV.876 heißt Osiris consultation described in ll. 717, 724–28 (cf. 732–34), during which the ointment of the sun-scarab was to be used (ll. 770, 773–74). Instead of this ointment, one should wear “the great mystery of the sun-scarab”⁷⁶⁴ (see ll. 746, 750–78) as an amulet; that scarab has been “revitalized through the 25 living birds.” This strange reference seems to allude to an otherwise unattested ritual,⁷⁶⁵ so well known to the author that he does not consider further information to be necessary; unfortunately, there is no other extant attestation of it, so all explanations are necessarily speculative.⁷⁶⁶

The second item is also a correction regarding the times of consultation (ll. 796–98): χρᾶσθαι ἅπαξ τοῦ μηνός, ἀντὶ τοῦ κατὰ ἔτος γ', κατὰ πανσέληνον.⁷⁶⁷ (“Consult once a month, at full moon, instead of three times a year.”)⁷⁶⁸ In other words, at the god’s order the time schedule stated in the preceding text is to be changed from three times a year (ll. 747–48) to once a month. It seems that the performances are shifted from a seasonal to an astrological calendar,⁷⁶⁹ and from new moon (l. 753) to full moon.⁷⁷⁰

The third item (ll. 798–804) contains botanical information about the kentritis plant, supplementing earlier instructions in ll. 773, 778–86. This ὁ γενόμενος Ἐσις καὶ ποταμοφόρητος, auf der Bleitafel von Hadrumantum droht eine Magierin mittam ut a flumine feratur (Audollent, Defixionum tabellae, 270). Da Osiris regeneriert wurde, wird dasselbe auch mit dem Käfer geschehen.” See also Hopfner, OZ 2/1–2, §§ 130, 187, 224, 260, 289–90, 294.

⁷⁶⁴ Cf. XIII.128: τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θεοῦ, ὃ ἐστὶν κάλθαρρος, “the mystery of the god, which is a scarab” (or: “which is ‘Scarab’”). The question is whether there is a relationship between these rituals.

⁷⁶⁵ For the term ἀναζωπυρεῖν (“rekindle, revitalize”), see also XIII.739: a magical name gives vital power to magical books (τὸ ἀναζωπυροῦν τὰς πάσας βίβλους σου); cf. XII.318: ζωπυρεῖν. For the term ἀναζωπυρέω see also 1 Tim 1:6; 1 Clem 27:3; Ign Eph 1:1, and BDAG, s.v.

⁷⁶⁶ Meyer (Betz, GMPT, 53, n. 105) suggests: “The allusion to the twenty-five birds is obscure; it may be related to the hours, so that the scarab Khepri is reborn in the first hour of a new day, after the passage of twelve hours of day and twelve hours of night during the previous day.” Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.248) proposes to read the number as κθ', which would increase the birds to 29 and relate them to the 29 days of the lunar month.

⁷⁶⁷ Pap. reads γ for three.

⁷⁶⁸ The infinitive has imperative force, perhaps influenced by <χρῆ>. According to Plutarch, Pyth. orac. 8, 398A; Quaest. Graec. 9, 292E–F, the consultation of the Pythia should occur during the month of Bysos; see Schröder, Plutarch's Schrift, 87, 183–84.

⁷⁶⁹ Weinreich (in Dieterich, 225) refers to Armand Delatte, “Études sur la magie grecque, V. ἈΚΕΦΑΛΟΣ ΘΕΟΣ,” BCH 38 (1914) 246. For another change from a seasonal to an astrological calendar, see the conflict about the Bacchanalia, described in Livy, 39.13.8–10; on this, see Burkert, Ancient Mystery Cults, index, s.v. Bacchanalia; Henrichs, “Dromena,” in Graf, Ansichten griechischer Rituale, 54; Versnel, Inconsistencies 1. 160–61.

⁷⁷⁰ The phrase ἀντὶ τοῦ ... κατὰ πανσέληνον may come from a marginal note (Jordan); cf. IV.52–53.

information is divided into two parts, the first part (798–804) concerns a tradition which likely originates in a herbalist's text:⁷⁷¹ ἡ δὲ κεντρίτις βοτάνη φύεται ἀπὸ μηνὸς Παῦνι ἐν τοῖς μέρεσι μελάνης γῆς, ὁμοία δὲ ἐστὶν τῷ ὀρθῷ περιστερεῶνι. ἡ δὲ γνῶσις αὐτῆς οὕτως γίγνεται· ἴβως πτερόν χρίεται τὸ ἀκρομέλαν χαλασθὲν τῷ χύλῳ καὶ ἅμα τῷ θιγεῖν ἀποπίπτει τὰ πτερὰ⁷⁷² (“The kentritis plant grows from the month of Pauni, in the regions of the black earth, and is similar to the erect verbenae; this is how to recognize it: the wing of an ibis is smeared, the ‘black edge’ weakened by the juice, and when the feathers are touched, they fall off”). The description follows the established pattern of identifying the species (βοτάνη, “plant”), the seasonal growth: “from the month of Pauni on,” that is, the tenth month of the year (May 26 to June 24),⁷⁷³ and the geographical area: the region called “the black earth” is the arable land of Egypt, in contrast to the “red land” of the desert.⁷⁷⁴

The next step is a comparison with a similar plant, called περιστερεῶν (“upright verbenae,” or “dovecote”).⁷⁷⁵ The method for identifying the plant (γνῶσις) is then described. The black tip of a wing feather of an ibis,⁷⁷⁶ when smeared with the juice of the plant (cf. ll. 773, 781), is thereby weakened and falls off when touched. So far the information gleaned from the herbalist source.

In ll. 804–13, the author adds new information, derived from a personal revelation by the god (ll. 804–7): τοῦτο τοῦ κυρίου ὑποδείξαντος εὐρέθη ἐν τῷ Μενελαΐτῃ ἐν τῇ Φαλαγρῷ πρὸς τὰς ἀναβολαῖς πλησίον <τῆς> τοῦ ⁷⁷¹ See Hopfner, OZ 1, §§ 464–551: “Die sympathisch-symbolischen Pflanzen”; M. Carmela Betrò (“Erbarie nell’ antico Egitto,” Egitta e Vicino Oriente 11 [1988] 71–110, esp. 74) mentions the PGM passage as “chiaramente tratta da un erbario.” I owe this last reference to Thomas Dusa.

⁷⁷² Pap. reads ἴβως. For a discussion of the text see Crönert, “Zur Kritik,” 101; Hopfner, OZ 2/1, §§ 120–21. For μελάνης instead of μελαίνης, see Dieterich (19) who cites Dieterich, Untersuchungen, 178; see also, LSJ, BDAG, s.v. μέλας; Wiedemann, Herodots zweites Buch, 76.

⁷⁷⁴ See Hopfner (OZ 1, § 500), with reference to Wiedemann, Herodots zweites Buch, 76–77; Griffiths (Plutarch, 425–26), commenting on Plutarch’s Is. Os. 33, 364C: “... they call Egypt, since it is mostly black, Khemia, like the black part of the eye.”

⁷⁷⁶ On the ibis-wing, see Deines & Grapow, Wörterbuch der ägyptischen Drogennamen, 484.

Βη<σα>σάδος βοτάνης⁷⁷⁷ ("As the lord demonstrated to me, [the plant] is found in the Menelaïtis area near Phalagry, at the river banks, near the Besas plant"). Thanks to divine guidance,⁷⁷⁸ the author has actually found the plant at an identifiable place. According to Kees and Calderini, the area called Menelaos (Menelaïtes) was situated in the northwestern Nile Delta, east of Alexandria.⁷⁷⁹ Phalagry is the likely name of a place in the Roman province of Cyrenaica between Kainopolis and Marabina.⁷⁸⁰ The Besas plant is, as the name says,⁷⁸¹ related to the god Bes (Βησᾶς). According to Dioscorides the Syrian name was βήσασα, but different names were used in different localities.⁷⁸²

A more detailed description defines the plant further (ll. 808–13): ἔστιν δὲ μονόκλωνον καὶ πυρρόν ἄχρι τῆς ρίζης καὶ τὰ φύλλα οὐλότερα καὶ τὸν καρπὸν ἔχοντα ὅμοιον τῷ κορύμβῳ ἀσπαράγῳ ἀγρίῳ. ἔστιν δὲ παραπλήσιον τῷ καλουμένῳ ταλάπη, ὡς τὸ ἄγριον σεῦτλον⁷⁸³ ("It is of a single stem, and reddish down to the root; and the leaves are rather crinkled and have fruit like the tip of wild asparagus. It is similar to the so-called talapes, like the wild beet").

⁷⁷⁷ Accepting Jordan's reading; see below, 781. Pap. reads ἀναβολαῖς; Dieterich (19) proposes ἀνατολαῖς, but Preisendanz keeps ἀναβολαῖς, "an den Wällen (des Nils)." Merkelbach: "an den Dämmen," that is, "Deiche des Nils" (Abrasax, 3.181, 248). Dieterich also reads Φαλαγρῇ (Jordan retains Φαλαγρυ). Cf. l. 752.

⁷⁷⁸ For the term ὑποδεικνύειν, see also VII.592; VIII.65–66; LXII.44.

⁷⁸⁰ So according to Hermann Kees, "Phalakra(i), Phalakre 2)," PRE 19/2 (1938) 1614–15; Calderini (Dizionario 5 [1987], 54) points to two possible places, Falacro and Phalagry. The main source is Stephanus of Byzantium, s.v. Φαλάκραι: ἔστι δὲ καὶ κώμη Λιβύης Φαλάκραι. See also Dieterich (19, 225).

⁷⁸¹ Pap. reads του βησαδος βοτανης, "plant of Besas"; Dieterich (19) refers to Dioscorides, Mat. med. 3.46.2: βησασᾶ, agrestis ruta; Alexander of Tralles 2 (ed. Puschmann, 134), but the forms βήσασα, βίσασα, βισασά, occur as well (according to Max Wellmann [in Dieterich, 19], βησασᾶ is read by the best Dioscorides manuscripts). Dieterich considers βησαδάδος(?). Jordan prefers <τῆς> τοῦ Βη<σα>σάδος βοτάνης. See LSJ, s.v. βησασᾶ, "Syrian rue."

⁷⁸² For the identification, see Dioscorides, Mat. med. 3.46.1–2; Hopfner, OZ 1, § 500: some called it πῆγανον ἄγριον, the Egyptians Epnubu, the Afrians Churma, the Cappadocians Moly.

⁷⁸³ Pap. reads ἀσπαράγῳ ἀγρίῳ, emended by Dieterich (20) to ἀσπαράγου ἀγρίου; Jordan retains the pap. reading.

As one would expect, the language of this passage contains terms from botany: μονόκλωνος (“with a single stem”),⁷⁸⁴ πυρρός (“reddish”),⁷⁸⁵ τὰ φύλλα οὐλότερα (“crinkled leaves”),⁷⁸⁶ κορύμβος (“cluster of fruit” or “flowers”).⁷⁸⁷ The plant names cannot all be identified: ἀσπάραγος (“asparagus”),⁷⁸⁸ τάλαπη,⁷⁸⁹ and σεῦτλον (“wild beet”).⁷⁹⁰

4. Third ritual: the phylacteries (ll. 813–19)

The third ritual concerns the phylacteries to be used during the main ritual. They must of course be prepared before the ritual begins, so that they are ready for use whenever needed (see ll. 659–61, 708, 789).⁷⁹¹ Phylacteries are protective amulets on stone, papyrus, or metal lamellae, with engravings of letters, names, voces magicae, symbols, or pictorial representations. Usually worn on the body of a person, they were – and still are – widely used in every religious configuration,⁷⁹² which is why specific regulations for their preparations must be followed.

⁷⁸⁴ See IV.2689, 3201; cf. Dioscorides, Mat. med. 4.5; Theophrastus, Hist. plant. 9.18.8; cf. idem, Caus. plant. 2.15.5 (μονόκλωνος).

⁷⁸⁵ See also IV.2899; VII.890; XIII.309.

⁷⁸⁶ LSJ (s.v. οὔλος) refers to Theophrastus, Hist. plant. 9.4.3; cf. 7.4.4: οὐλόφυλλος.

⁷⁸⁷ See LSJ, s.v., κόρυμβος, III.

⁷⁸⁸ See Theophrastus, Hist. plant. 6.4.1; Dioscorides, Mat. med. 2.125.

⁷⁸⁹ According to the TLC the name of the plant is a hapaxlegomenon. See the comments by Dieterich and Wellmann (in Dieterich, 20–21) who point to a plant called ἄλυπον (Dioscorides, Mat. med. 4.178: γεννᾶται δὲ ἐν τόποις παραθαλασσίαις, μάλιστα τοῖς τῆς Λιβύης τόποις καὶ ἐν ἄλλοις δὲ χωρίοις πλείστον; Pliny, Nat. 27.22), implying that τάλαπη is an error. Hopfner (OZ 1, § 500) and Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.248) have no explanation to offer.

⁷⁹⁰ See also III.614; cf. (reconstructed) VII.173; LXI.2. LSJ list τεῦτλον, with references from the papyri; Theophrastus, Hist. plant. 1.6.6 (beta maritima L., “wild sea beet,” or “beet”).

⁷⁹¹ Phylacteries play an important role in the PGM, notably in IV. Preisendanz, 3.197–98 (index) notes the following occurrences of φυλακτήριον: I.275 (cf. φυλακτινόν I.272), 280; III.97, 127; IV.79, 86, 257, 660, 708, 1071, 1253, 1264, 1316–17, 1335–36, 1619–20, 1653–54, 1661, 1670, 1675, 1685–86, 1703, 2358, 2508, 2510–11, 2630, 2694, 2705, 2897, 3014, 3094, 3127; VII.218, 298, 311, 317, 486, 579, 844, 857; XI.a.37; XII.13; XIII.796, 899; XXXVI.159; LXII.23; LXX.2; LXXI.1, 6; LXXII.23; XLVII.10–11 (νεφελιακτήριον).

⁷⁹² The literature on phylacteries and amulets is vast and widely dispersed. See for surveys and bibliographies Charles W. King, The Gnostics and Their Remains: Ancient and Medieval (2nd ed.; London: Nutt, 1887); Reitzenstein, Poimandres, 291–303; Gerhard Kropatscheck, De amuletorum apud antiquos usu capita duo (Gryphiae: Abel, 1907); F. Eckstein & Jan H. Waszink, “Amulett,” RAC 1 (1950) 397–411; Daniel & Maltomini, Supplementum Magicum ## 23 (1.63–66); 28 (1.76–77); 34 (1.99–101); 64 (2.66–67); 92 (2.204–8); 94

The text begins with a kind of section title (ll. 813–14): τὰ δὲ φυλακτήρια ἔχει τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον⁷⁹³ (“Then the phylacteries are of this kind”).⁷⁹⁴ The term τρόπος refers to a particular type of amulet as well as the method for making it.⁷⁹⁵ The preparation distinguishes between what one should wear on the right and on the left arm, as also what material one should use. First, the amulet for the right arm is treated (ll. 814–17): τὸ μὲν δεξιὸν γράψον εἰς ὑμένα προβάτου μέλανος ζμυρνομέλανι (“Copy the [amulet] for the right [arm] onto the skin of a black sheep, with myrrh ink”). The hide of the black sheep is contrasted to that of the white sheep (l. 818); the preparation of myrrh ink has been described before (ll. 780–81). Then follows the application: τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ δῆσας νεύροις τοῦ αὐτοῦ ζώου περιάψαι (“and after tying it with the sinews of the same animal, put it on”). Apparently, the formula to be inscribed has been omitted, either by accident, or because it is the same for both arms; the term περιάπτειν (“attach [around the arm]”) is technical and occurs elsewhere in the PGM.⁷⁹⁶ The same procedure is to be followed for the left arm (ll. 817–19): τὸ δὲ εὐώνυμον εἰς ὑμένα λευκοῦ προβάτου καὶ χρῶ τῷ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ (“and that for the left [arm copy] onto the skin of a white sheep, and use the same method”).

Then the vox magica for the left arm is given: εὐωνύμ<ον τ>οῦ προσθυμηρί⁷⁹⁷ (“[the magical name] of the left [arm] is PROSTHYMERI”). Scholars differ

(2.211–21); Merkelbach, Abrasax 1–4, indices; Kotansky, Amulets, §§ 18; 32; 60; 65; 66; idem, “Incantations and Prayers for Salvation on Inscribed Greek Amulets,” in Faraone & Obbink, Magika Hiera, 107–37; Bonner, Studies (cf. the review by Karl Preisendanz, Gnomon 24 [1952] 340–45); idem, “Amulets Chiefly in the British Museum,” Hesperia 20 (1951) 301–45; idem, “A Miscellany of Engraved Stones,” ibid. 23 (1954) 138–57; Delatte & Derchain, Les intailles; Jean Marquès-Rivière, Amulettes, Talismans et Pantacles dans la tradition orientales et occidentales (Paris: Payot, 1938); Erika Zwierlein-Diehl, Magische Amulette und andere Gemmen des Instituts für Altertumskunde der Universität zu Köln (ARWAW.PC 20; Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1992, with the review and additional bibliography by William Brashear, Gnomon 68 [1996] 447–53); Carol Andrews, Amulets of Ancient Egypt (London: British Museum Press, 1994); Walter Beltz and Christoph Uehlinger, “Amulett,” RGK (4th ed., 1998) 1.442–44; TDNT, BDAG, s.v. φυλακτήριον, pointing to the occurrence of Jewish phylacteries in Matt 23:5 (see Schürer, History, 2.479–81; 3.342–79).

⁷⁹⁴ The translations differ at this point: Preisendanz: “Die Amulette sind so beschaffen”; Meyer: “Now the phylacteries require this procedure: ...”; Merkelbach: “Die Amulette (die man benützen soll) sehen so aus.”

⁷⁹⁵ For the term τρόπος, see IV.740, 819; XII.274; and Preisendanz, 3.190 (index), s.v.

⁷⁹⁷ Pap. reads θυμηρι, which Dieterich (20) emends to θυμήρεις. Also, the pap. reads ευωνυμου, emended by Wessely to εὐώνυμ<ον τ>οῦ προσθυμηρι, now supported by widely in regard to the text and its interpretation. For one, there is the problem that the vox magica is given only for the left arm, while the corresponding one for the right arm is omitted; if it were the same as for the right arm, the text would have indicated it. A further question is whether the inscription for the right arm can be restored on the basis of προσυμερι (l. 661). Finally, should the following phrase πληρέστατον καὶ τὸ ὑπόμνημα ἔχει be part of the sentence or not? Should the following Homer verses be taken as the content of the ὑπόμνημα? Translations, therefore, vary at this point.⁷⁹⁸ However, comparison with the phylactery at ll. 659–61 shows that for the right arm there is only one vox magica (PROSYMERI), which corresponds to the other (PROSTHYMERI) for the left arm. Thus, there is no reason to assume a longer inscription for the left arm.

IV. Epilogue (ll. 819–20)

Contrary to most scholars,⁷⁹⁹ the final clause should be taken as a separate statement by the author/redactor: πληρέστατον καὶ τὸ ὑπόμνημα ἔχει ([With this] the memorandum has [finally] reached its completion’).⁸⁰⁰ Stating that the document is now complete uses the superlative form πληρέστατον because of the many supplements and additions. The term ὑπόμνημα (“memorandum”) refers to legal and literary documents;⁸⁰¹ it refers most likely to the Jordan. The change to the genitive is only needed because Wessely connects it with with πληρέστατον ὑπόμνημα; this emendation, however, although accepted by Preisendanz, Meyer, and Merkelbach, seems to be unconvincing. Cf. also Preisendanz, WSI 41 (1919) 142–43.

⁷⁹⁸ Preisendanz: “Das linke is ganz gefüllt mit ‘Prosthymèri’ und hat die Aufschrift...” (The Homer verses are taken to be the content of the ὑπόμνημα); Meyer (translating Preisendanz): “The left one is very full of ‘PROSTHYMERI’, and has this memorandum ...”; Merkelbach: “Das linke mit dem ‘König STHYMERI’ hat auch die vollständigste Erinnerungskraft in sich.” Merkelbach (Abrasax, 3.248) comments that the left amulet strengthens the memory, and that ὑπόμνημα refers to spells called μνημονική (e.g., I.232; III.424, 467; cf. also II.17, 40).

⁷⁹⁹ According to Weinreich (in Dieterich, 225), Preisendanz considered to punctuate: εὐωνύμου· “προσθυμερι”. πληρέστατον καὶ τὸ ὑπόμνημα ἔχει. This reading keeps what the pap. has. In his edition and translation, however, Preisendanz follows Wessely’s emendation: εὐώνυμο<ν τ>οῦ “προσθυμερι” πληρέστατον καὶ τὸ ὑπόμνημα ἔχει, “Das linke ist ganz gefüllt mit ‘Prosthymèri’ und hat die Aufschrift”

⁸⁰⁰ According to Wünsch, ll. 819–20 are “a poorly copied marginal gloss to the Vorlage.” For this and other speculations, see Preisendanz, app. crit., ad loc. For similar conclusions, see III.161: καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ πράξις...; IV.2078–79: ταῦτά ἐστιν, τὰ ἐπιτελεῖ ἡ μόνη πραγματεία.

⁸⁰¹ The term is used also XIII.725. For references, see LSJ, s.v. ὑπόμνημα (5), and PGL; Preisigke, Wörterbuch, 2.667–69; Elias Bickermann, “Beiträge zur antiken Urkunden-text as a whole, or, less likely, to the supplements alone (ll. 750–819).⁸⁰² After l. 820 there also occurs a colon (:) and a paragraphos sign,⁸⁰³ signifying the end of the section and implying that the Homer verses (ll. 821–34) are not to be taken as a part of the Mithras Liturgy.⁸⁰⁴ forschung, III,” APF 9 (1930) 164–65; Franco Montanari, “Hypomnema,” DNP 5 (1998) 814–15 (with lit.).

⁸⁰² Cf. the term σύνταγμα in the exordium (ll. 481–82), apparently refers to the text up to l. 750, where the additional instruction (διδασκαλία τῆς πράξεως) begins (ll. 750–819). Therefore, the ὑπόμνημα could simply refer to these additional instructions, but since they are mere additions to the whole composition, the Mithras Liturgy in its entirety functions as a memorandum in the same way.

⁸⁰³ See on this Gardthausen, Griechische Palaeographie, 2.400, 402–3.

⁸⁰⁴ So the evidence of the pap., noted by Wessely (“Zu den griechischen Papyri,” 14) and Preisendanz (ad loc., apparatus criticus). Differently, Dieterich (20, 225) is indecisive: on the one hand (20), he takes ὑπόμνημα as the category of “quotation,” meaning the Homer verses (ll. 821–34); on the other hand (21), he observes correctly that the Mithras Liturgy is interpolated between the Homer verses of ll. 467–75 and 821–43: “Es scheint, daß zwischen die Homerverse der große Wahrsagezauber eingeschoben ist, so daß vor und nach ihm noch deren gesprengte Stücke erscheinen.”

Foreword

It has become increasingly common to see “magic” as a negative word, primarily designating illicit religion and ritual. But while this was often true in antiquity, in the modern day it tends to conjure up different associations—the promise of romance and excitement (“magical adventures”) or of miraculous ease and efficiency (“it works like magic!”). This may be why magical texts are often of such interest, even—and perhaps especially—to non-scholars; they seem to embody the distance between our own mundane present and the past, in its alien distance and possibility. Yet the reality is that magical texts are often inaccessible or obtuse—difficult in their language, and drawing deeply from a reservoir of cultural references unfamiliar to most modern readers.

The present volume is the product of the project The Coptic Magical Papyri: Vernacular Religion in Late Roman and Early Islamic Egypt (2018–2023), whose goal was to make one group of these texts, those written in Coptic, more accessible to scholars and laypeople. This project was funded by, and housed at, the Julius Maximilian University Würzburg through the Excellent Ideas programme. We must in particular thank Martin Stadler and Daniel Schwemer for supporting the initial proposal, made by the project leader Korshi Dosoo; without their advocacy, and later guidance, the project, and this volume, would never have come to be.

When the project began in 2018, Dosoo worked alongside Edward O.D. Love and Markéta Preininger, respectively the post-doctoral and doctoral research fellows. In 2021, Love moved on from the project, while Preininger became the post-doctoral research fellow, and Julia Schwarzer in turn joined the team as doctoral research fellow. Throughout the course of the project, the core team was assisted by numerous co-workers and collaborators, notably Matouš Preininger, who worked as information technician from 2020–2022, and Stella Türker and Selina Schuster, who joined as research assistants in 2020 and 2022 respectively. While we continually received invaluable support from the Coptological, Papyrological, and Egyptological communities, a number of colleagues were recognised as contributors to the project based on their valuable input: Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin, Anne Grons, Krisztina Hevesi, Bill Manley, Ortal-Paz Saar, Anne Sieberichs, Simon St-Arnault Chiasson, and David Tibet.

The initial goal of the project was to develop a database which would facilitate the study of the corpus within its larger context, by including data on magical texts in Coptic, Greek, Demotic, and other relevant languages. This materialised in the Kyprianos Database of Ancient Ritual Texts and Objects, launched online in October 2020. The database initially focused on metadata—that is, physical and bibliographical descriptions of manuscripts—but, over the five years of the project, we continually edited published and unpublished Coptic texts and made them available through the Kyprianos database. From the beginning of the project, we envisaged its culmination in a published volume. It is now clear that the full corpus will require an extensive series of volumes, and it is the first of these which you are reading now.

Our original conception of the volume was of something like a Sammelbuch, a volume that would bring together and present editions and translations with minimal commentary. Our reasons for this were simple—while we are confident that we have made significant progress in understanding these texts, major unanswered questions remain, and we thus preferred to separate the presentation of the texts from their interpretation. Consultation with colleagues nonetheless convinced us that something more complete was required. As a result, this volume does contain extensive commentary, and, while we are certain that it will become outdated over time, we nonetheless hope that it will allow readers an initial basis on which to develop their own understandings and interpretations.

This volume offers editions of 37 manuscripts from Egypt, written in Coptic, dating to between the fourth and eleventh centuries of the common era. These are of the type known as formularies, handbooks describing numerous rituals for accomplishing diverse goals, such as obtaining health, love, success, and cursing enemies. In a sense, it is here that we see a link between our modern conceptions of magic as a domain of infinite possibility, and past conceptions, in which ‘magical’ texts offered one way of dealing with the dangers, conflicts, and frustrations of life. While all ancient texts are valuable in providing windows onto the past, our experience has been that magical texts are often particularly rich sources; we find in them everything from the structure of the angelic hierarchy of the highest heavens to names for and descriptions of cooking pots.

Acknowledgments

This project is heavily indebted to the work of previous and contemporary scholars who have worked on Coptic magic, figures such as Angelicus Kropp, Marvin Meyer, Jacques van der Vliet, and David Frankfurter, who have been a great inspiration to us over the last five years, and readers will see their names regularly cited.

Of more immediate relevance for the project, we must thank again Martin Stadler and Daniel Schwemer, as well as Roland Baumhauer, the former dean of the Faculty of Philosophy, and Alfred Forchel, former president of the Julius Maximilian University Würzburg for financing and supporting the project. Korshi Dosoo would like to thank Malcolm Choat, Rachel Yuen Collingridge, Jennifer Cromwell, and Victor Ghica, his first papyrological and Coptological mentors; Iain Gardner and Jay Johnston, on whose project he first began to explore

Coptic magical texts in depth; and Davide, for his constant support. We thank those who read and commented on the manuscript of this first volume of Papyri Copticae Magicae at various stages of its production, who improved its quality immeasurably—Yasmine Amory, Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin, Lajos Berkes, Anne Boud'hors, Dylan Burns, Nathan Carlig, Anna Cherkashina, Eyob Derillo, Christopher Faraone, David Frankfurter, Krisztina Hevesi, Tea Ghigo, Anne Grons, Ursula Hammed, Eliza Jacobi, Frederic Krueger, Ágnes Mihálykó, Ivan Miroshnikov, Marijn van Putten, Ortal-Paz Saar, Joseph Sanzo, Valérie Schram, Sofía Torallas Tovar, Jacques van der Vliet, Vincent Walter, and Michael Zellmann-Rohrer. The inevitable mistakes which remain are our own. We thank also the curators and staff of the various collections which hold the manuscripts studied here, who kindly allowed us access to them, provided us with photographs, and answered our questions about their materiality and acquisition—Andrea Jördens and Elke Fuchs at the University of Heidelberg; Jan Moje at the Ägyptisches Museum und Papyrussammlung of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin; Daniel Soliman, Lara Weiss, Jeroen Rensen, and Eliza Jacobs at the National Museum of Antiquities in Leiden; Claudio Gallazzi at the University of Milan; Gisela Bélot at the Bibliothèque nationale et universitaire in Strasbourg; Charles Powers at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art; Julie Scott at the Rosicrucian Egyptian Museum; Charikleia Armoni at the Kölner Papyrussammlung, and Anna Maria Donadoni Roveri and Giovanna Donadoni. We would also like to thank Nadja Aboulenein, Adrienn Almásy-Martin, Paola Buzi, Jean-Charles Coulon, Jennifer Cromwell, Frank Feder, Jean-Luc Fournet, Marius Gerhardt, Gianluigi Galli, Massimo Giuseppetti, Arcangela Carbone Gross, Colin Hope, Raquel Martín Hernández, Beatrice Melchiorri, So Miyagawa, Ahmed Nakshara, Luigi Prada, Joachim Quack, Sebastian Richter, Stefanie Schmidt, Alin Suciu, and Alexandros Tsakos, as well as the Coptic Scriptorium, Database and Dictionary of Greek Loanwords in Coptic, PATHs, and Thesaurus Linguae Aegyptiae projects and their members, all of whom helped us in innumerable ways in the course of our work on the volume and the project which lay behind it. We would like to thank our present and former teammates, whose hard work can be seen on every page—Edward O.D. Love, Matouš Preininger, Selina Schuster, Julia Schwarzer, and Stella Türker. Finally, we would like to thank those whose names escape us for now, but whose contributions were no less real and valuable.

Coptic text in this volume is typeset in Antinoou, developed by Michael Everson. Greek text is typeset in IFAO Grec, conceived by Jean-Luc Fournet for the Institut français d'archéologie orientale, and developed by Ralph Hancock with the assistance of Adam Bülow-Jacobsen. Arabic text is typeset in Scheherazade, developed by the SIL. Ethiopic text is typeset in Ethiopic Lessan, developed by the Senamirmir Project. Syriac text is typeset using East Syriac Adiabene, part of the Meltho fonts package from Beth Mardutho: The Syriac Institute.

Contributors to this volume

This volume was produced under the direction of Korshi Dosoo, who is also the primary author of the introduction. Both he and Markéta Preininger, the second author, were involved in every aspect of the volume, from initial conception to publication, and are jointly responsible for all of the manuscript introductions, editions, notes, and the glossary. Edward O.D. Love was involved in some way in the work which lies behind all of the manuscript editions in the volume, either collecting their metadata, producing tracings, working on apparatuses, or as one of the primary text editors. Julia Schwarzer participated in the editions of several of the manuscripts, worked extensively as a researcher on various aspects of the volume, including the identification of Biblical passages, produced most of the tracings, and was involved with many of the practical aspects of the volume's creation, including the index locorum, the index of Arabic words and, with Markéta Preininger, the indices of Greek words and abbreviations. Selina Schuster was responsible for most of the initial work of layout, as well as the formatting and the bibliography. Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin cooperated with the team externally to produce several editions in this publication. For some of the more complex tracings (those on pp. 310, 320, 366), automatic binarisation was carried out by Raquel Martín Hernández using the techniques described in Martín Hernández/Shaus 2022, before being manually touched up by Julia Schwarzer.

Using this volume

The volume is intended to accommodate a broad audience. For students and enthusiasts without knowledge of Coptic, we provide English translation and commentaries to the texts. For experts in Coptic and papyrology and other specialists, we provide detailed information on acquisition of the manuscripts, hands, dialect, and a detailed apparatus and index of Greek and Coptic words and abbreviations at the end. A glossary at the end of the book gives brief definitions of some of the most common concepts and expressions found in the manuscripts.

This volume exists in a symbiotic relationship with the Kyprianos online database. Every manuscript has an ID number in this database, given in the section “other references” in the introduction to each papyrus in the form KYP M(anuscript) followed by the number; each individual textual unit also has a reference, KYPT(ext) + number. These allow the manuscripts and their constituent texts to be consulted online, and doing so will allow readers to see any updates or corrections, or additional bibliography, which has appeared since the publication of this volume.

Introduction

The texts presented in this volume are those defined by scholars as ‘magical’, written in the Coptic language on papyrus and other supports (parchment, paper, wood, ostraca). Both of these terms—“magical” and “Coptic”—require some explanation. This introduction will begin by offering brief presentations of what it means for a text to be defined as “magical” in the context of papyrology, and then give an overview of the Coptic language. This will be followed by a short history of the study of Coptic magical texts. The next part of the introduction will provide a summary of the manuscripts and texts contained in this volume in terms of their materiality and structure, before we end by presenting the volume’s conception and principles—how the editions of texts are organised and how they may be understood.

1. Situating Coptic Magical Texts

1.1. The Christian Magical Tradition in History

In the context of papyrology, the term “magic” refers to manuscripts containing a specific genre of ritual texts. These are texts attesting to a range of private, non-institutional ritual traditions, whose typical features (more fully discussed in 3.5 below) include the use of “magical words” (voces magicæ), “magical symbols” (kharaktēres), and particular verbal and ritual practices.¹ Likewise, the texts reflect a recurrent set of concerns—they aim to achieve specific goals, including healing disease, casting out demons, protecting their user from hostile magic, cursing enemies, manipulating relationships (gaining social success, separating friends or couples, causing men and women to be attracted to one another), and divining the future through the consultation of superhuman beings.²

The use of the term “magic” to refer to such texts in the context of papyrology began in the early nineteenth century in reference to Greek magical papyri.³ Thus, it predates and does not relate directly to questions of the relationship of magic and religion, magic as marginal religion, or magic as a specific mode of rationality which became key concerns in the wake of the work of late nineteenth and early twentieth century scholars such as James Frazer, Henri Hubert and Marcel Mauss,

These older magical Greek and Demotic papyri are today understood as one piece of evidence for a larger Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition.⁵ Such texts survive from the first century BCE to around the fifth century CE, and seem to represent an innovative textual and ritual tradition which draws upon older Egyptian and Greek, and to a lesser extent Jewish and Mesopotamian, ritual practices. These traditions existed alongside one another in the multi-ethnic Egypt of the Ptolemaic and Roman periods, in which the native Egyptian majority lived under the rule of Greek-speaking elites, and alongside large numbers of immigrants from around the Mediterranean, including the Near East.⁶ The earliest examples of Coptic-language magical texts occur in a few of the predominantly Greek manuscripts of the Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition, but these are generally non-Christian, centred on traditional Egyptian deities, and written in a form of the language different from the standard Coptic used by Christians.⁷

The Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri were produced in a period of dramatic historical changes. Within Egypt, the traditional temple cults show a precipitous decline from the third century onwards, so that few temples lasted beyond the second half of the fourth century CE.⁸ The reasons for this are still imperfectly understood, but seem to be linked to changes in the Roman policy, which restricted the temples' economic base while reducing the amount of direct support that they received from the imperial administration. The second major event was the rise of Christianity; Egyptian Christians claim that their faith arrived in Egypt in the mid-first century CE with Saint Mark, the author of the gospel of the same name. More concretely, Egyptian Christian authors are known from the second century, but the community was likely small, and restricted to the area around Alexandria.

⁴ Cf. Dosoo 2021a: 677–679; Dosoo forthcoming a. The key works associated with each of these authors are Frazer's Golden Bough (in particular, the 1925 abridged edition), Hubert/Mauss' Esquisse d'une théorie générale de la magie (1902–1903, translation in Mauss 1972), and Malinowski's Coral Gardens and their Magic (1935). Helpful overviews of these theoretical approaches may be found in Tambiah 1990 and Sørensen 2007: 9–28. This changed in the third century, when Demetrius (r. 188–230 CE), the bishop of Alexandria, began to appoint other bishops in the khōra (Egypt outside Alexandria), and the first mentions of Christians in surviving papyri occur shortly afterwards.⁹ Christians nonetheless remained a sporadically persecuted minority until the fourth century,¹⁰ when the Emperor Constantine and his successors made Christianity first a licit religion (313 CE), and then the state religion of the Roman Empire. Christians in Egypt went from being a small minority (perhaps ca. 10%) at the beginning of the fourth century to a majority (ca. 70%) by the end of it, and virtually the entire population of Egypt by the middle of the fifth.¹¹

This had a major consequence for the magical tradition, which had continued to exist and evolve alongside Christianity. Magic, like Christianity, was distrusted and punished by the Roman state; early Christian rituals may often have looked like magic to non-Christians.¹² One of the earliest surviving Christian ritual texts, an exorcism written in a non-standard version of Coptic, is found in a fourth-century magical manual which otherwise primarily consists of texts belonging to the Graeco-Egyptian tradition. The manual's compiler must have considered the exorcism as part of the same broad category of ritual practice.¹³ The pre-existing distrust of magic among some members of the Graeco-Roman elite was taken up by Christians and combined with the Jewish injunction against rituals defined as kišuf ("sorcery") to create a strong anti-magic discourse within Christianity.¹⁴ Early canons and council proceedings defining how Christians should behave forbade the baptism of "magicians" (magoi) and similar figures, and prescribed penance for those who practiced or made use of magic.¹⁵

By the fourth century, the "Great Church"—that form of Christianity sponsored by the Imperial authorities and headed by bishops—had developed its own suite of rituals, known as the Christian liturgical tradition. This included the regularly-performed anaphora—the consecration of bread and wine for the communion ritual—as well as others for more specific needs, such as exorcising demons and healing illness.¹⁶ These latter practically-oriented rituals could overlap in terms of function with those of the magical tradition and were promoted by bishops as alternatives to them. Yet the magical tradition did not disappear, despite the efforts of the Christian hierarchy; rather it underwent what we can characterise as a series of parallel and overlapping processes of Christianisation.¹⁷

The first way in which the magical tradition might become Christian is simply related to context. A few texts were transmitted with little change for centuries; these included narrative charms containing stories of the traditional Egyptian gods, which circulated in Egypt until the ninth century or so.¹⁸ Yet, merely by virtue of existing in a primarily Christian context, they began to reflect this context—the degree of traditional religious content atrophied, so that the divine protagonists became little more than names, while references to the Christian God began to be incorporated.¹⁹

This changed context likely also led to the preferential survival and transmission of texts which circulated prior to Christianity, but which were already amenable to a Christian audience.²⁰ While many of the magical texts dating to before the fifth century contain mention of the deities of Greek and Egyptian cults (Osiris, Anubis, Selene, Hekate, and so on), this is not true of all of them. The magical tradition also made extensive use of Jewish names—the personal name and titles of the Jewish God, *Iao Sabaoth Adonai, and the names of angels such as Michael and Gabriel.²¹ It is often unclear whether these were used by Jews, Christians, or gentiles—or most likely all three—but they become more frequent in texts from Egypt from around the third century, perhaps as a result of the rise in prominence of Christianity. Likewise, many of the “magical names” were not linked to any real cults and so could be reinterpreted by Jews and Christians. ‘Abraxas’, a name with solar associations within the Graeco-Egyptian tradition, was reinterpreted as the name of the angel of the sun in Jewish and Christian magic.²² Many magical texts which circulated before the Christianisation of the Roman Empire could thus continue to be used in an only slightly modified form.

Another way in which magic could be made Christian is in the composition of new texts, which drew upon the techniques of the magical tradition—the use of voces magicae, kharaktēres, and so on—but called exclusively upon figures from the Jewish-Christian tradition, and which made use of the ritual techniques of the Christian liturgical tradition.²³ This process seems to have begun in the early centuries CE, when the first stages of the handbook known as the Testament of Solomon may have been composed.²⁴ But many of the texts which survive in the Coptic magical tradition seem to be later compositions, dating to the period between the fifth and seventh centuries.

In the earlier Graeco-Egyptian tradition, works were often attributed to famous authors—the Persian priests called magoi, Egyptian kings and priests, or Greek philosophers and sages²⁵—and this continued in the Christian texts, which could be attributed to Biblical figures, famous saints, and even angels.²⁶ Just as in the Graeco-Egyptian tradition, however, these longer pseudepigraphal texts are complemented by shorter, anonymous recipes of a similar type, which constitute the majority of surviving texts.

The Christian magical tradition seems to originally have been Greek in language, but in Egypt it was translated very quickly into Coptic, the contemporary written form of the native Egyptian language. It is in Coptic that the vast majority of Christian magical texts from the Egypt of the first millennium CE survive. The papyrological evidence from Egypt suggests that Christian magical texts flourished in the centuries following the Christianisation of Egypt, but clerical opposition remained. We continue to find church canons and sermons from bishops from this period denouncing the practice of magic, even when it appeared to be Christian. The sixth-century Gelasian Decree, a list of forbidden books from the Western Roman Empire, lists among them “all amulets which have been composed, not by angels, as they pretend, but by the magical arts of demons”.²⁷ Yet the need to repeat bans on magic demonstrates that, like the apocryphal literary works which also appear in the Decree, Christian magic continued to enjoy considerable popularity among both laypeople and clerics.

While we have been discussing Christianity as a monolithic object, the textual and material evidence from Egypt demonstrates its great diversity. Relevant for us here is the phenomenon of Sethian Gnosticism, a movement within Christianity which saw Jesus as a revealer sent by the true God to unveil the saving “knowledge” (gnōsis) that the world was a creation of the lesser deity of the Hebrew Bible, which could be escaped through secret rituals.²⁸ The only primary sources for Sethian Gnosticism come from Egypt, primarily fourth and fifth-century Coptic codices, including those of the famous Nag Hammadi Library. Another religion related to Christianity, Manichaeism, developed in Mesopotamia in the middle of the third century, reaching Egypt via missionaries towards the end of that century.²⁹ It saw itself as the culmination of previous revelations by Zoroaster, Moses, the Buddha, and Jesus, and envisaged the world as a battleground between the forces of light and darkness, in which human beings would be reborn until they were able to return to the realm of light through ritual purification and good deeds. Well-attested in Egypt by papyri in Greek, Coptic, and Syriac, Egyptian Manichaeism disappears from the archaeological record in the fifth century, likely a victim to Imperial and Christian hostility.³⁰ Both of these movements have left traces in the papyri published here—the earliest Coptic magical text we publish (PCM I 1) comes from a Manichaean household, and many of the others contain names taken from, or reminiscent of, the divinities of Sethian Gnosticism, a feature shared by a few later Coptic apocryphal literary texts.³¹

While these ‘alternative Christianities’ left only traces, a major split in the Christian tradition in Egypt occurred at the Council of Chalcedon in 451 CE, at which the head of the Egyptian Church, Dioscorus I, Patriarch of Alexandria, was deposed. Dioscorus had supported the miaphysite position, that Jesus had one nature, at once human and divine, while the larger Imperial Church supported the dyophysite position that Jesus existed in two natures, one human, one divine.³² This event would ultimately divide the Egyptian Church, creating a situation in which Alexandria has generally had two patriarchs, one Miaphysite, one Chalcedonian. The patriarchates of Peter IV (r. 576–78) and his successor Damian (r. 576–605) created a distinct Miaphysite hierarchy of bishops, existing in parallel to the Chalcedonian hierarchy (and, indeed, other, smaller factions).³³ This miaphysite church is the predecessor to the modern Coptic Orthodox Church, which expanded after the Muslim conquest of Egypt (642 CE), becoming the numerically dominant Christian church in Egypt.³⁴ Whether they were always the majority is unclear; the Chalcedonian Church (whose modern successors include the Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholic Churches) was supported by the Imperial state and many of the Egyptian elites; it has been suggested that they controlled the cities while the

Miaphysites controlled the countryside.³⁵ It is following the rift at Chalcedon that the Miaphysite Church started to develop a distinctively Egyptian identity—albeit one with close links to their Miaphysite brethren in Syria, Armenia, Nubia, and Ethiopia—and it is in the sixth century, around the time of the patriarchate of Damian that we begin to see major original literary compositions in Coptic rather than translations from Greek; it may be that many of the magical texts contained here belong to this same period of creativity.³⁶

In the seventh century, Egypt would be definitively severed from the Roman Empire when, in 642 CE, it was conquered by the Muslim armies under the successors of Muhammad. But cultural change seems to have been slow. The new rulers initially left much of the Late Roman administration in place, and made no concerted effort to convert the population to Islam.³⁷ It was only in the eighth century that Arabic gradually replaced Greek as the language of administration.³⁸ While an Arabic-Muslim magical tradition would develop—in part through contact with the older Greek tradition³⁹—the Christian magical tradition shows little hint of the changed cultural realities until the ninth century or so, when Arabic loanwords begin to appear, mainly as the names of ingredients, in texts which otherwise belong to the same tradition as those transmitted before the conquest.⁴⁰ This shift in the ninth century is likely due to the larger socio-political forces at work—it was in the ninth century that the last major revolts against Arab-Muslim rule took place, and in their wake, the rate of conversion of Egyptians to Islam increased, and even Christians began to use Arabic in their daily lives.⁴¹ This process culminated during the period of the Bahrī Mamlūks (1250–1382 CE); Christians became a minority of about 10% of the population of Egypt, as they remain to today.⁴² Coptic became a primarily written, rather than spoken language, which had to be learned by priests for recital in the liturgy; no substantial original texts were composed between the fourteenth and twentieth centuries.⁴³ This period marks the end of the production of Coptic-language magical texts, which ceased to be copied and composed around the twelfth century, like most other types of Coptic-language texts.

Christian Egyptians continued to practice magic, often using texts translated or inspired by older Coptic-language texts, but also increasingly influenced by the Muslim magical tradition which existed around them.⁴⁴ The most prominent of the later texts are the Guides to the Psalms which contain ritual instructions for various purposes using the text of the Psalms as the spoken formulae.⁴⁵ Coptic-language magic, however, was just one branch of a larger Christian magical tradition, perhaps originally linguistically Greek, but translated into and then elaborated in many local languages. Magical texts which share close affinities with those in Coptic can be found in Mediaeval and/or early modern texts in languages such as Armenian, Greek, Syriac, Old Nubian, and Ge'ez (the liturgical language of Ethiopia), with a few texts sharing not only specific magical names or practices, but also representing parallel versions of especially popular texts which survive in Coptic.⁴⁶ The Coptic tradition, like all of these others, demonstrates particularities, the result of original composition as well as local Christian and pre-Christian specificities. One important aspect of the Coptic magical corpus is its early date. Thanks to the dry climate of Upper Egypt, many texts survive in Coptic which are many centuries older than the copies preserved in other Christian traditions. These copies allow us a privileged perspective on the complex process by which 'magic' became 'Christian'.

Before leaving behind the history of Coptic magic, it is worth briefly mentioning its complex relationship with medicine.⁴⁷ Coptic magical and medical texts can often be distinguished based on the practices they contain: medical texts aim to heal the body through the application of pharmacological agents or the use of basic surgical interventions. While magical texts for healing may involve such medical techniques as the use of plasters, fumigation, or salves, they often accompany them with other elements, such as spoken formulae and the wearing of amulets.⁴⁸ Coptic magical and medical texts are generally transmitted in different manuscripts, which contain recipes belonging primarily to one genre or the other, and magical healing recipes often occur alongside texts for other purposes, such as love spells, curses, and divination. Yet there is also overlap; as we note below (3.1.1), there is evidence of medical doctors using magical texts, and we do sometimes find magical and medical texts transmitted in the same manuscripts. In these cases, and those of recipes which involve the preparation of pharmacological agents similar to those found in medical texts, but simply add a spoken formula, the theoretical line between magic and medicine may be very fuzzy.

1.2. The Coptic Language

We have described Coptic-language magical texts as part of a larger, primarily Greek-language Christian tradition which developed in Late Antiquity and which existed both within and beyond Egypt. This does not mean that it is without unique characteristics; several texts feature Pharaonic Egyptian deities whom we would not expect to find in non-Coptic texts, while other texts reflect theological details particular to Egyptian Christianity. Furthermore the Coptic-language magical texts show an occasional but recurrent interest in adapting healing prayers into curses and love spells which we do not find in other traditions.⁴⁹

In this volume, “Coptic” is a linguistic designation, describing the written form of the native Egyptian language as it existed in the first millennium CE, descended from its older forms. Pre-Coptic Egyptian texts survive from the third millennium BCE to the fifth century CE, written in the native hieroglyphic, hieratic, and, later, demotic scripts. Coptic is thus the descendant of the older forms of Egyptian in the same way that modern Italian is descended from Latin. But with the arrival of the Greek language in Egypt around the time of the conquest of Alexander (332 BCE),

Note that we are here making a distinction between textual genres, rather than a larger theoretical point about the difference between ‘magic’ and ‘medicine’ as cross-cultural categories.

Egyptians began experimenting with writing their language in the Greek script, producing early instances of ‘Graeco-Egyptian’ writing, generally short texts such as graffiti or personal names.⁵⁰ By the early centuries CE, Egyptian priests were using mixed systems of Greek supplemented by Demotic signs, first to annotate texts written in older forms of the language, and later to write continuous texts; these various systems are known as ‘Old Coptic’.⁵¹ Sometime around the late third or early fourth century, one of these Old Coptic systems began to be used by Christians for purposes including the translation of the Greek Bible into Egyptian and the writing of private letters, creating the basis for standard Coptic.⁵² This language remained Egyptian in grammar and basic vocabulary, but was written using the Greek alphabet of 24 letters, supplemented by 6–7 letters (depending on the dialect) drawn from Demotic to represent sounds not present in Greek. Coptic also incorporated a significant number of loanwords from Greek, the result of the influence of that language in the spheres of religion (as the language of Christianity) and political power (as the language of the Roman administration).⁵³

It is likely that the Egyptian language was always made up of multiple dialects, but this diversity was concealed by older writing systems which tended to represent single dialectal varieties.⁵⁴ Coptic, by contrast, was very diverse, with different dialects representing standardised versions of the different forms of Egyptian spoken throughout the Nile Valley and the oases. It was also diverse in its use; in the third to fifth centuries, Coptic was also used to write Hermetic, Sethian and Valentinian Gnostic, and Manichaean texts translated from Greek (or, in the case of the Manichaeans, perhaps Syriac). A form of Egyptian is likely to have been the predominant spoken language of Egypt until the ninth century, when it was replaced by Arabic. Written Coptic would have been close, if not identical, to the spoken language of most Egyptians, making it the written language most readily learned and understood.

In both Coptic and Greek, the Coptic language was referred to simply as “Egyptian”, and this holds more or less true for Arabic, in which the term qubṭ or qibṭ (from Greek Αἰγύπτιος Aiguptios) came to refer to non-Arab Egyptians, and thus their language (al-qibṭiyya), both contemporary Christians and their non-Christian ancestors.⁵⁵ As Arabic became the spoken language of all Egyptians between the ninth and twelfth centuries, Coptic became restricted in role to the liturgical language of the Miaphysite Egyptian church. Thus, when Europeans began to take an interest in Egyptian Christians from the late fifteenth century, they encountered them as a minority within Egypt, and referred to them not simply as Egyptians, but as (in Latin) copti, an adaptation of the Arabic word. This single word thus came to refer simultaneously to the ethnic group, the Church to which they belonged, and the liturgical language of that Church.⁵⁶ Thus, in modern European languages, we often refer to Coptic people, a Coptic Church, and a Coptic language. But when we refer to Coptic magical texts, we are referring only to texts written in the Coptic language, generally at a time when it was the language of almost all Egyptians rather than of a religious minority. Although many of those who used these texts would have considered themselves Christian, and may have belonged to the miaphysite Church, their practices were not generally approved of by the Church hierarchy. In this sense, Coptic magic must be distinguished from the Coptic Church and modern Coptic people, and rather seen as the local Egyptian form of a broader ritual tradition common to contemporary Christians, and shared, to a considerable degree, with their Jewish and Muslim neighbours, who may even have used it at times.⁵⁷ Indeed, hundreds of magical texts produced and used by the Egyptian Jewish community from around the tenth century CE onwards survive in the archive known as the ‘Cairo Genizah’.⁵⁸ Many of these show striking parallels to contemporary Coptic magical texts in their language, structure, and ritual practices. As more Arabic papyri from Egypt are published, we can expect to find comparable similarities with texts produced and used by Muslims.⁵⁹

2. The Study of Coptic Magical Texts

The earliest Coptic magical text to be published by a Western scholar was a short invocation to angels for healing contained in a codex of largely pharmacological medical recipes, published by the Italian scholar Georges Zoega.⁶⁰ The first text to receive major attention, however, was a long invocation of Gabriel and other angels which came to be known as “Rossi’s Gnostic Tractate”, held in Turin in Italy, and published by Francesco Rossi in 1894 (PCM I 12). In describing it as ‘gnostic’, Rossi—following his predecessor Bernardino Peyron—was responding to features such as magical names and kharaktēres similar to those known from recently published gnostic texts.⁶¹

At the same time, the developing study of Greek magical texts offered an alternative way of understanding similar Coptic texts. The earliest Greek magical texts arrived in Europe in the 1820s, and were published shortly thereafter by scholars who identified them as “magical”, recognising in them documents of the practices of mageia and theourgia (“magic” and “theurgy”) described by late antique authors.⁶² While there was a brief, and inconsistent, tendency to understand them as evidence of a particularly ‘gnostic’ magic, this tendency was arrested by the publication of the corpus of the Greek Magical Papyri (Papyri Graecae Magicae, 1928–1931), led by the scholar Karl Preisendanz, which brought together all the examples then known, allowing them to be referred to conveniently, and conclusively establishing the label of ‘magical’, rather than ‘gnostic’, texts.⁶³

As we have noted, most of the Coptic magical papyri seem to represent a Christian variety of the magical tradition represented by the Greek and Demotic magical texts, and scholars, recognising this, began to refer to Coptic magical texts as such, abandoning the label ‘gnostic’. Over the next seventy years, most of the publications relating to Coptic magical texts consisted of editions of individual manuscripts, primarily in the context of larger publications of Coptic papyri from various European and American collections. Notable among these was Adolf Erman’s publication of the Coptic manuscripts of the (then) Royal Museums of Berlin, which contained a large group of magical papyri, discussed further by him in a series of separate articles.⁶⁴

The major exception to the practice of publication by collection was the work of Angelicus Kropp, a scholar who extensively studied Coptic magical texts as part of his 1930 doctoral dissertation in which he explored their relationship to the Christian liturgy. Kropp published the results of his thesis in the three volume Ausgewählte koptische Zaubertexte (“Selected Coptic Magical Texts”, 1930–1931), containing one volume each of texts, translations, and interpretation. this day, this remains the only real full study of the corpus. Kropp would later go on to publish studies of two major Coptic magical texts republished in this volume, the Endoxon of Michael (PCM I 26) and the Prayer of Mary 'in Bartos' (PCM I 25 pp. 2–9).⁶⁵ Alongside Kropp, mention should be made of Friedrich Bibabel and Adolf Grohmann, who in 1934 published many of the magical texts belonging to the Heidelberg University collection republished here, in part a result of Grohmann's interest in the story of Cyprian the repentant magician.⁶⁶ Another major editor was Walter Beltz, who, in a series of articles in the 1980s published most of the Coptic magical texts held in the German National Museum in Berlin.⁶⁷ Despite the interest of these manuscripts, the editions of Bilabel, Grohmann,⁶⁸ and Beltz⁶⁹ are often insufficiently accurate, and the original manuscripts generally need to be consulted to correct them. Other editors and commentators on Coptic magical texts represent a “who's who” of famous Coptologists, among them William H. Worrell (1879–1952), whose interest in Egyptian magic extended into the practical;⁷⁰ Walter E. Crum (1865–1944), who edited the definitive Coptic dictionary;⁷¹ James Drescher (1902–1985), who wrote extensive corrections to that dictionary;⁷² and Hans Jakob Polotsky (1905–1991), whose work revolutionised our knowledge of Coptic-Egyptian grammar.⁷³

The study of Greek magic saw a renaissance in the late 1970s and 1980s. This was in part linked to a resurgence in interest in the study of the Graeco-Roman religious context of the New Testament, one of the original impetuses for the study of the Greek magical papyri at the turn of the twentieth century.⁷⁴ This saw the republication of the Preisendanz edition of the Greek Magical Papyri, and then a project of translation of these texts into English in the 1980s, led by Hans Dieter Betz.⁷⁵ Sensing a lacuna in the study of the later Christian magical texts, Marvin Meyer led the Coptic Magical Texts project in the 1990s,⁷⁶ which resulted in the publication—amongst other works—of Ancient Christian Magic: Coptic Texts of Ritual Power (1994), which to this day remains the most consulted volume on Coptic magic, containing texts in Greek, Old Coptic, and standard Coptic, and a mixture of magical texts, Sethian Gnostic literature, oracle tickets, and other genres.

Since the publication of Ancient Christian Magic, much of the important work on Coptic magic has been carried out by Meyer's younger contemporaries, David Frankfurter and Jacques van der Vliet, who have contributed significantly to our understanding of these texts, both in terms of questions of basic comprehension, and of larger socio-historical and theoretical context.⁷⁷ The last decade has seen another wave of major work; we can see the beginning of this in the 2013 publication by Malcolm Choat and Iain Gardner of the Macquarie codex (P.Macq. I 1). Along with Jay Johnston, Iain Gardner subsequently launched an Australian Research Council Project focusing on magical images, which has enriched our understanding of the archive of texts known as the Heidelberg Library (PCM I 21–29).⁷⁸ In recent years, Joseph Sanzo has examined the boundary between licit and illicit ritual, beginning with his 2014 study of scriptural amulets, and continuing in his European Research Council project exploring the relationship between Jewish and Christian magical traditions.⁷⁹ The work of Edward Love has focused attention on Old Coptic—including, but not limited to, magical texts—confirming that it represents not a single dialect or chaotic blend of features, but rather a similar dialectal diversity to standard Coptic.⁸⁰ Of direct relevance to this volume is Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin's 2017 checklist of published Coptic magical texts,⁸¹ which took inspiration from a similar checklist of Christian Greek texts established by Jitse Dijkstra and Theodore van Bruyn to provide, for the first time, a synoptic view of magical material in Coptic.⁸² Two forthcoming works by Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin and Markéta Preininger—respectively on non-Christian divinities and conceptions of the body—will represent the first synthetic monographs on Coptic magic since that of Kropp.⁸³

Würzburg, owes a deep debt to the work done by these scholars, and many others. Our work has attempted to record and describe the full corpus of surviving Coptic magical texts, and to develop deeper understandings of them, focusing in particular on questions of materiality and philology. In these goals, it has significant overlap with the project The Transmission of Magical Knowledge led by Christopher Faraone and Sofia Torallas Tovar, which aims to publish the corpus of Greek and Demotic formularies in the series Greek and Egyptian Magical Formularies (GEMF). In a way, our project begins where theirs ends.⁸⁴

3. The Corpus of Coptic Magical Texts

This volume contains texts drawn from 37 manuscripts of the approximately 600 known to us which have traditionally been classified as magical.⁸⁵ The texts and our principles of selection are discussed in more detail below (§5), but here we present the larger corpus from the perspectives of context, typology, materiality, and structure.

3.1. Contexts of Production and Deposition

3.1.1. Users and Findspots

A major question in the study of Coptic-language magical texts is that of their users. Literary texts which describe similar practices use terms such as μάγος (magos, “magician”), φάρμακος (pharmakos, “sorcerer”), and ρεφμοῦτε (refmoute, “enchanter”) to describe practitioners, but also mention the possibility that clerics might learn from these figures.⁸⁶ But do these terms refer to full-time ‘magical’ professionals? Something of a consensus has developed among many scholars that the primary practitioners of Coptic magic were monks.⁸⁷ There are indeed some literary texts mentioning monks as practitioners of something that looks like ‘magic’, and certain magical manuscripts have been found in monastic contexts, such as hermitages.⁸⁸ Some of the manuscripts in this volume fall into this category: PCM I 10 was reused for an account of deliveries of wine to a monastery, perhaps the Monastery of Apa Apollo at Bawit in Middle Egypt, while the copyist of PCM I 15 seems to have been a monk from the Monastery of Apa Paulos near Thebes, who also copied a surviving liturgical prayer. Some of the later manuscripts are written on parchments which were originally used for literary or even Biblical texts of the type found in the monastic libraries of the Faiyum, and one of these magical texts even has a colophon of the type found in such monastic codices, in which the copyist identifies himself as the “Deacon Iōhannēs”.⁸⁹ These manuscripts clearly demonstrate the implication of religious professionals, including monks, in the production and use of magical texts. Parallels can be drawn to other Christian cultures—in Syriac and Ethiopian Christianity, and the Mediaeval Latin West, magical texts seem to have been primarily owned and copied by clerics, who were the only figures with the skills in literacy required to produce and use them.⁹⁰ These “clerics” were not necessarily active members of the Church hierarchy, though; often “cleric” in these contexts had a relatively informal meaning, referring to someone who had acquired the skill of literacy, creating a somewhat circular relationship between clerical status and literacy.⁹¹

At the same time, we should be wary of assuming that all magical texts were produced, owned, or used by religious professionals affiliated with the church. Literacy in Egypt, at least before the decline of written Coptic between the tenth and twelfth centuries, seems to have been broader than it may have been in other Christian cultures; there were administrative scribes as well as artisans, including doctors, and small businessmen, who were also literate in Coptic.⁹² The use of magical texts by, for example, doctors, is well attested in the Greek-speaking world,⁹³ and, as we have noted, we sometimes find medical and magical texts transmitted together in Coptic.⁹⁴ The Coptic magical text with the best understood context, PCM I 1, was owned by a lay Manichaean, whose family operated a small business involving weaving and the exploitation of fruit trees.⁹⁵ There is a similar case of a modern Christian Egyptian tailor who possessed and used one of the Arabic books of magic using the Psalms which derive ultimately from the Coptic-language tradition.⁹⁶ Some of the hands, and scribal features, found in the corpus here resemble those of scribes of the Roman and later Arab administration; others seem to have had very little training, and while these could be the hands of monks, they also resemble those of laypeople who had acquired basic literacy for their own particular needs.

Well-known dossiers produced by lay Coptic writers include the Kellis House A House 3 Archive (IV CE, discussed in the introduction to PCM I 1), and the Archive of Dioscorus of Aphroditō (see Vanderheyden 2012; Papaconstantinou 2015, with further references).

A final point concerns the manner in which texts from Egypt are found and made accessible to scholars. The archaeological record of Late Antique Egypt is biased towards monastic settlements; these tended to be in the desert, where the dry sands preserve organic materials, rather than in the more densely populated towns in or on the border of the Nile Valley, which were annually flooded until the building of the Aswan High Dam, and have often been continuously inhabited down to the present day, destroying fragile texts and preventing archaeological excavation. Archaeology in Egypt has also historically focused on monumental Pharaonic sites—tombs and temples—and these were typically the same sites re-used by Christian monks as hermitages, monasteries, and churches.

A still more fundamental problem is that, for the vast majority of papyri from Egypt, there is no record of their circumstances of discovery. While the situation has, fortunately changed, historically most of them were found in informal excavations—either by native Egyptians looking for artefacts to sell, or early European or North American archaeologists who did not value questions of materiality and context enough to record where their papyri came from. It is to be deeply regretted that, of the 37 manuscripts in this volume, only one has a well-recorded context, but this is not unusual in the case of Egyptian papyri. We have managed to recover, or propose, approximate provenances for 31 of the remaining 36, but we invite readers to compare the introduction to PCM I 1 to those of the other manuscripts to see how much precious information has been lost in the process of what was, essentially, looting.

3.1.2. Temporal Distribution

Coptic magical texts generally date to between the fourth and twelfth centuries CE, with peaks in the sixth to eighth and ninth to eleventh centuries, corresponding respectively to the peaks of surviving Coptic documentary and literary manuscripts.⁹⁷ Earlier Old Coptic magical texts date to the first to fourth centuries CE, and short Coptic phrases may be found in later, predominantly Arabic, Christian magical texts from Egypt.⁹⁸

The dating of Coptic papyri is a major problem in Coptology; because most of them come from informal or illegal excavations, there is usually no archaeological context to help with dating, and, with the exception of a few notable manuscripts, there is insufficient interest and funding to use scientific dating techniques, such as radiocarbon dating, on papyri—which in any case, rely on destroying pieces of manuscripts as part of the process.⁹⁹ Coptic manuscripts very rarely contain internal absolute dates, and this is particularly true of magical texts; in a corpus of about 600 manuscripts, we are only aware of three which provide a date of production.¹⁰⁰ As a result, in most cases palaeography—the study of changes in handwriting—is the only means to date manuscripts. While this is generally accepted as broadly accurate for Greek papyri—within approximately fifty years to a century—Coptic palaeography remains poorly understood.¹⁰¹ Similar styles may continue to be used for centuries,¹⁰² and existing palaeographical tools are insufficient.¹⁰³ As a result, manuscripts may be dated very differently by different scholars, with discrepancies of hundreds of years. The association of magic with the “primitive” and “pagan” may have often led magical texts to be dated to inappropriately early dates; the carbon dating of the manuscripts purchased by Robert Hay has established an eighth or ninth century date for Coptic magical

texts previously dated by palaeographic estimates to the sixth or seventh century.¹⁰⁴

In this volume, we have endeavoured to propose dates for all of the manuscripts. We generally propose two or even three century ranges, reflecting our uncertainty, although in a few cases, we propose single centuries, if the parallels seem to cluster towards the middle of a particular century. We regularly indicate uncertainty with a question mark and here, as elsewhere in this volume, these question marks should be taken seriously as signs that more work needs to be done to definitively establish these points. Wherever possible, we have tried to find explicitly dated parallels for the hands of our manuscripts. We have also attempted to use parallels from geographical contexts close to the origin of the manuscripts, since hands may have varied considerably regionally, and we have also used broader criteria of manuscript formats (see below) to propose datings.

With these provisos in mind, the manuscripts in this volume can be dated to most of the span of the production of Coptic manuscripts—the fourth to eleventh centuries—although there is a slight bias towards the later end of the range, due to the inclusion of many texts from the Heidelberg University papyrus collection (PCM I 21–33, 35), which can be dated to the tenth to eleventh centuries. The earliest manuscript, PCM I 1, is dated to the late fourth century, while the intervening texts have been dated to between the fifth and ninth centuries.

3.1.3. Geographical Distribution

Like most papyrological manuscripts, all of the documents in this collection come from Egypt. Of the 32 for which a geographical origin can be proposed with certainty or likelihood (see fig. 1), 18 come from the Faiyum, a large, oasis-like depression fed by the canal Bahr Yussef emptying into Lake Moeris, to the west of the Nile Valley. In particular from the Ptolemaic onwards, this area was heavily populated, and became the site of numerous monasteries, whose remains provide many of the surviving Coptic literary manuscripts. The Faiyum has also been heavily excavated by treasure-hunters and archaeologists since the nineteenth century, when Egyptian farmers in search of fertiliser often visited the abandoned Roman-era cities to gather decaying mud-brick. While manuscripts from the Faiyum are generally well-represented in papyrology, they are somewhat over-represented here, as a result again of the many manuscripts from the University of Heidelberg collection.

Six texts come from Middle Egypt, defined here as the region south of the Faiyum, from Oxyrhynchus to Bawit. Again, these areas were the sites of several major towns (Hermopolis, Antinoopolis) and monasteries (Apa Apollo) which were abandoned in late antiquity, leaving their remains to be preserved for later excavators. The area further south, notably containing Abydos, may have yielded another manuscript for this volume. From still further south, around Thebes (modern Luxor), we find another six. The Theban region, one of the richest in terms of surviving tombs and temples for excavation, has consistently yielded large quantities of artefacts for excavators. The final text with a known origin is again PCMI 1, from Kellis in the Dakhla Oasis, 350 kilometres west of the Nile valley; abandoned at the end of the fourth century, it is one of a small number of very well-preserved Egyptian urban settlements from the Roman Period.

3.2. Categories of Texts

3.2.1. The Formulary-Applied Text Distinction

Magical texts, almost without exception, fall into one of two types. The first is that of formularies (also known as ‘handbooks’, or ‘models’), texts containing the information necessary for practitioners to carry out rituals.¹⁰⁵ The second type is the applied text (also known as the ‘finished product’, ‘activated text’, or ‘documentary’ magical text), which represents an object created in the course of a ritual for a specific purpose. These serve as protective and healing amulets, or as curses or love spells, which, depending on their function, would be worn on the body, deposited in a particular place, or used in other ways. There is some overlap—applied texts could be used as models for other applied texts, essentially serving as formularies. We also have examples of ‘personalised formularies’,¹⁰⁶ that is, formularies in which the generic name marker (see 3.5.3) is replaced by a personal name, so that the owner of the formulary could read it out loud more easily (an example of this probably lies behind PCMI 25 p. 13).

This volume contains only formularies, or manuscripts likely to have been formularies. At times it is difficult to distinguish the two categories; although they were quite different in the way in which they were used, they often contain the same types of texts (since applied texts were, at least theoretically, copied from formularies) and may both demonstrate other typical genre features, such as kharaktēres and voces magicae. Signs that a manuscript is a formulary rather than an applied text include the addition of titles, ritual instructions, the generic name marker, and multiple texts for different purposes (cf. 3.5.3 below). But formularies may also lack these features, and there are a few cases of applied texts including them—copyists creating applied texts might accidentally copy titles or instructions from formularies, or fail to include personal names in applied texts. Formularies might have been re-used as amulets by being worn or carried by individuals who attributed them a power of their own.¹⁰⁷ As a result, it may be that some of the manuscripts in this volume—although they contain features associated with formularies—served primarily or secondarily as applied texts.

3.2.2. Manuscript Structures

Formularies contain one or more recipes, thus the simplest kind of manuscript is a single-text formulary, which contains the information (formula to be spoken and/or ritual procedure) for only one goal. Within the Coptic magical corpus, there are about 200 formularies, of which about half only contain one recipe. The remainder are multiple-text formularies containing two or more recipes.¹⁰⁸ Graeco-Egyptian formularies with multiple texts tend to represent collections of recipes from originally diverse sources, which circulated among and were collected by copyist-practitioners.¹⁰⁹ While some of the manuscripts in this collection represent similar collections (e.g., PCM I 4, 11 & 25), Coptic multi-text collections more often represent groups of closely related recipes. These are often of a type which may be referred to as “polypractical texts”, which contain a single spoken formula which can be used for multiple purposes depending on the ritual performed with them.¹¹⁰ The beginnings of this format can be found among the Graeco-Egyptian magical corpus, but there are many more examples in Coptic, and it seems to have been a common format, to the extent that we have evidence of formulae originally intended for one purpose being adapted to serve multiple purposes by the addition of multiple additional recipes at the end.¹¹¹

3.2.3. Genres

We distinguish three major genres or traditions within the larger category of ‘magical texts’—invocations, narrative charms, and scriptural amulets—the first two of which are well-represented in this collection.¹¹²

The first category, invocations, represents the most common and prototypical type of text found in the Coptic magical corpus. This is likely the kind of text that most ancient authors had in mind when discussing terms translated as magic, such as mageia or hik.¹¹³ These are centred on speech acts calling upon or commanding superhuman beings through direct addresses, which may make extensive use of features such as voces magicae and kharaktēres.

We should distinguish two further categories, which may be considered either sub-types of invocations, or related but separate genres. The first are what Jacques van der Vliet has described as “magical liturgies”, long and complex invocations which show clear influence from the liturgical tradition of rituals such as the anaphora, which transforms the liturgical bread and wine into the flesh and blood of Christ.¹¹⁴ The Coptic magical liturgies are likewise generally used to activate oil, wine and/or water to be used in healing, a process sometimes referred to as “sealing”.¹¹⁵ The surviving examples show clear interdependence upon one another, using recurrent phraseology and references, suggesting that they belong to a single, narrower tradition—they may derive from the Prayer of Mary ‘in Bartos’, which seems to be the earliest and most widely-diffused of the surviving examples.¹¹⁶

The second sub-type of invocation is the ‘first-person exorcistic prayer’.¹¹⁷ This is a type of text best preserved in mediaeval and early modern Greek manuscripts,¹¹⁸ although related texts also exist in other languages, such as Armenian, Arabic, Ge’ez, and Syriac.¹¹⁹ The only clear example in this volume is the Prayer of Gregory (PCMI 11 p. 1 l. 1–p. 14 l. 14), although the Prayer of Mary ‘in Bartos’ (PCMI 25 pp. 2–9) and the Love Spell of Cyprian (PCMI 28) could be considered related texts. First-person exorcistic prayers are intended to provide healing and protection from demons and hostile magic, and are attributed to saints who speak in the first-person, often explicitly mentioning their own names in the prayer. They contain an interesting divergence from other invocations in that they often address harmful forces—acts of violence, magic, or demons—and command and adjure them to depart, rather than adjuring superhuman beings (God or the angels) to cast out these harmful forces. For this reason, they may have been more acceptable to the church hierarchy, and are often found in manuscripts with liturgical prayers.¹²⁰ The Coptic manuscript containing the Prayer of Gregory contains several canonical and apocryphal texts (the Jesus-Abgar correspondence, the incipits of the Gospels and Psalm 90 (91), two lists of saint names) rather than more markedly magical texts of the invocation-type, and so may not have been considered as “magical” either by its users or by Church authorities at the time.

Invocations—particularly the magical liturgies and exorcistic prayers—offer some of the best evidence for the transmission of magical texts over long periods and across languages; several of the examples contained in this volume can be attested as having been transmitted for over a thousand years, and across many of the languages of Christianity; as well as Coptic, and Greek (the original language of many of them), we find close parallels in, for example, Armenian, Ge’ez, and

The next category is that of the ‘narrative charm’. Within folklore studies, the term “charm” refers to spoken formulae used in popular ritual practices—usually for healing—which often have a primarily oral mode of transmission, but which are frequently preserved in written copies. These texts may demonstrate very extensive transmission in time—over periods of millennia—and between languages.¹²² “Narrative charms” are a particular sub-group which, as their name suggests, are built around narratives, often called historiolae (‘little stories’).¹²³ These narratives serve as mythic precedents which both parallel the present problem, and offer a resolution of that problem.

The most common example in the Pharaonic tradition consists of the story of the infant god Horus being injured while he has been left alone, and his mother Isis rushing to help him in response to his cries.¹²⁴ These texts are used to heal injuries or illness, and so set up a parallel between events in the mythic past and the present. The resolution of the mythic past works to resolve the events of the present: just as Horus was healed, so should the patient be healed. Texts following this structure can be found in Egypt as early as the Middle Kingdom, but are relatively rare in the Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition.¹²⁵ In Coptic, by contrast, many examples survive. Most of them, like the older Pharaonic texts, centre on the adventures of the pre-Christian deities Horus and Isis, although several later examples instead involve Jesus as the primary protagonist.¹²⁶

¹²⁶ Standard Coptic examples of narrative charms, with the principal protagonists in brackets, include PCMI 6 (Horus-Isis); PCMI 7 (Horus-Isis); PCMI 15 (pupil(?)-Jesus); PCMI 16 (Horus-Isis); PCM I 20 (Horus-Isis); PCM I 29 front (Jesus-worm); P.Herm.Copt. 67 (KYP M57, NN-Jesus); BKU I 1 (KYP M76; doe-Jesus & Horus-Isis); Mich.Ms. 136 pp. 5–6 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128; Amun-Isis); Naqlun N. 78/93 (Kalchenko/van der Vliet 2022; NN-Jesus; parallel in P.Herm.Copt. 67, republished in Kalchenko/van der Vliet 2022; KYP M57); a possible fragmentary narrative charm involving the Archangel Michael is P.Herm.Copt. 59 (KYP M49), and examples of texts with similarities to the narrative charms, without strictly following their structure, include PCMI 4 pp. 4–6; PCMI 9; BM EA 10391 front ll. 12–27 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302); BKU I 7 (KYP M88).

A key event in all of the Coptic, and many of the European examples, is the meeting—the protagonist encounters another figure, which prompts the crisis in the narrative and then its resolution. In European examples, this second figure is often a harmful being who causes disease, and who is commanded to leave,¹²⁷ but in the Coptic examples the figure is usually either a beautiful woman whom Horus meets (in love spells), or else the encounter may be between an individual in need of healing and the healer. In German folklore studies, such texts are known specifically as Begegnungssegen (“encounter charms”).¹²⁸

Coptic narrative charms are often quite different from invocations—they do not typically contain voces magicae or kharaktēres, but at times show signs of interaction with them. They often end with one character speaking an invocation, and there are a few examples of narrative charms which include voces magicae.¹²⁹ Although narrative charms may be seen as a cross-cultural tradition, the Coptic examples may represent a rare case of the transmission of textual culture from pre-Coptic Egyptian to Coptic without a Greek intermediary.¹³⁰

The next genre of text often studied as magical is the ‘scriptural amulet’.¹³¹ These are typically small papyrus amulets onto which passages from the Bible, or related apocryphal literature (such as the Jesus-Abgar correspondence) has been copied; the most common texts are the incipits of the canonical gospels and of Psalm 90 (91). Distinguishing these amulets from texts intended for other purposes can be difficult, but features indicating use (such as folding or piercing to allow them to be worn or carried), or the presence of common amuletic texts, may serve as criteria.¹³² The earliest Christian examples of scriptural amulets appear in the papyrological record around the third century CE, but their use may derive from older Jewish practices of wearing passages of scripture as amulets, attested as early as the seventh or sixth century BCE.¹³³ The use of scriptural amulets shows a clear parallel to the kinds of ‘magical’ amulets attested in the Graeco-Egyptian magical corpus and among Coptic invocation-type texts; all of these practices involve wearing a powerful written text as a means of protection. But it seems that scriptural amulets were not generally considered to belong to the category of mageia by most Christians; bishops such as Augustine and John Chrysostom considered them an acceptable Christian alternative to the wearing of ‘magical’ amulets.¹³⁴ Scriptural amulets are almost without exception applied texts, and we only find a single example of a formulary containing incipits to be copied as amulets.¹³⁵ They do not usually demonstrate the typical features of other categories of magical texts, such as kharaktēres or voces magicae, suggesting that they were conceived of in different terms, although there are a few exceptional cases which do display kharaktēres, and which thus draw upon what we call here the ‘invocation’ tradition.¹³⁶

3.3. Materiality

We refer to the manuscripts in this collection generically as “papyri”, following the papyrological usage in which the term can be used to refer to any movable support for writing. In practical terms, this means that the manuscripts in this volume are written not only on papyrus, but also on parchment, paper, ostraca, and wooden tablets.

In terms of temporal distribution, papyrus was used in Egypt from at least the Old Kingdom (ca. XXVI BCE), and continued to be used until the early to mid tenth century CE,¹³⁷ although the details of its use changed. Sheets of papyrus are produced by laying strips of the fibres of the plant over one another at ninety degrees, so that one side of each sheet has horizontal fibres, and the other vertical fibres.¹³⁸ For most of Egyptian history, papyrus was usually written with the text running parallel to the horizontal fibres, but in the fifth century CE it became common (for some kinds of texts) to rotate the roll so that the fibres on the side prepared for writing were vertical, a format known as transversa charta. In all periods, though, copyists might choose to turn the papyrus over and continue writing on the less favoured side.¹³⁹

Parchment is a writing surface created by preparing the skin of domestic animals, the techniques for whose preparation developed in the second half of the first millennium BCE; examples from Egypt tend to appear around the third century CE.¹⁴⁰ Like papyrus, the process of creating parchment resulted in two distinct surfaces—the ‘hair’ side, generally darker, and showing signs of hair follicles, and the smoother, lighter ‘flesh’ side. Paper—more specifically, rag paper—was invented in China in the second century BCE, but did not arrive in Egypt until the ninth century, and did not come into widespread use until the tenth, when it replaced papyrus.¹⁴¹ Finally, the word ‘ostrakon’ in the context of Egyptian papyrology refers to two different objects—the first, pottery fragments, the second limestone flakes—both of which could be found lying on the ground in Egypt, and were often used as readily available writing supports.¹⁴²

In addition to the material they are made from, manuscripts can also be categorised based on their format.¹⁴³ Papyrus was produced in long rolls, typically 20–30 cm high and several metres wide; these rolls were produced by glueing together multiple smaller sheets, with the join between individual sheets being referred to as kollēsis (“glueing”).¹⁴⁴ These could be written from right to left or left to right (depending on the writing system) in multiple columns to produce the format of the horizontal book-roll (volumen or simply, roll).

The roll could also be cut into smaller widths to produce individual sheets, which could also be used to write shorter texts, such as letters. Individual sheets are in fact the most common format of magical formularies, and of almost all applied texts.¹⁴⁵ An important point to mention in the context of sheets is that of folding. The presence of folding in the case of Biblical texts is often used as a criterion for classification as an amulet, since papyri which were folded could then be pierced with a thread or placed in a holder in order to be worn as amulets.¹⁴⁶

¹³⁹ See Fournet 2009: 28–32; cf. Dosoo/Torallas Tovar 2022b: 101–107, and Sarri 2017: 91–95 for the use of this format in the Ptolemaic period.

Yet there are cases of manuscripts which are clearly formularies being extensively folded. While it is possible that these are formularies which were re-used as applied texts, there are so many that we suspect that folding was simply a way to make formularies written on sheets easier to store and transport; folding is thus not always an indicator of use as an amulet.¹⁴⁷

As we have noted, from the fifth century it became increasingly common in Egypt to rotate the papyrus roll 90° to write across the horizontal fibres (transversa charta). This produced a new format, the vertical book-roll, or rotulus.¹⁴⁸ Although horizontal rolls do not disappear, they become far less common after the fourth century CE.

The last major format to be discussed here is the codex, produced by folding and binding together sheets of papyrus, parchment, or, later paper, to produce a book with a spine and individual pages of the type we know today.¹⁴⁹ This format was likely developed by Romans around the first century BCE or CE and adopted gradually in Egypt, finally becoming the predominant format for long texts by the fourth century. The use of the codex is often linked to Christianity, but, although Christians do seem to have favoured the use of the codex over the book-roll, codices become more popular even for non-Christian texts over the course of the third to fourth centuries.¹⁵⁰ There are some interesting cases in this volume of codices without hard covers which seem to have been folded to make them smaller; again, this may indicate re-use as an applied text, but more likely, it served as way to make them smaller for transport and storage.¹⁵¹

As this brief overview suggests, materiality offers additional criteria for dating; the use of a codex suggests a post-fourth century date, transversa charta writing suggests a post-fifth century date, the use of papyrus suggests a pre-tenth century date, and the use of paper a date in the tenth century at the earliest.

A final question is that of inks.¹⁵² While we have not been able to obtain information on inks for all manuscripts, we are able to describe the probable composition of inks in the case of some of them, largely thanks to the work of Krisztina Hevesi on the papyrus collections of the Heidelberg University Library and Strasbourg National Library;¹⁵³ we also thank Tea Ghigo for her invaluable help in interpreting the evidence and accurately describing the results. For our purposes, inks can be classified as belonging to one of three types. The first, carbon ink, was produced by burning organic matter to produce a soot which would be mixed with gum arabic suspended in water; carbon ink was the most common, and oldest, type of ink in antiquity. The second type, iron-gall ink, was produced by mixing a source of iron (such as vitriol or iron filings) with tannins extracted from gall nuts. The earliest written evidence for this type of ink seems to be found in a recipe dating to the early fourth century CE, and it became established in the fifth century, at least for literary texts. The third type is plant ink, a heterogeneous range of inks made from tannins obtained by boiling vegetable matter, such as gall nuts or tree barks. In this work, we identify inks by examining manuscripts using light of different wavelengths, in most cases using a Dino Lite AD4113T-I2V digital microscope. We compare the appearance of ink in the range of visible light, near-infrared (~940nm), and ultraviolet (~395nm). We base our interpretations on the fact that carbon inks are equally visible under all three wavelengths, iron gall ink is visible, but lighter, under infrared, and plant inks are visible in ultraviolet light, but disappear in the infrared spectrum.¹⁵⁴ We may also note that carbon inks tend to be very black, whereas plant inks are generally brown; degraded iron gall ink also tends to be brown, but is typically darker than plant inks, except where the superficial pigment layer has flaked or been rubbed off.

3.4. Language

The Coptic language is divided into a number of varieties, usually referred to as ‘dialects’, which likely originally represented the standardised written forms of local varieties, but which sometimes spread beyond their original range;¹⁵⁵ this is likely true both of Sahidic, the most common and widespread dialect until the ninth century, and of Lycopolitan, which was used for Manichaean texts in areas in which non-Manichaeans seem to have used Sahidic.¹⁵⁶ Coptic magical texts, like documentary texts, are often highly divergent from the literary standards used to define dialects, and so only a few manuscripts in this volume can be clearly defined as belonging to a standard dialect.¹⁵⁷ These are Lycopolitan (L4 or L*, originally from the region of Lycopolis or Assiut), and Faiyumic (F4/5), the dialect associated with the region of the Faiyum.¹⁵⁸ Most of the manuscripts are written in a more or (usually) less standard form of Sahidic (S). In this volume, we usually describe such manuscripts as “Sahidic (non-standard)” and then provide a fuller description in the accompanying introduction, noting any features which may suggest a particular dialectal affiliation and hence geographical origin. We must note that the study of non-standard Sahidic is not deeply developed. We usually rely on the work of Paul Kahle (1954), who extensively described non-standard features and the geographical regions in which they are found. Despite the value of his work, however, his survey does not explicitly take into account statistical information on regional diversity, which often makes it seem as if nearly all non-standard features were equally common in most of Egypt. In a few cases, we define manuscripts simply as “Sahidic”; this is generally in the rare cases in which the surviving text does not show more divergence from the standard than would be expected in a contemporary literary text.

All of the manuscripts presented in this volume are primarily or exclusively Coptic in language. A few contain whole Greek phrases; in two cases, we do treat this as Greek text, printing it in Greek rather than in Coptic. In most instances, though, short passages of syntactic Greek seem to represent fixed phrases embedded within Coptic text, and so we print them in Coptic font, and give the Greek form in the apparatus at the foot of the page. The later manuscripts also contain the regular use of Arabic loanwords, particularly in the descriptions of ingredients.¹⁵⁹ In the larger corpus, there are a few cases of mixed Coptic-Arabic texts, but we do not have any examples in this volume.¹⁶⁰

3.5. Structure

3.5.1. The Structure of Magical Rituals

The basic structure of a ritual (at least, within the context of the invocation tradition) seems to have consisted of three essential acts—the recitation of a formula, the burning of an offering (usually resins and other aromatics), and the production of an applied object which manifested the power of the ritual in an ongoing manner.¹⁶¹ This process of activation may be described in a manner analogous to the liturgical epiclesis (“summoning”), the procedure in which the celebrant calls upon God to send his power (sometimes in the form of the Holy Spirit) upon the bread and wine—or, in the context of healing, exorcism, and baptism rituals, other liquids such as water and oil. In the same way, within the magical tradition, verbal formulae may call upon angels to descend and seal water or other liquids, or alight upon their images, thus creating applied objects.¹⁶² The form of applied object most apparent in the archaeological record is the applied text—copies of formulae, images, and kharaktēres written onto supports such as papyrus in the course of rituals, often worn as amulets or deposited to serve as curses or love spells. These written texts might be transformed into liquids by being washed, so that the liquid would take on the power previously inherent in the applied text.

The use of the applied object depends upon the goal of the ritual; for rituals of healing, protection, exorcism, or favour, applied texts are typically worn by the patient or displayed in the home, or liquids may be drunk by patients, or used to anoint or wash them. In curses or love spells, applied texts are usually deposited at particular sites (a path which the target may use, or a crossroads; at the target's door or in a grave) or cast into fires, while liquid may be poured at the victim's door. In divinatory procedures, the activated object may be the bowl of water or oil used in divination, or else an object (usually a piece of salt) placed by the head when the practitioner goes to sleep in order to provoke a divinatory dream.

In this volume, we usually distinguish between the practitioner (who carries out the ritual) and the beneficiary or client (for whom the ritual is carried out), and, in the case of curses and love spells, the target(s), the people whom the ritual aims to effect. The situation was likely more complex, however; individuals who owned formularies could carry out rituals for themselves, and literary evidence in Coptic and parallels from modern Ethiopia suggest that ritual experts may have at times explained to their clients what to do, so that (parts of) the actual ritual performance would be carried out by the beneficiaries themselves.¹⁶³

3.5.2. The Structure of Magical Texts

The basic structure of a Coptic magical formulary is highly practical, generally consisting of the following elements: title, formula, ritual instruction, and tableau. Titles are typically placed at the beginnings of texts, and specify the purpose of the ritual, often in highly abbreviated terms (such as ογμε “love” for a love spell), sometimes prefixed by the word “for” (ε- or ετβε). In a few texts we also find the use of section titles such as “the procedure” (πσινπζωβ) to label other parts of the recipe, in this case, the ritual instructions (for instance, for the production of an applied object), or “offering” (εγχα) to introduce lists of objects to be burned as offerings. The formula represents the text to be copied, and/or pronounced, and in many cases is the only information to be contained in Coptic formularies.

Ritual instructions are usually highly abbreviated in comparison to those found in the earlier Graeco-Egyptian tradition.¹⁶⁴ They often consist simply of subheadings followed by lists of ingredients, which therefore require some knowledge of the basic ritual processes to decipher. The final elements are the image constructions referred to here as tableaux. These consist both of figurative drawings (of human beings, angels, demons, and so on), kharaktēres, and associated text—usually combinations of all three. These images are intended to be copied as part of the process of creating applied texts, which may consist only of such tableaux.

3.5.3. Elements of Magical Texts

Magical texts belonging to the invocation tradition (and sometimes those from other traditions) contain a range of recurrent features worth briefly explaining here.¹⁶⁵

Spoken formulae are primarily structured around ‘speech acts’,¹⁶⁶ of which the most common are invocations, adjurations, and requests, representing different ways of addressing superhuman beings. Invocations are speech acts which call upon the addressed being to be present, and which may also request some specific action; they are translated in English as “I call upon you” or “I invoke you”.¹⁶⁷ Adjurations are stronger speech acts which likewise call upon the addressed being to carry out an action, but do so by binding them in a process comparable to an oath; they are translated in English as “I adjure you”.¹⁶⁸ Requests call upon the addressed being to carry out a specific act, but do so in a way which assumes less power, or demonstrates greater deference, on the part of the speaker than either invocations or adjurations; they are translated in English as by forms such as “I

¹⁶⁵ Compare the discussion of the structure of Jewish magical texts from the Cairo Genizah in Swartz 1990.

entreat you” or “I beseech you”.¹⁶⁹ These speech acts may be strengthened by the use of ‘authorities’, or horkōmotoi,¹⁷⁰ upon which the speaker calls during the speech act in the same way that modern legal witnesses might swear on the Bible: “I adjure you by your great name...” (PCM I 10 ll. 19–20).

Formulae may also include other recurrent phrases, such as “yea, yea, quickly, quickly!”, usually found at the end of texts or speech acts. The injunction that the requested act be carried out “quickly” is found already in Egyptian ritual texts of the Late Period, and continues into the Graeco-Egyptian magical tradition before being taken up by other textual traditions dependent on it.¹⁷¹ “Yea, yea” seems to have a similar effect; it translates the Coptic word (ϣ)ⲁ(ⲉ)ⲓⲟ (haeio) repeated twice, an interjection used to call for attention and insist upon what is being requested.¹⁷²

Formularies usually contain places in which the names of particular individuals—the beneficiary and/or target(s)—should be named; these are marked with a placeholder which we refer to here as the “generic name marker”, translated into English as NN, generally derived from the Latin nomen nescio (“I do not know the name”).¹⁷³ In Coptic, the most common way of writing the generic name marker is with the Greek δεινα (“so and so”), usually abbreviated to its first letter, delta (Δ), often given a supralinear stroke indicating abbreviation, and a tail representing the vowel iota (ι, thus Δ_ι); the sequence ει was not phonologically distinct from ι by the Roman period.¹⁷⁴ This is usually doubled to represent the Greek δεινα της δεινα—“NN (child) of (the woman) NN”. The tradition of identifying individuals in magic based on their mother’s names derives once again from older Egyptian ritual practice.¹⁷⁵ Although the abbreviation is Greek, it is likely that Coptic readers

¹⁶⁹ The most common structures for requests are ⲧⲥⲟⲛⲉ (“I entreat”) and ⲧⲣⲱⲃⲉ (“I beseech”). The common speech acts of the form ⲧⲥⲟⲛⲉ ⲁⲃⲱ ⲧⲡⲁⲣⲁⲕⲁⲗⲉⲓ (“I invoke and I entreat”) are modelled on the liturgical pattern ⲧⲡⲥⲟⲛⲉ ⲁⲃⲱ ⲧⲡⲡⲁⲣⲁⲕⲁⲗⲉⲓ, from the Greek δεόμεθα καὶ παρακαλοῦμεν (“we invoke and we entreat”); see Mihálykó 2019: 31. For the translation of παρακαλεῖ, cf. n. 167 above.

would have understood—and probably read it—as the Coptic equivalent $\text{NIM } \Pi/\tau\alpha\epsilon$ $\overline{\text{NIM}}$.¹⁷⁶ Similarly, the word “child of” is sometimes replaced in later texts by the sign $\overline{\Sigma}$, derived from a ligature of upsilon (υ) and iota (ι), an abbreviation of the Greek word $\nu\acute{\iota}\omicron\varsigma$ (“son”), but used both for men and women; it was likely also read as $\alpha\upsilon\epsilon$. Both abbreviations— $\overline{\Delta}$ and $\overline{\Sigma}$ —are found in non-magical texts: $\overline{\Delta}$ most often in liturgical texts,¹⁷⁷ in which it likewise indicates where the name of an individual is to be inserted in prayers, and $\overline{\Sigma}$ most often in documentary texts following the Arab conquest in which individuals are identified by their fathers’ names.¹⁷⁸

Related to the generic name marker are the words “usual” ($\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{\alpha}$) and “request” ($\alpha\pi\omicron\lambda\omicron\gamma\iota\alpha$). The former word is usually abbreviated ($\kappa\omicron\iota$), and has typically been misread in the past as $\kappa\omicron\chi$ (kokh). The two words would seem to be generally equivalent, and both have been typically translated in the past as “spell”.¹⁷⁹ The word $\kappa\omicron\iota\nu\acute{\alpha}$ is well-known from Graeco-Egyptian magic as an abbreviation for “(add the) usual”, and both seem to serve as paratextual notes to the reader to fill in missing information as required.¹⁸⁰ This seems usually to have referred to the specific name to replace NN, or the specific goals of the ritual, which may not be given elsewhere in the formula.

Ritual procedures may be marked by the title $\text{NIM } \overline{\Sigma}\omega\beta$ (“the procedure”). The term $\text{NIM } \overline{\Sigma}\omega\beta$ $\overline{\text{NT}}\alpha\lambda\lambda\alpha\gamma\tau$ (“the preparation of the pot”) may be used to refer more specifically to the preparation of liquids in a *pot in certain rituals.¹⁸¹ Within the procedures, the term $\theta\upsilon\sigma\iota\alpha$ (“(burnt) offering”, usually abbreviated to $\overline{\Theta}\Upsilon$) is used to introduce lists of objects to be burned. Tableaux are referred to as “images” ($\zeta\phi\delta\iota\omicron\nu$, often abbreviated), and may be referred to as such either in the formula or in the ritual instructions. Many texts end with the phrase “it is complete” ($\alpha\chi\chi\omega\kappa$ $\epsilon\omega\lambda$), to let the reader know that they possess the full recipe or formula.

The final elements we note here are voces magicae and kharaktēres, two characteristic features of magical texts in Coptic and other traditions dependent on Graeco-Egyptian magic. Since Betz’s translation of the Greek Magical Papyri, it has been common to print voces magicae in small caps, but they are not usually marked out in a comparable way in the manuscripts themselves. It is similarly difficult to decide what should be treated as a vox magica and what as simply a divine name, so we do not mark voces magicae differently from other text in this volume. We do attempt to break them up following the procedure of the copyist and normally add commas between them. As far as we can tell, voces magicae were usually understood as the secret names of superhuman beings, such as the Jewish-Christian god, although at times they are clearly understood as syntactic phrases in a special language—often divine, but at other times a sacred human language, such as Hebrew, or that of animals.¹⁸² Voces magicae are generally understood to be phrases whose perceived power derived from their lack of comprehensibility, even if some of the words, or at least their elements, were ultimately derived from real words in real languages. Equally, they often show poetic qualities such as the repetition of sounds (such as hrix hrax in PCM I 16 ostracon 1 ll. 1–5), and sometimes form palindromes (such as Ablanathanalba, known in both Greek and Coptic magic), showing that they may have been valued for their aural and visual qualities. Editors of magical texts often spend considerable time gathering comparanda for voces magicae in an attempt to interpret them. We generally do not do this here, both because the meanings of most voces magicae are very uncertain, and because we believe that compiling such parallels is best carried out in the context of a dedicated project. Related to voces magicae are vowel sequences (repetitions of the seven Greek vowels) and tekhnopaignia, or text formations—these latter are shapes, such as squares and triangles, formed from names or letters, found in Greek magical texts, and in some of the traditions dependent on them, including those in Coptic, albeit not in the texts of this volume.¹⁸³

Lastly, kharaktēres are magical signs which seem to represent a written form of the divine language, whose spoken form would likely be voces magicae.¹⁸⁴ While these may take many forms, in Coptic magic they are typically based on simple shapes: the letters of the Greek (and more rarely, Coptic) alphabet as well as geometric shapes such as crosses, circles, and squares. These are usually decorated with circles at their corners and terminal points, leading to them being known by names such as signes pommetés (“signs with ‘little apples’”)¹⁸⁵ or Brillenbuchstaben (“spectacle letters”). In this volume, we reproduce kharaktēres as tracings, and in the translations of the texts we generally provide the basic shapes upon which they are based in brackets. Coptic texts are somewhat different from the earlier Graeco-Egyptian magical texts in their use of kharaktēres. In Coptic manuscripts we sometimes find them simply used as Coptic letters to write words (often, but not always, divine names), the addition of circles simply serving to stylise or in some sense ‘empower’ the text.¹⁸⁶

3.5.4. Paratextual Signs

The structure of Coptic magical texts is apparent both in the specialist vocabulary used to designate particular textual or ritual components of the practices and in the range of paratextual signs used in the texts.

Many of the manuscripts begin with an initial cross (+) or staurogram (⌞). This was a frequent practice in texts produced in Christian contexts from the fourth century CE onwards, although, by the fifth century, it was not necessarily a clear sign of strong personal faith.¹⁸⁷ From the eighth century, this sign may be replaced by two strokes (/); this seems to have been a practice which emerged among scribes writing in Greek and Coptic for the Umayyad administration, and so may have represented a way to avoid writing the cross out of sensitivity to the new Muslim ruling class.¹⁸⁸ Such slashes are found in one manuscript in this volume (PCMI 17), and offer an additional dating criterion.

At a higher level, texts may be divided by horizontal strokes, which may be simple, or decorated. Decorated dividers may consist of two parallel strokes and/or be broken with dots, among other strategies for decoration. The diple is a wedge shape (>), usually drawn in the left margin, and marking breaks in textual units.

Coptic script is generally written continuously (scriptio continua), although scribes may (inconsistently) leave small spaces between words or word groups. Individual copyists may also use various signs—such as the mid dot (·), colon (:), tricolon (;), or two oblique strokes (z)—to mark breaks between words and word groups. These may sometimes break up units that we consider to be single groups.

Coptic also makes extensive use of supralineation, the practice of writing supralinear strokes above certain letters. In standard Sahidic Coptic, these are usually used above abbreviations, as well as consonants which were either pronounced with a preceding short vowel (schwa) or were autosyllabic, i.e., the syllable to which they belonged may not have had any true vowel sound.¹⁸⁹ Supralinear strokes are used in this way (albeit inconsistently, as in other genres) in Coptic magical texts, but they are also used to mark the names of superhuman beings, and in particular, voces magicae. This practice continues that found in some Graeco-Egyptian magical texts, although it seems to ultimately derive from a non-magical context, in which Greek-literate scribes marked non-Greek words with a supralinear stroke in order to clearly mark where they began and ended to aid in reading.¹⁹⁰ In this volume, we do not generally attempt to reproduce supralinear strokes exactly; if a stroke is partially above a letter, we mark it as being above that letter, rather than rendering a smaller stroke between two letters. Likewise, we do not generally indicate in transliteration if a supralinear stroke was rounded or flat, although in cases in which they are closer to sign known as the djinkim (Ɀ, used in the Bohairic dialect), we do reproduce this form schematically. We encourage readers to consult photographs of the original manuscripts—either in the plates, or at the links provided in the introductions to each entry—if the exact form of paratextual markers is of interest to them.

4. The Presentation of Texts in this Volume

4.1. Principles of Edition

The goal of this volume is to present Coptic magical texts in a way which enables readers—professional scholars but also students and interested laypeople—to access them as directly as possible. We provide basic notes to aid in the interpretation of these texts and to explain our decisions as translators, signalling uncertainties as clearly as possible using question marks. These uncertainties—of the meaning or interpretation of words, phrases and practices—should not be taken as admissions of defeat, but rather as signposts marking the extensive work that remains to be done on these understudied texts.

We have sought to follow modern papyrological norms, specifically those proposed by the Association of Papyrology in 2022,¹⁹¹ but with some important deviations from these based on the particular features of magical texts. First, we understand the mise en page (layout) of magical texts to be significant:¹⁹² the decision of copyists of where to place different text sections in relation to one another or to images, and the way in which they subsequently correct or add text provides us with important information as to their conceptions of the work, and the way in which they used and interacted with it. This means that, generally, each manuscript page or sheet side is reproduced on one printed page, schematically reproducing the original document as clearly as possible. Where there are two or more manuscript pages to a printed page, these are clearly signalled, and separated by a horizontal line which goes across the full width of the printed column (as opposed to shorter lines reproducing dividing lines in the original manuscripts). Translations of these texts are reproduced on facing pages. With the exception of common abbreviations, we avoid Latin in the apparatus, instead using English to make the volume accessible to the largest number of readers.

In the past, the contexts of manuscripts have often been neglected; although, as explained above (3.1.1) we usually have no precise information on the circumstances of discovery of manuscripts, we have attempted to reconstruct these as accurately as possible from surviving records, and we have likewise attempted to date the manuscripts as precisely as possible based on the analysis of palaeography and other features. These processes are rarely conclusive, but we think that they are worth carrying out in order to ground texts in place and time. For this reason, we are occasionally quite daring in our proposals, but, as in other cases, we signal our uncertainty with the use of question marks; again, these question marks should be taken seriously, and readers should be sure to consult the rationales provided in the introductions to decide for themselves how plausible they find our suggestions. For reasons of space, only images of manuscripts which have not been published in the past, or which are not readily available online, are published in this volume.

4.2. Layout, Notes and Apparatus

Each manuscript begins with its number in this publication, followed by a modern title briefly describing its form and/or content. This is followed by basic information in the form of bullet points, and then an introduction. The following pages provide the text, accompanied by an apparatus below the text, with facing translation, below which are notes.

4.2.1. Basic information and Introduction

Each manuscript begins with a section of basic information, which first gives the provenance, dimensions (height, width, and where relevant, depth, in centimetres (cm)) and then proposed date. Edited volumes are referenced according to the standard Checklist of Editions of Greek, Latin, Demotic, and Coptic Papyri, Ostraca, and Tablets,¹⁹³ with the sigla italicised. We indicate the URL of the official online photo of the manuscript, the plate number for this volume, or in another printed publication. If the image is no longer accessible at the online address given, we advise readers to consult the Kyprianos or Trismegistos databases, where a more up-to-date link may be available. The linguistic description briefly discusses the dialect (or language, if the text contains more than simply Coptic text). The contents provide a list of the texts contained in the manuscript, numbered in order of writing, along with the Kyprianos text number associated with each entry.

¹⁹³ For the checklist, see <https://papyri.info/docs/checklist>

The basic information is followed by a discursive introduction, which provides further information on questions of materiality, including manuscript format, kollēsis, folding (described in terms of the number of visible creases), inks, and so on. This also includes information on provenance and acquisition, and then a description of the hand and a discussion of dating. In general, we do not discuss the contents of the manuscripts here, but rather in the notes accompanying the translation, although we make an exception in a few cases, notably those in which the manuscript contains texts with a complex history which cannot be adequately discussed in the notes printed below the translation.

4.2.2. Text and Apparatus

The text field contains the original language form of the text, with minimal interventions. At the top of each page or column, the fibre direction (↓/→) is noted for papyrus, and the same signs are used on ostraca to indicate the direction of wheel marks. Side (hair/flesh) is noted for parchment, as well as curvature (concave/convex) for ostraca, where we have access to this information.

Coptic words are generally divided following the scheme of Walter Till.¹⁹⁴ In Greek text, accents and breathings are added, but the transliteration contains only punctuation present in the original manuscript. We attempt to represent any text added above or below the line of text in a schematic manner which allows its relative position to the line to be appreciated without compromising legibility. Eisthesis and ekthesis (indentation and extension into the margin), as well as notably enlarged letters, may also be represented visually, with the format being described in the apparatus. Abbreviations are resolved in the apparatus, and any non-Coptic (Greek or Arabic) words are also noted in their original language form. For Greek verbs, we give the present infinitive form, which usually seems to have been that borrowed into Coptic, although in the case of a few verbs, we should probably understand them as imperatives.¹⁹⁵

Variant readings by previous editors are indicated in the apparatus according to line number, but only when these diverge from our own readings or interpretations. The previous editors' readings are indicated by providing their reading followed by their surname, at times abbreviated for space. The editors can be identified by consulting the list of editions and translations at the beginning of the introduction, where any abbreviations are also introduced. Alternative translations may also be noted, where they diverge significantly from those we offer, by giving the translation in inverted commas, followed by the translator's name. Coptic words which appear in a form not found in Crum's Coptic Dictionary (1939) are given in their standard Sahidic form in the apparatus,¹⁹⁶ prefixed by a superscript ^s,¹⁹⁷ and broken into morphemes by dashes (the sign $\neq$ precedes suffix pronouns). The apparatus also notes corrections and deletions made by the copyists, including a brief description of how the deletion or correction has been made. A full list of critical signs is available on p. xv.

¹⁹⁵ This is the case for γράφε and βοήθει, which appear as imperatives at the equivalent points in Greek magical texts. For γράφε, see e.g., GEMF 15/PGM XII (KYP M160) l. 127 (78); GEMF 30/PGM II (KYP M152) l. 77 (30). For βοήθει, see PGM VI b (KYP M424) l. 3; cf. PGM XIII/GEMF 60 (KYP M161) l. 289; PGM LXXXIX/SM 13 (KYP M813) l. 5. On the general borrowing of infinitive forms of verbs, see Grossmann/Richter 2017: 221–223.

4.2.3. Translation, Notes, and Glossary

Translations are largely continuous, although we indicate line breaks in the translation to aid in the comprehension of text structure. Paragraph breaks are used to indicate separate texts or text sections (such as the passage from formula to ritual instructions). We generally indicate line breaks in the original text at every five lines of the translation by a vertical stroke followed by the line number (|⁵) but further line breaks are sometimes indicated where these aid in understanding the structure of the text. Words broken across lines, or which survive only partially, are not broken up either across line divisions or by square brackets in order to maximise legibility and searchability. Words broken across lines are assigned to the line which contains most of their letters, and if both lines have an equal number of letters, they are usually assigned to the first of the lines on which they appear. Words whose translation is uncertain, either because of damage, or for other reasons, are marked with a superscript question mark. Words marked by an asterisk appear in the glossary at the end of the volume (pp. 471–488).

For deities and culturally significant figures who are well known, we use the standard English (or at times Latin) equivalent, thus 'Jesus' (ⲓⲥⲟⲩⲥ), 'Isis' (ⲏⲥⲉ), and 'John' (ⲓⲱⲗⲁⲛⲛⲏⲥ, in the case of the Apostle or Evangelist). For historical people who were not famous, and superhuman beings whose names do not have a standard English form, we use a standard transliteration scheme, based on but modified from the Leipzig-Jerusalem transliteration system (fig. 2).¹⁹⁸ Thus, for example, the copyist responsible for PCM I 21–26, who has the same name as the Apostle John, is called in this work the Deacon Iōhannēs (ⲓⲱⲗⲁⲛⲛⲏⲥ).

¹⁹⁷ Comparable signs are used when, more rarely, we compare forms in other dialects, such as Bohairic (^B) and Faiyumic (^F).

4.3. Palaeographical Descriptions

In our palaeographical descriptions, we try to make use of a regular vocabulary in order to standardise these as much as possible, despite the uniqueness of every hand.²⁰¹

¹⁹⁹ The names of the Coptic letters here are those used by modern Coptacists, corresponding to the Greek names in the cases where the alphabets overlap; for the Coptic names, see the initial entries for each letter in Crum CD; Peust 1999: 58–60.

²⁰¹ For discussions of Coptic palaeography, and the terminology used here, see Boud'hors 1997;

The term majuscule (generally equivalent to uncial) refers to the ‘capital’ forms of letters in which each has, in principle, the same height; these letterforms may also be referred to as bilinear, that is, they can be understood as being written between two lines, an upper line marking the height of all or nearly all letters, and a lower line, marking the lowest point of all letters. The term minuscule refers to letterforms similar to those of modern Greek lowercase letters. These may also be referred to as quadrilinear, since the letters can be understood as being written between four lines, with their bodies generally resting between two central lines, and the ascendant or descendant parts of certain letters reaching higher or lower boundary lines. The concept of modus refers to letter width; early majuscules tend to give all letters (with a few exceptions, such as i) equal width, and are thus referred to as unimodular. By contrast, later bimodular hands, used from the sixth century or so, vary the width of letters, with e, o, and c usually being markedly narrower than other letters.

A further point of description is slope; hands may be described as upright, or slanting or inclined to one side. Cursivity describes the degree to which hands make use of ligatures—if letters regularly join together, they may be described as cursive, or as making use of ligatures. Hands may furthermore be described more vaguely in terms of regularity, formality, and training. Regular hands consistently produce letters with the same shapes, sizes, and spacing. Formal hands are by definition regular, but also seem to consciously reproduce particular canonical styles, often associated with high-prestige texts, and aim for a high degree of legibility.²⁰² Informal or irregular hands tend to be more idiosyncratic, with more variation in letterform, sizing, spacing, and so on. While trained scribes might deliberately produce informal texts, some informal hands may be described as ‘untrained’, as ‘literates with specific competences’, or as ‘functional semi-literates’.²⁰³ In these cases we sometimes make use of Raffaella Criobiore’s categories of learner hands, in particular the alphabetic and evolving hands.²⁰⁴ Alphabetic hands describe writers who know the alphabet and the letterforms, but can only write individual letters slowly and with some difficulty, while evolving hands seem to write with more frequency, but are not able to write with absolute regularity or in a canonical style. Shading refers to the thickness of the

We also thank Yasmine Amory for her helpful advice on this section, and for her many invaluable comments on our palaeographical descriptions.

²⁰² Here we follow the definitions of formality and informality offered in Crisci/Degni 2011: 25–6. We thank Yasmine Amory for this reference.

²⁰³ For this term, see Petrucci 2002: 20–21; Amory forthcoming.

strokes which make up the letters, and whether there is variation in line thickness. Flourishes and serifs are terms which refer to decorative extensions or ticks which may be used at the ends of strokes.

In general, the hands contained in this collection are usually either highly informal, or represent the right-sloping majuscule common in Kleinliteratur (“minor literature”)—technical texts such as medical, magical, and alchemical works—as well as in the colophons of literary texts.²⁰⁵ Occasionally, we see examples of cursive documentary-type hands which evolve from the sixth century onwards. There are relatively few letterforms which we consider absolutely diagnostic of a date; one exception to this is the so-called “flat mu”, which almost resembles an inverted π (Π); this form seems to appear only in the tenth century.²⁰⁶

Where more than one hand writes a single manuscript, we mark changes of hand by adding m(anus) + number in the left margin of the Coptic text. Where individual copyists use markedly different styles for different sections, we likewise mark s(tyle) + number in the left margin.²⁰⁷

5. The Contents of Papyri Copticae Magicae I

In choosing texts for this volume, it has been necessary to be selective, but we have been unable to use entirely objective criteria. The corpus as a whole is not yet well enough studied to propose a purely chronological arrangement, as is done for the Greek and Egyptian Magical Formularies; the work of dating the manuscripts is best carried out alongside their publication. We also see the Coptic magical papyri as an open corpus, which will grow as more texts are discovered or published. As a result, a strictly chronological arrangement would become incoherent over time. Instead, we divide the corpus first by basic type—formularies and applied texts (see 3.2)—then divide the latter category into texts which are ‘aggressive’ (broadly, curses and love spells) and ‘amuletic’ (healing, exorcistic, protective, and for gaining favour). This first volume contains formularies.

For this volume of formularies, we aim to provide a selection which gives readers a good idea of the general nature of the corpus, mixing long texts whose histories can be traced for centuries across multiple languages (e.g., PCM I 11 & 25) with shorter and more idiosyncratic examples (e.g., PCM I 2 & 35). We have deliberately picked some which we judge to be particularly important—PCM I 1, for example, is the earliest well-dated magical text in a standard Coptic dialect, and its archaeological context provides a rich idea of Sitz im Leben (“lived context”) not possible for the other manuscripts.

We have also selected many texts which benefitted significantly from re-edition, including several from the University of Heidelberg papyrus collection (PCM I 21–33, 35), all of which date to the tenth or eleventh centuries CE. Nine of these (PCM I 21–29) provide us with an example of an archive containing magical texts, and even those which do not belong to this archive show striking similarities of format, content, and language. This is also true of three other manuscripts from other modern collections dating to the tenth and eleventh centuries (PCM I 34, 36, 37). Presenting these texts together has allowed us to bring out these shared features. We nonetheless exclude texts, including those from Heidelberg, with significant Arabic-language content, reserved for a future volume.

The Heidelberg group also includes some of the longest surviving texts, several belonging to the category of the ‘magical liturgies’; for this reason we include other extensive exemplars, including the Leiden Anastasy Codex (PCM I 11) and Rossi’s ‘Gnostic’ Tractate (PCM I 12), which offer both notable similarities and contrasts with the Heidelberg material. The inclusion of Rossi’s famous ‘tractate’ suggested to us the inclusion of its largely forgotten sibling, the much more fragmentary second ‘tractate’, perhaps found with it (PCM I 13).

We also include in this volume most of the ‘narrative charms’ (PCM I 6, 7, 15, 16, 20, 29), and the related texts featuring Pharaonic deities (PCM I 4, 8, 9); these have attracted considerable attention in past research, and so we hope that presenting new editions of them will prove useful to their ongoing study.²⁰⁸

The remaining manuscripts contain the briefer and more idiosyncratic texts which constitute the majority of the corpus. PCM 2, 3 & 10 demonstrate the important place accorded to female reproductive health in magical texts: respectively, a procedure for healing uterine bleeding, a curse to cause it, and a prayer to allow a woman to become pregnant.²⁰⁹ In the other texts of this volume we see a still wider range of purposes: PCM I 5 represents a typical example of a short healing recipe, which may be found both alone in individual sheets and as part of larger collections (cf. PCM I 33 & 36); PCM I 14, perhaps a love spell, demonstrates the use of figural images reminiscent of those on later and more complex formularies. PCM I 17 & 19 have more idiosyncratic goals—acquiring a good singing voice and maintaining the virginity of a woman. Finally, PCM I 18 contains a curse whose vivid description of the sickness it aims to bring about is accompanied by a brief but evocative account of the workings of the celestial hierarchy reminiscent of those found in a more extensive form in the ‘magical liturgies’.

²⁰⁸ Excluded manuscripts which could be counted among these include BKU I 1 (KYP M76), to be published with the other manuscripts of its archive (KYP A14); and four recently (re-) published manuscripts: Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128); Saqqara F.17.10 (SA.03/141) (van der Vliet 2018a; Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M716); Naqlun N. 78/93 (KYP M1135) and P.Herm.Copt. 67 (KYP M57) (both Kalchenko/van der Vliet 2022).

3. Back ll. 9–10: Address formula (KYP T1505)

A complete papyrus sheet with some damage along the folds. The text is a formulary copied as part of a letter from a man named Oualēs to another named Psais, found in room 6 of House 3 of Area A during the Dakhleh Oasis Project excavation of Kellis, with various fragments being found in the years between 1977 and 1992.¹ The letter begins with instructions for a separation spell taking up 22 lines on the front (→), followed by the contents of the letter—a resumé of the request which led to the sending of the letter, an apology for not finding the text requested, and a counter request that the addressee copy and send other texts in return. This letter takes up the remaining 20 lines of the front, and then 8 lines on the back, written at 90° counterclockwise to the text of the front. Finally, the address is written in Greek on the back in 2 lines on the opposite corner from the end of the letter, with the point where the seal would be attached (locus sigilli) indicated by a cross, broken where the string tying the letter closed would have been. 5 horizontal and 3 vertical creases are apparent (from the perspective of the front), indicating that it was folded before being sent. The tall, narrow format is typical of Greek and Coptic letters dating to before the fifth century, including examples from Kellis.²

At several points, the scribe has left blank spaces (vacats) between words or lines, presumably to avoid imperfections in the papyrus' writing surface.³

The site of Kellis, modern Ismant al-Kharab, is in the Dakhla Oasis, 350 kilometres west of the Nile Valley. Area A House 3 is a particularly rich site, containing over 200 texts written in Coptic, Greek, and to a lesser extent, Syriac, testifying to the lives of one or more extended families who seem to have been Manichaean Hearers.⁴ Alongside various epistolary, business, and administrative documents, the preserved manuscripts contain a number of ritual texts, including hymns, a prayer for the unction of the sick known from other Christian liturgical sources, a Greek magical formulary containing healing prescriptions, and three amulets against disease.⁵ The texts document a period from the end of the third century into the 390s, at which point the house, along with the rest of the village, was abandoned, perhaps due to the encroachment of the desert. The inhabitants of the house at this period were involved in various businesses, primarily weaving, trading cloth and finished clothing as far as the Nile Valley, but also the maintenance of fruit trees (olive and perhaps jujube), some of which were leased out.⁶ The house appears to have been stripped of valuable items when it was abandoned, so that the remaining texts are apparently those left behind in storage jars on the roof, which subsequently collapsed and fell into the ground-floor rooms.⁷

The writer of the letter, Oualēs (the Greek writing of the Latin Valens) lived outside Kellis, and is responsible for one other letter to the inhabitants of House 3 (P.Kell. V Copt. 36); it has been suggested that he was a member of the Manichaean monastic and clerical group known as the Elect, but this remains uncertain.⁸ Psais (the Greek form of the Egyptian Pšai) was one of the younger members of the household of House 3, known from several other texts in the archive, and identified by Klaas Worp as Psais III, since this name was a recurrent one within the family.⁹

The hand of Oualēs is an accomplished, largely bilinear majuscule, inclined to the right and rather cursive; α, ε, and τ are regularly ligatured to the following letter. Bilinearity is broken by β, ρ, χ, q, and †, which descend below the lower line, cf. P.Kell. V Copt. 20, 25, 26, 31, 36, 39, 43, 50.

⁵ Prayer for the unction of the sick: P.Kell. I Gr. 88 (KYP M1105); Greek formulary: .Kell. I 85 (KYP M185); published Greek amulets: P.Kell. I 86 (KYP M2114) & P.Kell. I 87 (KYP M184). ⁸ For this proposal see Gardner et al. 1999: 34–35, Mirecki et al. 1997: 5–6; Teigen 2021: 248–249; cf. Brand 2022: 280–281.

and ʒ which ascends above it. Most of the Demotic-derived letters (ϣ, ϥ, ϧ, Ϩ), are compact, respecting the overall bilinearity. There are marked flourishes on many letters at the ends of the lines. The oblique stroke of ϧ is short and considerably raised; the bulb often gives the impression of hanging from it. Ϩ is formed in two strokes: the rounded vertical followed by the horizontal. ϩ generally takes its majuscule form, more rarely being written in a single stroke, in which it resembles a mirrored ϩ (e.g., front l. 33). ϩ is rounded, as is the suprelinear stroke. ϫ is written in a single stroke, without a distinct horizontal bar. ϣ is in the form of a Latin V, also written in a single stroke. Letters are generally undecorated, although there are occasionally slight serifs, as on the vertical stroke of ϫ. As noted by Gardner and Choat, the degree of cursivity in this manuscript, and others from Kellis, is unusual in a Coptic text of the fourth century, as is the fact that Greek and Coptic text are not visually distinguished.¹⁰ Similar hands are nonetheless common in the papyri from Kellis; see for example P.Kell. VII Copt. 78 and P.Kell. I Gr. 44, both by Pekusis (Pecoš), apparently the brother of Psais, as well as P.Kell. Copt. V 15, 17 & 22.¹¹ Similar features (albeit with less cursivity and greater formality) may also be seen in some of the literary manuscripts, such as P.Kell. II Copt. 53.

The circumstances behind the letter have been discussed numerous times. Briefly, Psais seems to have requested a specific separation procedure from Oualēs; Oualēs was unable to find it, but instead copied another he had access to in the present letter, noting that he would send the originally requested text if he found it. He specifies that the text should not be shown to a “Brother Kalliklēs”—perhaps suggesting the necessity of secrecy in the transmission of this text¹²—and asks, in return, that Psais copy for him some quaternions (cf. the note to front l. 37). The larger context of the letter allows it to be dated with some precision to the second half of the fourth century, when Psais III was active, between the years 351 and 390 CE; this is thus one of the earliest magical texts to be written in one of the standard Coptic dialects, as opposed to one of the forms of Old Coptic.

The magical text consists primarily of an invocation to the Jewish-Christian god. The ritual, alluded to in the invocation, and briefly described in the instructions which follow, seems to have consisted of burning mustard, which was mixed with Arabian natron, over which the formula was spoken before being deposited at the door of the house of the intended victims of the separation spell. Similar rituals are known from later Greek and Coptic-language sources.¹³

^{|Greek} “I invoke you who have existed from the beginning, who sit over *cherubim and *seraphim, ^{|Coptic} who stand over the conflicts and the strifes, who shut up ^{|5} the winds through your great *authority; just as you made the land of Egypt lord and you cast strifes upon the Chaldaeans. It is you (pl.) upon whom I pronounce these *names, O ... that give birth[?], that are black, may NN son ^{|10} of NN, may their heart become black with one another! O natron in the likeness[?] of Arabia, just as you will wash away all things, may you wash <away> their desire that they have for one another! And you, O scorching of the mustard, ^{|15} may you put scorching and burning in their hearts towards one another! The house in which I shall place you, do not leave it before you have awoken a conflict and a strife and a thunderbolt with NN, ^{|20} daughter of NN, she <and> NN, son of NN!”

You should pronounce these words over them. It is finished.

1. τὸν ἐπὶ ἀρχῆς : “you who have existed from the beginning” Mirecki et al. 1997 translate “the one who rules” (cf. LSJ s.v. ἐπί sense I.2; s.v. ἀρχή sense II); Gardner et al. 1999 translate “who has been from the beginning” (likewise van der Vliet 2019b); Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022: 277 translate “the one who presides over rule”, comparing the aulic titles of officials of the Hellenistic monarchies which designate them as “the one responsible for” (ὁ ἐπὶ) various domains (Zellmann-Rohrer 2018b: 110; Zellmann-Rohrer 2020: 74); cf. e.g., Shepherd of Hermas 23.4–5 (II CE), in which the angel Thegri is “set over the beasts” (ἐπὶ τῶν θηρίων); GEMF 16/PDM (KYP M162) ll. 497–8: “the one who sits upon the mountain of Gabaon” (p3 nt hms=k hr p3 tw n G3b3.ʿ3.n). The question hinges on the ambiguity of ἐπί (“upon” and various metaphorical extensions) and ἀρχή (“beginning” or “sovereignty”). Here we follow the translation of Gardner et al. 1999, apparently the usual sense in the Septuagint (Ezekiel 16.25, 21.24; Lamentations 2.19, 4.1; cf. Epiphanius, Panarion 31.5.2 in Holl 1915: 390.10).

4–5. πεταρω[η] ἡντιου : “who shut up the winds” Mirecki et al. 1997 compare Jesus’ miracle of Calming the Storm (Matthew 8.26; Mark 4.39; Luke 8.24). Cf. the references to the Jewish deity keeping the winds in storehouses in Psalm 134 (135) 7; Jeremiah 10.13, 51.16, perhaps more apposite here given the references elsewhere to the Hebrew Bible rather than the New Testament.

6. [ε]τακρ̄ πκαε̄ ἡκνε̄ η̄χαίε : “you made the land of Egypt lord” Mirecki et al. 1997 compare the image of Egypt as the liberator of Israel from Chaldaea in Jeremiah 41 (37) 1–21; perhaps also consider the enslavement Israel by Egypt described in the book of Exodus (we thank Michael Zellmann-Rohrer for this suggestion).

6–7. ακνογ[χε] ἡντ̄των̄ ᾱχ̄ ἡχαλλαιος : “you cast strifes upon the Chaldaeans” Cf. the prophecy of the destruction of Chaldaea in Jeremiah 27 (50) 1–46. Mirecki et al. 1997 compare Jeremiah 44 (37) 5.

9–10. μαρενῑ πωρε̄ ρε̄ η̄νῑ : “may NN son of NN” As noted in Mirecki et al. 1997 and Gardner et al. 1999, something has almost certainly dropped out here, since we would expect two names; perhaps restore “NN, son <of NN, and NN, daughter> of NN” (η̄νῑ πωρε̄ ἡνῑ ἡ̄νῑ τωρε̄ ρε̄ ἡ̄νῑ); Oualēs probably inadvertently skipped a line while copying.

19–20. ἡ̄ν̄ Δ̄ ἡ̄ν̄ Δ̄ ἡ̄τ̄ας̄ Δ̄ δ̄ν̄ Δ̄ : “NN daughter of NN, she <and> NN, son of NN” Mirecki et al. 1997 and Gardiner et al. 1999 understand the Δ̄ sign, standing for “NN”, as the Greek numeral δ̄ (“4”), interpreting this as a series of commands to speak the name of the male victim, then the female victim, the full text, and then another sequence of words four times each over the ingredients.

I greet you warmly, I pray for your wellbeing for a long time, ²⁵ until I embrace you again in the body, and my joy is completed. I swear to you by our Lord Paraclete and the Knowledge of the Truth that this is what I found close to me, and I hurried, I wrote it, and I sent it ³⁰ to you, because the other one is written on a small piece of papyrus, and I did not find it. If I find it, I will send it to you, for I know for my part that it will not be taken to Brother Kalliklēs. I send it to you for it is with my own hand that I wrote it, ³⁵ and I wrote it saying, “Perhaps it is what you need”.

I ask you, lord brother, that you write these quaternions for me that I sent to you. I will also have them bring what is written to you so that you will know ⁴⁰ where they have reached <and> to see <that> he has not been neglectful in writing them, and quickly send them to me through a blessed one ^{back} for they said, “We want someone else to write others!” Now, do not be neglectful to send them in haste. Please do not make it a long text, for they have said that the papyrus is finished, but rather a useful text, and if you write them, I will find your recompense myself—I am not an idiot!

Greet for me ⁵ warmly those who give your heart rest by word and deed. Anything you need, tell me and I will do it happily. Live and be well for a long time, my lord, my brother.

⁹, at 180° to the other text on the back To my lord brother, Psais, from Oualēs, your brother.

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph.

23–24. ⲥⲱⲗⲏⲗ ⲉⲁ ⲡⲓⲱⲭⲉⲓⲧⲉ : “I pray for your wellbeing” Compare the similar phrase in P.Kell. VII Copt. 97.5–8: “I pray to the Father, the God of Truth for your wellbeing” (ⲥⲱⲗⲏⲗ ⲁⲡⲓⲱⲧ ⲡⲓⲱⲭⲉⲓⲧⲉ ⲡⲓⲧⲏⲛⲉ ⲉⲁ ⲡⲉⲧⲡⲓⲱⲭⲉⲓⲧⲉ; 19.68–69; 50.2–3; VII Copt. 72.4–5). This is likely a calque of the common Greek phrase “I pray for your health for many years” (ἐπρωσθαί σε εὖχμαι πολλοῖς χρόνοις; cf. Sarri 2017: 48–49), usually used as a farewell greeting, and found in several letters from Kellis, including P.Kell. V Copt. 12.17–18; 21.30–31; 22.51–52; VII Copt. 72 ll. 7–8; 103 ll. 50–51.

27. ⲡⲁⲣⲁⲕⲗⲏⲧⲟⲥ : “Paraclete” “The Intercessor”, a title of Mani, the prophet of Manichaeism.

37. ⲛⲓⲧⲉⲧⲣⲁⲥ : “quaternions” Quaternion here likely refers to a small codex made of four bifolios, which often served as standardised notebooks. The contents of the texts to be copied are unspecified, but we see no reason to assume that they were magical; cf. Teigen 2021: 206; Dosoo/Torallas Tovar 2022a. Gardner et al. note the possibility of a reference to quaternions, but prefer to understand a “4-fold spell”, based on their interpretation of front ll. 19–20, where they read ⲁ as the numeral four.

back 2 ⲙⲓⲡⲱⲣ ⲁⲓⲉⲧⲩ ⲡⲓⲁⲥ ⲡⲉⲩⲉⲓ : “please do not make it a long text” Mirecki et al. & Gardner et al. translate this difficult passage as “by no means! I did it for the great texts...”. We understand ⲙⲓⲡⲱⲣ ⲉⲁⲁⲥⲩ, an emotive negative imperative (Layton 2000: 294; for the absent indefinite article before the following noun, cf. Shisha-Halevy 2002: 305–306). ⲉⲩⲉⲓ in this corpus generally has the sense of “letter”, but here it may translate the Greek γραφή, in the sense of “religious writing” (cf. Gardner/BeDuhn/Dilley 2018: 74–75, 167–170; Crum CD 383a). On this reading, Oualēs is asking Psais to select a short, useful text to copy into the quaternions since papyrus is scarce.

9–10. This is the address, giving the name of the sender and the intended recipient. The x-shape is the locus sigilli, “the place of the seal”. In this case, the letter was not sealed with wax, but, after the letter was folded and tied with string, the x was written across it so that any tampering would be apparent; see Vandorpe 1996: 241–243.

Linguistic description: Faiyumic.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–5: Healing prescription to stop uterine bleeding (KYP T443)

Completely preserved healing formulary written on a rectangular papyrus sheet. The papyrus is very damaged, and the lower part is missing. The 5 surviving lines are written in black ink in a single column on the front (↓). The manuscript has no clearly visible folds, although some of the damage patterns may have been caused by folding. The provenance of this manuscript, now kept in the Nationalbibliothek in Vienna, is not recorded, although the dialectal features suggest an origin in the Faiyum. The majority of manuscripts in the Vienna Nationalbibliothek were acquired in the Faiyum, so that such a provenance would be unsurprising.¹

The script is an informal and irregular upright majuscule whose idiosyncracies pose considerable problems for palaeographical dating. Notably, the ε varies between a two stroke form consisting of a C with a middle stroke, and a form which resembles two Latin C written on top of each other, while μ is deeply curved, the α pointed, and the γ resembles Latin Y, written in a single stroke. Ligatures are used with certain letter combinations (τϛ, ετ, etc.). The η occasionally has a dot above it where a supralinear stroke might be expected. The σ displays a typically Faiyumic form, in which the ascender is written last, rising from the lower part of the bowl, something like the printed form of the Old Nubian shima (ϫ).² The hand's irregularity, showing some features typical of more highly trained scribes (the ligatures and elaborate serifs and flourishes), may imply that the copyist was working from a model written in a more formal hand.³ Stegemann dated this hand to the fourth century,⁴ while Till dated it to the seventh century, noting the recurved tail of the ϖ as typical of older Faiyumic hands.⁵ The angularity of the alpha would seem to argue for an earlier date than that envisaged by Till, while the initial writing perpendicular to the fibres would suggest a fifth century date at the earliest.⁶ We thus tentatively propose a fifth to sixth century date for this piece.

The text is written in a fairly standard form of Faiyumic (F4/F5), although it is too fragmentary to determine which subdialect it should be assigned to. The text demonstrates $\text{c}\alpha\text{n}/\text{p}\epsilon\text{n}$ vocalism, lambdacism, the writing of the unstressed final vowel as ɪ , and lexical forms peculiar to this dialect (e.g., $\varpi\epsilon\varpi\tau\epsilon$ for ${}^s\text{c}\epsilon\varpi\tau\epsilon$; $\text{m}\epsilon\text{z}\text{ɪ}$ for ${}^s\alpha\text{m}\alpha\text{z}\tau\epsilon$).

Stegemann, reading only a few words, tentatively classified the text as a “Dämonenbeschwörung” (“demon adjuration”), but it belongs to the category of formularies treating uterine bleeding, as indicated by the first legible passage of the manuscript, “blood under her.”⁷ The putative title is followed by an invocation of a being named “great Baōth”, and ends with instructions for the production of an amulet.

1. [ϥ]ⲛⲁϥ ϣⲗⲗⲁϥ : “blood under her” Perhaps restore “For a woman with blood under her” (ⲉⲧⲃⲉ ⲟⲩϣⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲉⲗⲉⲡⲉϥⲛⲁϥ ϣⲗⲗⲁϥ) cf. PCM I 33 front l. 7: “a [woman] who has blood under her” (ⲟⲩⲩⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲉϥⲛⲟⲩ ϣⲗⲣⲟϥ; PCM I 36 col. 1 l. 1: ⲉⲧⲃⲉ ⲟⲩϣⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲉⲣⲉⲟⲩϥⲛⲟⲩ ϣⲗⲣⲟϥ; BKU I 25 (KYP M174) front l. 13: [ⲉⲧⲃⲉ] ⲟⲩϣⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲉϥⲛⲟⲩ ϣⲗⲣⲟϥ; P.Mich.Inv. 593 (Worrell 1930; KYP M9) p. 9 l. 3: ⲉⲧⲃⲉ ⲟⲩϣⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲉϥⲛⲟⲩ ϣⲗⲣⲟϥ (likewise P.Mich.Inv. 594 back l. 3, Worrell 1930; KYP M15). For another recipe with the goal of preventing uterine bleeding, see P.Vindob. K 11088 B ll. 4–7 (Hevesi 2015; KYP M374). For the description of blood being “under” someone as a way to express uterine bleeding, cf. e.g. Matthew 9.20 (Horner 1911: I 78) and Luke 8.43 (Horner 1911: II 160) “a woman with blood under her for twelve years” (ⲟⲩϣⲣⲓⲛⲓ ⲗⲉ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲉϥⲛⲟⲩ ϣⲣⲟⲡ ϣⲗⲣⲟϥ ⲛⲏⲛⲧϥⲛⲟⲩⲟⲩϥⲉ ⲛⲣⲟⲛⲛⲉ). The same construction is used in Demotic, e.g., GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) ll. 1197–1198: “a woman... whose blood is under her” (šhm.t... iw p3 snf hr-rs-s). For uterine bleeding and menstrual blood in Coptic magical papyri, see Preininger 2022; Preininger forthcoming a; Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 4, and compare curses to cause menstrual bleeding, discussed in the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 1 l. 1–34.

1. ⲃⲁⲟⲓⲥ : “Baōth” The initial ⲃ is very uncertain. The name Baōth occurs also in P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front ll. 34, 49, although in the latter case it may be understood as as continuation of the previous name which ends at the end of the preceding line (i.e., ⲃⲗⲗⲁⲃⲁⲟⲓⲥ). The name is reminiscent of, and probably derived from, *Sabaoth.

2. [ⲉⲧⲃⲉ]ⲛⲁϥ ⲉⲗⲗⲓⲛ ϣⲛ ⲧⲡⲏ ⲛⲏ ⲛⲏ ⲉⲧⲣⲏⲁϥ ϣⲓⲗⲉⲛ ⲛⲕⲉ[ϣⲓ] : “[who] sits up in heaven and he who sits upon the earth” This passage finds conceptual parallels in two different textual traditions. The first is that of descriptions of deities sitting upon or set over various locations or abstract concepts (for which see the notes to PCM I 1 l. 1). The second conception is that of descriptions of cosmic beings whose magnitude is expressed in terms of stretching from heaven to earth. For further discussions of the first phenomenon, see Robert 1981: 9–14; Zellmann-Rohrer 2018b: 107–112; Dosoo 2022c: 524 n. 175. For discussions of the second, see Dosoo 2022c: 502.

4. ⲛⲱⲧⲣⲉ ⲛⲧⲉⲛ[ⲟϥ] : “depict the model?” We are grateful to Ágnes Mihálykó for this suggestion, which would seem to fit the traces. This may mark an instruction to the reader to copy the amulet onto the sheet mentioned in l. 5, but the apparent use of the verb ⲛⲱⲧⲣⲉ (“to carve, depict”) for the action is surprising; more often we find ϣⲗⲁⲓ or γράφειν (both “to write, draw”).

5. [ⲓⲛ]ⲧⲁⲕⲓⲟⲛ : “sheet” The use of a sheet (ⲛⲓⲧⲧⲁⲕⲓⲟⲛ) as the support for an amulet is attested in P.Macq. I 1 (KYP M167), at p. 13 ll. 7, 9, 15, p. 15 ll. 12–13; in the first two cases it is bound (ⲛⲟⲩⲣⲣ) to the beneficiary, as is the case here.

5. ⲙⲗⲗⲉ ⲉⲗⲁϥ : “Bind it to her” “It” here refers to an amulet, probably consisting of the formula and the staurograms, which is to be bound to the woman’s body to treat her.

5. ⲡⲣⲣⲣⲣⲣⲣⲣⲣ : Traces of two letters are visible after the seven staurograms; although they are not sufficiently well-preserved to be certain, it is possible that there was a sequence of another seven shapes afterwards, such as 6-pointed stars; compare the seven five-pointed stars found at the ends of fewer amulets, such as P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 564a (Quecke 1963b: 255–256; KYP M513) l. 11; P.Stras. Copt. 6a (KYP M102) ll. 7–8; P.Stras. Copt. 6b (KYP M103) ll. 7–8.

Complete papyrus roll, with significant damage in the middle of the height. According to the report of Harold I. Bell, the manuscript was bought through the antiquities dealer Maurice Nahman in July 1922 and acquired by the University of Michigan in the same year.¹ In the same report, Walter E. Crum gives a brief description of the manuscript and dates it to the fifth, perhaps even fourth century, noting that it came from El-Araba el-Madfuna (Abydos).²

The sheet is large and square, with generous margins, particularly on the left hand side, where kollēsis is visible in the margin. The front (→) is written in two columns, the first of 36 lines, the second of 38 lines, divided by a vertical line. The back is written in two further columns, one of 19 lines, the other of 10 lines, with the second column written at 90° clockwise to the first, on the lower right part of the papyrus. The extensive damage in the middle may be the result of a horizontal crease resulting from folding, but no other creases are clearly visible; the mirrored damage patterns rather indicate that it may have been rolled four times on the horizontal axis. Here we assume that no full lines are lost in the break, but this must be considered uncertain.

The hand is an informal alphabetic majuscule, rather regular, the script bilinear, unimodal and upright. ⲃ is pointed, and respects the bilinearity of the script, while

² Bell 1922: 2 (Lot IV). The manuscript was described by Crum as being two leaves (“2 cols. to a page”) from a Coptic papyrus codex, apparently misinterpreting what is in fact a single leaf broken in half.

Δ, ζ, † and sometimes τ have simple serifs. μ has a deep curve, γ consistently resembles a Latin capital Y. Letters such as ϣ do not have elongated descenders, respecting the bilinearity of the script. The ascender of ϭ seems to rise from the lower part of the bowl, as is common in hands from the Faiyum (cf. the introduction to PCM I 2). The copyist makes extensive use of diaeresis on ι, and sometimes uses supralineation to mark numerals, abbreviations and names; a colon is used to separate clauses and morphemes. Crum's dating to the fourth or fifth century seems too early.³ A fifth-century date at the latest might be suggested by the initial writing on the horizontal fibres,⁴ but the fact that the manuscript takes the form of a short horizontal roll—which continued to be used in some contexts until the eighth century—might explain this unusual choice in a later text.⁵ A manuscript with a very similar hand, P.MMA 34.1.226 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2017; KYP M506), is likewise written on a short roll, dated by its editor to the sixth century, noting the absence of bimodularity (narrowing of letters such as ε, ø, o, c).⁶ A few of the graffiti and ostraca from the Osireion at Abydos show similar hands;⁷ these can be loosely dated to between the sixth and ninth centuries.⁸ We thus tentatively propose a fifth, or more likely, sixth century date, but note that the hands of writers with little formal training may display striking similarities over long periods of time.

The dialect is a non-standard form of Sahidic; alongside common features—such as ϣ for ^sq, ε for the Sahidic supralinear stroke, haplography (in particular of ε and μ), and the writing of ι in place of ^sei—we see some more idiosyncratic divergences. Most notably, the sequence vowel-ζ is regularly written in reverse (e.g., πζω, front col. 1, l. 3; ζζαμ, front col. 1 l. 24). We also see the interchange of voiced/unvoiced and aspirated/unaspirated consonants: ζ for c, ø for τ, x for ϭ; this last likely suggests that ϭ was treated as the aspirated phoneme corresponding to the unaspirated x, as in Bohairic.

We treat the initial staurogram of col. 1 as an independent line, so that in front col. 1, our l. 2 corresponds to l. 1 in Worrell and other editions. Where the date of Worrell is not noted in the apparatus, his reading is the same in both publications.

1–34. Curse to cause menstrual bleeding: Worrell understands this as a ritual to cause childbirth through a caesarian section, while Skiles suggests that it is rather a call for angelic protection during childbirth. Ritner (in Meyer/Smith 1994: 126) suggests that it is a spell to induce abortion. All understand the whole manuscript as a single ritual. The description of a child being torn out of a pregnant woman in ll. 13–15 is explicitly not requested (cf. note to ll. 15–16), and instead the request is for “polluted blood and water” to come out of the woman. The negative force of this is clear: it is to weigh upon her like a millstone (cf. the imagery of a millstone as punishment in Matthew 18.6, Mark 9.42, Luke 17.2), the blood is to come from her entire body (ll. 21–22), and it is to be of an extreme quantity, compared to the source of the four rivers of Eden (cf. Genesis 2.10). For other curses to cause a woman to bleed, see Crum ST 399 (KYP M536); P.Lond.Copt. 1223 (KYP M533); GEMF 34/PGM LXII (KYP M526) ll. 75–105, perhaps also BKU I 11 (KYP M78). Cf. the curses to make a woman bleed pus in PCM I 35 front ll. 7–17, 21–23. Compare also the recipes to heal menstrual bleeding, discussed in the note to PCM I 2 l. 1; cf. Preininger forthcoming c: ch. 4.

5–6. ⲭⲉⲓⲱⲛⲁⲛⲁⲧⲕ ⲉⲛⲛⲟⲩⲛ : “for if I sent you to the abyss” Worrell and Pernigotti translate “go even to the shore of the abyss” (“va’ sulla riva dell’Abisso”), understanding ⲕⲉ as ⲕⲏ “shore (?)” (Crum CD 92a), and parsing the first part as ⲭⲉ ⲉⲕⲉⲛⲉⲓ. Skiles understands ⲱⲁ ⲛⲁⲁ ⲧⲕⲉ “to the other”, referring to a female client. For our reading, cf. Crum CD 360b; van der Vliet 2000: 336.

6, 7. ⲉⲕⲉⲛⲟⲩⲩⲧⲩ : “you would destroy it” Worrell (1934, 1935a) mistakenly understands this as redundant. As noted in Crum CD 201a, ⲛⲟⲩⲩⲧ here may be equivalent to ⲧⲁⲕⲟ/ἀπόλλυμαι, “destroy”.

7–9. Destruction of stone and metals: This represents a prototypical feat which demonstrates the power of a being or ritual. In the Coptic magical corpus cf. PCM I 26 p. 12 ll. 4–5, p. 15 ll. 5–7; BKU I 3 (KYP M77) ll. 21–24; BKU I 7 (KYP M88) ll. 20–21; 21–24; BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) front ll. 23–24. Several instances are found in copies of the Prayer of Mary ‘in Bartos’: PCM I 25 p. 2 l. 23–p. 3 l. 1; P.Lond.Copt. 368 (KYP M117) p. 4 ll. 4–6; cf. the brief discussion in Lajtar/van der Vliet 2017: 148–149; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a: ch. 4.

13. ⲛⲱⲉ : “tear” Worrell and Pernigotti translate “to break”, whereas Skiles prefers “to reach”. The context, and the use of ⲛⲉ/ⲛⲛⲟⲩ to indicate the object of the verb suggests the former to be correct.

15–16. ⲛⲉⲓⲉⲁⲓ ⲛⲟⲕ ⲛⲁⲓ ⲁⲛ ⲟⲩⲁⲉ ⲛ[ⲉ]ⲕⲟⲟⲩⲉ : “it is not these things that I ask you, nor [other things]” Cf. PCM I 9 ll. 3–4; BKU I 7 (KYP M88) ll. 10–11: “for I do not ask for [these things], nor other things” (ⲭⲉ ⲉⲓⲉⲧⲓ [ⲛⲁⲓ] ⲁⲛ ⲟⲩⲧⲉ ⲟ[ⲩⲧⲉ ⲛ]ⲉⲕⲟⲟⲩⲉ); BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) front l. 24: “I do not ask you for these things, nor...” (ⲉⲓⲛⲧⲉ ⲛⲛⲟⲕ ⲛⲛⲁⲓ ⲁⲛ ⲟⲩⲁⲉ ⲛ[ⲉ]). This represents a rhetorical structure in which the speaker initially lists difficult or impossible things which could be requested, only to deny them and ask instead for something which is claimed to be simpler; see the discussions in Bell et al. 1932: 30–31. In addition to the two Coptic examples given above, we find the same structure in the Greek texts GEMF 18/PGM LXI (KYP M183) col. 3 ll. 174–177; GEMF 42 (KYP M410) col. 1 ll. 10–11; GEMF 57/PGM IV (KYP M3) ll. 1505–1508.

30–32. ⲓⲁⲉ : “neither ... nor” Although ⲉῖτε (“whether”) is used, the sense, and parallels (see note to ll. 31–33 below) require us to understand οὔτε (“neither”). It is possible that an original structure of the form “whether magician etc. ... <no-one> will be able to...” has been miscopied; we thank Michael Zellmann-Rohrer for this suggestion. For the topos of magicians being unable to heal, compare PCM I 18 ll. 15–16, and see Dosoo 2021b: 51 for a brief discussion.

31–33. ⲓⲁⲉ πνυρᾶνιον... ⲁῖⲥ νρῶμε : “nor heavenly <being> nor underworld <being> nor <the> hand of man” Skiles translates “whether heavenly or infernal or human hand”, but this is not possible grammatically, since the genitive ᾶ indicating the possessor of ⲁῖⲥ can only apply to νρῶμε.

33–34. ⲉⲙⲉⲟⲙ ⲉⲱⲗ ⲙⲡⲓⲥⲛⲟⲩ : “be able to contain this blood” Worrell, Pernigotti, and Skiles translate “find strength from this blood”, but this seems unlikely. For the trope of magicians and sorcerers being unable to undo curses, see PCM I 8 ll. 15–16.

2, 5, 8–9, etc. ⲉⲱ, ⲉⲱⲉⲛ, ⲉⲱⲉⲛ ⲡⲓⲥ etc. : “upon this image” Worrell, Pernigotti, and Skiles understand these as abbreviations for Standard Sahidic ⲉⲱⲡⲓ ⲙⲡⲓⲥ “upon this side” (cf. col. 1 ll. 12–13), but this is a different invocation, and it seems more likely that the powers are being invoked to descend upon an image; ζῳδιον is commonly found written with devoiced consonants (e.g., ⲙⲟⲩⲓⲟⲛ), and appears in a variety of abbreviations; the closest to that here is ⲙⲟⲗⲓⲟⲛ in PCM I 27 front l. 15. This invocation is an example of an epiclesis, a call to God or an angelic being to descend in order to empower a physical object, a ritual act likely inspired by the epicleses of liturgical rituals such as the anaphora and the blessing of the oil to anoint the sick; cf. the discussion in Dosoo 2021d: 426–428.

12–14. ⲃⲟⲣ . . . ⲱ : ⲡⲣⲟ ⲛⲱⲁⲗ ⲛⲕⲱⲧ : “Bor...ō, the face of fiery flame” Worrell, Pernigotti, and Skiles translate “Boriel, thou of the face of fiery flame” (“Boriel, tu che hai il volto fiammeggiante”), i.e. ⲡⲁ ⲡⲣⲟ ⲛⲱⲁⲗ ⲛⲕⲱⲧⲧ, but ⲡⲱ for ⲡⲁ would be unexpected, and the traces do not obviously suggest ⲃⲟⲣⲛⲗ, although the angel names here do typically end in ⲛⲗ. Perhaps compare rather names such as ⲃⲟⲣⲁⲱ (PCM I 11 p. 26 ll. 1–2) and ⲃⲟⲣⲁⲩ (Mich.Ms. 136 p. 2 l. 4 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128)), and for the whole phrase “Sabaho, the face of flaming fire” (ⲥⲁⲃⲁⲃⲟ ⲡⲣⲱⲁ ⲛⲕⲱⲧⲧ (P.Macq. I 1; KYP M167)).

front, col. 2 24. παμιν : “Pamin” Worrell translates “the amin”, understanding a word of Syriac or Arabic origin meaning “trustworthy”, presumably ܥܡܝܢ (?amīn) or أمن (amin).

25–26. τεςπαρτη : Espartē As noted by Worrell (1934: 12 n. 7), the name of the Devil’s daughter is likely derived from Astarte (Ἀστάρτη in Judges 2.13), a Levantine goddess who is mentioned several times in the Hebrew Bible, reinterpreted here as a demonic figure. The form here is likely the result of a visual confusion of τ and π in the name’s transmission, and the change of the initial (likely unstressed) vowel. For the initial definite article τ- with the names of divinities in Coptic, see Shisha-Halevy 1989: 13–15; Emmel 1994. The same figure appears in P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front l. 76, a curse in which the victim is to be left without company, except “Devil and Spartē” (τῆσθεος εἰσπαρτη). In this case the initial ε has apparently been reanalysed as part of the definite article (τε-) and removed; note the comparable absence of article before τῆσθεος.

30–32. ερετεγμητβ : ηπαλε μην μοογ ενεγχις : “your 12 bowls filled with water in your hands” The Coptic here uses the third-person plural suffix pronoun, but a second-person translation seems more natural here (cf. Shisha-Halevy 1989: 52–53). The image is likely inspired by Revelation 16, in which seven angels carry bowls, in particular Revelation 16.1, in which the fourth angel has a bowl which is poured onto the sun in order to scorch men with fire. The twelve angels here may be those described in Cairo JdE 49547 (Girard 1927; KYP M297) ll. 29–32: “twelve small boys who watch over the body of the sun... twelve bowls which are filled with water; they filled their hands and threw (it) into the rays so that the sun would not burn the fruits” (ἵβ κοῦῖ ἡλλογ εἰςκεπασε νοβ πσωνε πρη... ἵβ πριαλε εἰτμεζ μοογ ἀγμογ εἰνεγχις ἀγμογχε εἰογν πακτῖν τῇ πρη χε νογρωκε νεκαπωσ). The image seems to be of the angels who regulate the heat of the sun replacing the water of their bowls with fire, and directing the heat they usually moderate at the spell’s victim; cf. the discussion in Dosoo 2021d: 423–433.

33–38. ερογν επκερωτ : “into the fire ...” This is an example of the motif identified by Ortal-Paz Saar as LOVE IS FIRE, in which the burning of love is analogised to the burning of a fire; see Saar 2017: 194–195; Saar 2019b; Cherkashina/Lyavdanský 2021: 79–80, 86; Cherkashina/Lyavdanský 2022: 25, 35; and cf. PCM I 20 ll. 13–16; PCM I 28; PCM I 32; PCM I 37 front l. 22; and among Greek texts, e.g., SM I 45 (KYP M822); SM I 48 (KYP M874). The ritual described here involves copying an image onto an object which is then cast into the fire while the formula is being spoken; the same ritual is described in, e.g., PCM I 28 p. 9 ll. 10–13, PCM I 32 p. 1 ll. 16–17, 24–25, p. 2 ll. 11–12. While the object to be inscribed here is unspecified, other recipes often prescribe the use of an ostrakon. Naveh/Shaked 1998: amulet 10 (V–VI CE), a series of fired shards written in Aramaic, represents a rare example of a surviving applied object from such a ritual; its text is paralleled in a later recipe from the Cairo Genizah (Naveh/Shaked 1993: Geniza 22 p. 1 ll. 1–6); for discussions see Bohak 2008: 156–157; Saar 2017: 116–120.

Linguistic description: Sahidic (non-standard).

Contents:

1. p. 1 ll. 1–10: Amulet (?) consisting of letters, kharaktēres, and voces magicae (KYP T1254)
2. p. 2 l. 1–17 – p. 3 ll. 1–5: Invocation of Prabaoth (KYP T1255)
3. p. 4 l. 1–17 – p. 6 ll. 1–2: Love spell mentioning Isis, Osiris, Apis, and Petbe (KYP T341)

Incomplete papyrus codex, originally of 12 pages (3 bifolios, all broken into individual sheets), of which two are now lost. Pernigotti's descriptions assume that the lost folio is the second part of the outermost,¹ corresponding to pages 11–12, but more recent photographs, demonstrating continuities across the fibres, show that it is in fact the second half of the innermost folio (corresponding to pages 7–8) which is lost. The text is written only on the first six pages, with the rest of the codex blank. The damage patterns of the codex, resembling a vertical crease, suggest that it may have been folded in half before deposition.²

The manuscript was purchased by the Università Statale in Milan through the antiquities market in the early 1960s.³ The purchase of the manuscript as part of a larger group of magical texts, written in Greek and Aramaic, suggests that it may have belonged to an ancient archive, which was deposited, discovered, and then sold together, known as the 'Multilingual Library' (KYP A17; TM Arch ID 380).⁴ A drawing identical to that of page 3 of this codex is found in one of the Greek

³ Gallazzi/Piacentini 1998: 5–6; Pernigotti 1979: 21.

The hand is an informal, trained bilinear, generally unimodal and upright majuscule. Ligature of ε with π, τ and other letters is common. The μ is deeply curved, the γ resembles Latin Y, written in one stroke. Letter size is somewhat variable, with β, κ, θ, and φ in particular at times larger than the other letters, and ζ, χ, ω, σ tending towards quadrilinearity. The hand is generally undecorated, with the exception of notable serifs on τ, and marked loops on α and φ (which takes the form often described as “treble clef”). The writing on the last page is notably lighter in shading than on the other pages, suggesting the use of a different writing implement. A colon, sometimes extended into two short oblique strokes, marks paratextual divisions. The Greek manuscripts of the archive are dated to the fifth or sixth centuries,⁶ and Pernigotti (1979: 21) suggested a similar date for this manuscript.⁷ We note similarities to the Greek hands, in particular that of PGM CXXIIIa/GEMF 82 (KYP M180); although the single ς (l. 17) in that manuscript is quite different from that of PCM I 4, the forms of the ϣ and Ϸ do seem close to those of PGM CXXVc/SM II 98.3 (KYP M540). We thus tentatively agree with Pernigotti’s fifth to sixth century dating of this manuscript.

The dialect is Sahidic, with some inconsistent yet significant divergences from the literary standard. As well as common features such as the writing of schwa as ε, of doubled vowels as single vowels, of ^sq as β, of τϣ as χ (purely graphic), the lack of ν > μ assimilation, and the use of the strong article (μ- for expected ^sπ(ε)-), we find indications of cαμ/peμ vocalism typical of the more conservative dialects (i.e., those other than Sahidic and Bohairic)—^sε as α, ^sο as α, and the final tonic vowel written as -ι rather than -^sε. Pernigotti understood these as a mixture of dialectal influences, principally Faiyumic and Lycopolitan. He thus suggested a possible origin in the region of Beni Suef (Heracleopolis), comparing Cairo JdE 49547 (Girard 1927; KYP M297), found in Mazura, near Beni Suef,⁸ but we find this assessment overly optimistic; this latter text is not notably closer to PCM I 4 than many other non-standard manuscripts. Kahle does note that the lack of ν > μ assimilation is generally found north of Thebes, so we may cautiously suggest a more general Middle Egyptian provenance.⁹

15. ⲙⲡⲟⲟⲩ ⲃⲁⲗ : “today, Bal?” Pernigotti (1979, 1993) understands this to have the sense of “from today forward” (Crum CD 731a), but this would not seem to make sense in a context in which the being is commanded to come to the practitioner. For ⲃⲁⲗ as the name of a superhuman being, cf. Cairo JdE 45060 l. 3 (Kropp 1931: I no. K; KYP M303); PCM I 33 l. 4 (ⲃⲁⲣ). It is tempting to see here a link to the Northwest Semitic deity (or divine title) Ba’al (בעל “lord”), who appears at numerous points in the Hebrew Bible, but the normal Coptic writing would be ⲃⲁⲗⲁⲗ; see, e.g., Jeremiah 7.9 (Feder 2002: 122).

15–16. ⲡⲁⲩⲧⲉⲗⲟⲥ ⲡⲁⲩⲛⲉⲥ ⲛⲉⲣⲏⲧⲏ : “O angel, you who are not honoured among us” Pernigotti 1979 translates “the angel of the village (or “in possession of justice”) is in our midst?” (“l’angelo del villaggio/possessore della giustizia è in mezzo a noi”). Pernigotti 1993 translates “the ignominious angel is among us” (“l’angelo ignominiosa è tra di noi”).

page 3 1. ΠΠΠΠΠ ΠΑ ΝΙΒΑΛ ΝΚΩΖΤ : “of iron, he with eyes² of fire” We thank Michael Zellmann-Rohrer for suggesting this reading. The oblique stroke of the α curls upwards more than expected, but perhaps the scribe anticipated a ligature (cf. ερραι on p. 5 l. 7). “Iron” presumably describes another attribute (perhaps a body part) of the invoked being. For similar descriptions of superhuman beings, compare GEMF 57/PGM IV (KYP M3) l. 109 “he of the bronze feet, he of the iron heels” (Π[Α] ΤΙΒΑΛΛΥΒ ΠΩΗΝΤ ΠΑ ΝΙΤΙΒΣ ΝΒΕΝΙΠΕ); BKU I 1 (KYP M76) front col. 2 l. 19: “(Isis) with an head of iron upon her” (ερεογκεφαλη νβινιβε ριζος); BM EA 10376 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 2; KYP M286) l. 1 “he of the iron staff, he of the ... face” (ΠΑ ΠΕΒΕΡΩΒ ΝΠΕΝΙΠΕ ΠΑ ΠΕΡΟ .[.]); BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) l. 13: “this one who stands upon the iron legs” (ΠΑΙ ΕΤΑΡΕ ΕΡΑΤΥ ΕΧΝ ΝΚΕΛΕ ΒΙΝΙΠΕ); P.Carlsberg 52 (Lange 1932; KYP M125) p. ll. 2–3 “he of the bronze head, he of the iron teeth” (ΠΑ ΤΑΠΗ ΝΡΔΜΕΤ ΠΑ ΝΙΔΒΑΖ ΝΒΕΝΙΠΙ).

2. ρΗ ΣΟΜ : “by <the> power” For this phrase, cf. the notes to PCM I 16 o. 3 ll. 7–8.

4–6. Image: The figure of a man and the associated kharaktēres and vowels above it are identical to those at GEMF 84/PGM CXXIV (KYP M840) front ll. 10–33. This Greek recipe, though, seems to be a binding curse, and the image may depict an effigy to be made out of wax. Here, by contrast, it is associated with an invocation with no clear link to cursing or the use of effigies.

page 4 1, 6. ΤΣΟΤΕ : “the arrow” Here we follow the translation “the arrow” (Crum CD 361b) proposed by Pernigotti (1979: 36; 1993: 112–113), although it is also possible to translate “the fire” (Crum CD 360a s.v. κατε). Pernigotti 1979 understands it as the constellation of the same name (Sagitta, Greek Οίστός, although Pernigotti refers to τόξον “the bow”); cf. PCM I 9 ll. 7–8.

1, 7. ΤΧΑΛΟΥΥ : “water wheel” For this translation, see Crum CD 561a s.v. φαλλουυ. Pernigotti (1979: 36) proposes “scorpion”, i.e. the constellation Scorpio, attested in Coptic as τβλην (Spiegelberg 1911: 147). Pernigotti (1993: 113) later decided against this earlier interpretation, instead proposing to understand “water wheel” as the constellation Aquarius; cf. PCM I 9 ll. 7–8.

4–6. Fire consumes the bones of the three deities: For the “three deities” cf. Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022: commentary 125–126, 129; KYP M128) p. 5 ll. 3–4, but there apparently referring to the triune deity Amun. Threats against gods or the cosmic order are a common way of compelling deities in Pharaonic ritual and later Graeco-Egyptian magic (Sauneron 1951; Altenmüller 1977; Merkelbach/Totti 1991, 83–88; Maravela in Faraone/Torallas Tovar 2022a: 39 nn. 24–25). Threats are often against the vulnerable mummy of Osiris (e.g., GEMF 8/PGM LVII (KYP M788) l. 47; GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) ll. 451–458; GEMF 70/PGM V (KYP M141) l. 266; Audollent 1904: no. 270 ll. 21–24), here paralleled by the threat against his bones. Threats against the corpses of Apis and Isis do not seem to be otherwise attested; perhaps the composer of this formula was attempting to amplify the threat by adding other Pharaonic deities known to them.

15. ΝΠΠΑΒΙ ΕΡΡΑΙ ΕΝ : “I am not going to come out from” More strictly “come up/down”, but the implied meaning seems to be “come up/down out of”. Pernigotti renders “come down” (“scendere”).

3–5. ⲕⲏⲓⲱ ⲕⲏⲓⲱ : “Seth Iō Seth...” This is a variant of the Ērbeth-logos, a sequence whose opening part, “Iō Seth”, can perhaps be translated “Hail Seth!” (Dosoo 2021c: 209). The formula is associated with the god Seth-Typhon in the older Graeco-Egyptian corpus, and typically occurs in curses and love spells, where it is a compulsive formula intended to force the target or invoked beings to obey; cf. PCM I 14 l. 5; Martín Hernández 2019. The initial writing of Seth with a z rather than a c (i.e., Zēth) is unlikely to be significant, since Coptic does not distinguish between voiced and unvoiced consonants.

4. ⲓⲱ ⲫⲉⲛⲓⲱ ⲓⲱ ⲫⲁⲫⲓⲕⲁⲱ : “Iō Phenix, Iō Paphulax” The recurrent Iō indicates that this is part of the Ērbeth-logos (see notes to ll. 3–5 above). Phenix resembles the Greek φοῖνιξ (“phoenix”), and Paphulax could be understood as “my guardian” (ⲫⲁ-ⲫⲓⲕⲁⲱ), but both seem to function simply as voces magicae here.

2. ⲕⲏⲓⲱ ⲕⲏⲓⲱ : “by <the> power” For this phrase, cf. the notes to PCM I p. 3 ll. 17–18.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–12, back ll. 1–3: Procedure for the healing of internal organs (KYP T419)

Complete parchment sheet, inscribed in black ink on the front (flesh) and back (hair), containing a recipe for the healing of the internal organs. The sheet was rolled or folded multiple times on its vertical axis; approximately 10 horizontal creases are visible. The manuscript was excavated in 1902 in Hermopolis by the Deutsche Orient-Gesellschaft under the supervision of Otto Rubensohn,¹ and the manuscript is now kept in the Staatliche Museen in Berlin.

The hand is regular, bilinear, and unimodal, largely upright, but nonetheless occasionally sloping to the right, and displaying elongated descenders (on ⲁ, ⲕ, ⲗ, ⲛ, ⲣ, Ⲯ, Ⲕ, ⲕ) which descend below the baseline. The rounded letters, Ⲑ and ⲑ, are sometimes written in such a way that the two strokes forming the circle do not meet, leaving gaps at the top and bottom. Likewise, ⲕ, ⲣ, and Ⲗ are written in multiple strokes which often do not touch. Short vertical serifs are found on both sides of the horizontal stroke of the ⲧ and Ⲕ, while curved serifs are apparent on the ⲛ. Very fine supralinear strokes are used regularly, and the copyist marks word divisions with an apostrophe, a single stroke, or two oblique lines.

The closest parallels we have been able to find are in the hand of the priest Mark of the Topos of Saint Mark in Thebes, whose activity can be dated to the late sixth to early seventh centuries. Mark's hand is more clearly inclined to the right, and has bimodular traits not present in this manuscript, but the letterforms, in particular the notable serifs on Ⲕ and ⲛ, are strikingly close.²

The dialect is Sahidic, albeit with a few common non-standard features, such as haplography of ⲛ, and the use of Ⲗ for ⲥ.

Galbanum, sweat of a honey-bee, centaury[?].

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and autopsy.

12. εἰσέτινωλ' : “contain” This word seems unexpected in reference to internal organs; it is usually used in the context of the prevention of bleeding by “gathering it in”, and so may refer to healing internal bleeding or diarrhoea (cf. PCM I 25 p. 16 l. 24; P.Macq. I 1 (KYP M167) p. 16 l. 1). We might alternatively understand a metathesis of λο (“heal”).

2–3. χαλβανει = βωτε ἡλβ' ηεβια' : “galbanum, sweat of a honey-bee” Galbanum is the resin produced by the stem of the Galbanum plant (perhaps Ferula gummosa Boiss.). Dioscorides (De materia medica III.83) describes it as being used as a medicinal substance for various complaints, either inhaled, applied externally, or ingested, so that any of these may be the intended use here (cf. Lev/Amar 2008: 171–172; Macomber 2020: I 135 s.v. χαλβανη). The meaning of “sweat of a honey-bee” here is uncertain; presumably it refers to some kind of secretion from the insect, such as honey or wax (although this would not be the usual term for either of these), or else royal jelly or the pollen gathered on their legs.

3. κενταρ : “centaury?” The spiny plant centaury (perhaps Centaurea centaurium L. or Erythraea centaurium L.; André 1985: 55) is mentioned by Dioscorides (De materia medica III.6–7), as well as mediaeval Arabic and Hebrew works, as suitable for various medical problems, including internal diseases (Lev/Amar 2008: 377–378). The plant seems to also be mentioned in a fragmentary recipe from the unpublished magico-medical handbook Collège de France Ms. 1 (KYP M572; XI CE?), where it appears as κενταρος (p. 1 l. 3) and its juice is used to anoint the patient for an unclear complaint; in a recipe from the Cairo Genizah we find the drinking of centaury prescribed to provoke an abortion (MTKG I: T-S NS 322.10 p. 2b l. 13).

Manuscripts belonging to the archive: PCM I 6–8.

The putative ‘Schmidt Coptic Magical Dossier’ consists of three manuscripts; two sheets of parchment and one sheet of papyrus recognised by Bélanger Sarrazin as having been written in a very similar, if not the same, hand by a single copyist.¹ The manuscripts PCM I 6 & 7 were acquired together from a dealer in Cairo some time before 1931,² the date from which they are known to have belonged to the private collection of Carl Schmidt (1836–1938).³ PCM I 8 was acquired from the Cairo antiquities dealer Maurice Nahman by Harold I. Bell and William L. Westermann at some point between 1926 and 1927;⁴ it is therefore quite possible that Schmidt also acquired his pieces from Nahman. The role of Cairo as a hub for antiquities from all over Egypt prevents us from drawing any conclusions about provenance.

The ‘Schmidt scribe’ hand writes in a largely bilinear, bimodular majuscule, inclined slightly to the right. There are occasional serifs: τ and † consistently have serifs on the left side of their horizontal bar, while Δ has a left facing serif at its apex, and usually a broad flat base. γ, ϣ, and ϥ usually, but do not always, descend below the baseline of the bilinear letters, and may have flourishes on their descenders. Overall, the hand is irregular; while the μ is consistently curved—the curve may be either shallow or deep—and the γ varies between forms resembling the Latin Y and V, with the most common form being a two-stroke form with an oblique stem resembling a lowercase Latin y. The scribe’s use of supralinear strokes is limited to the letters ⲙ and ⲛ, and the stroke is gently curved downwards. Occasionally, ⲛ resembles ⲣ due to its short vertical stroke on the right (e.g., PCM I 7 l. 18 ⲡⲉⲛⲡⲉ; PCM I 8 front l. 1 ⲡⲛⲉⲗ, back l. 8 ⲡⲁⲙⲉ), while the ⲛ may in turn resemble a ⲡ due to the high horizontal bar sloping upwards to the right (e.g., PCM I 6 l. 4 ⲩⲱⲛ; PCM I 8 front l. 9 ⲗⲏⲧ). Ligatures, in particular of ⲁ and ⲉ to the following letter (especially ⲓ) are common, but not consistent. The copyist begins all three texts by writing a staurogram, uses mid-points as paratextual markers, as well as an occasional rounded supralinear stroke. Diaeresis is used on ⲓ. The writing of PCM I 6 is noticeably thicker; presumably it was written using a larger or blunter pen.

⁴ Bell 1927 describes the acquisition as follows: “The third lot consists of the papyri bought by Prof. Westermann and myself from Nahman. These were acquired in one lot but consist of very various papyri purchased by Nahman at different times and of different vendors. Some had arrived recently; others were selected by me from boxes of fragments which had apparently been in stock for a long time”. On Maurice Nahman, see Hagen/Ryholt 2016: 253–255.

Tonio Sebastian Richter tentatively dated the manuscript PCM I 8 to between the fifth and sixth centuries,⁵ while Walter E. Crum suggested the seventh century at the latest for the other two manuscripts.⁶ Parallels for the hand are difficult to come by, but we can see some similar features in SB Kopt. I 36 (TM 87781)—the rounded ⲁ and supralinear stroke, ⲕ with large, curved upper leg, the distinctive forms of the ⲛ, ⲧ and ⲩ. This text, a verbal process recording a dispute over the ownership of part of a house, mentions the Sasanian Persian conquest of Egypt (619–630 CE), and individuals known to have been active as late as 647 CE,⁷ allowing it to be dated with some precision to between these dates. We thus propose a sixth to seventh century date for this copyist.

The texts are written in a form of Sahidic with only minor, and relatively common, divergences from the literary standard, such as the interchange of ⲉ/ⲏ and ⲟ/ⲱ (e.g., PCM I 6 l. 7 ⲕⲉⲧ for ⲉⲕⲏⲧ; PCM I 8 front l. 10 ⲥⲱⲛ for ⲉⲥⲟⲛ), occasional haplography, and the writing of ⲛⲧ as ⲧ.⁸ None of these are clearly suggestive of a geographical origin or of particular dialectal influence.

In terms of content, all three manuscripts are remarkable for mentioning Pharaonic Egyptian deities—Isis, Horus, and Osiris. PCM I 6 & 7 take the form of narrative charms of the common Horus-Isis type, while PCM I 8 is an invocation which simply mentions Isis and Osiris alongside Jewish-Christian figures. PCM I 7 & 8 are love spells, while PCM I 6 is either a narrative charm for causing sleep, or yet another love spell.

1. Front ll. 1–25: Horus-Isis narrative charm for sleep or love (KYP T74)

Completely preserved papyrus sheet containing 25 lines written in a single column (↓). The papyrus was folded into a square of 3.5×4 cm.¹ The low quality of the surviving image of the manuscript does not allow us determine the precise number of folds, but at least 4 vertical and 6 horizontal creases seem to be visible. The manuscript was acquired by Carl Schmidt from a dealer in Cairo before 1931;² its present location is unknown. The papyrus seems to be written in the same hand as PCM I 7 & 8, thus forming part of the group referred to here as the ‘Schmidt Coptic Magical Dossier’; a full description of the copyist’s palaeographic and linguistic tendencies may be found in the introduction to the dossier (pp. 80–81).

There have been two suggestions as to the goal of this formula. The instructions to send the target to sleep implies that the purpose is to treat insomnia—it would be comparable perhaps to PCM I 9, a formula for sleep which also mentions the characters Horus, Isis, and Abdemelech. On the other hand, the text follows the narrative structure of love spells (cf. PCM I 7, 20, 24), perhaps implying that the goal is to cause the target to sleep so that they will be unable to resist the sexual advances of the user.³ One point against this second possibility may be the masculine gender of the target, since the generic targets of love spells are usually female, but there are exceptions in which the generic target is male.⁴

(not followed in this volume). Kelsey (in Meyer/Smith 1994: 94) hesitates between the insomnia and erotic readings of the text, while Kropp 1931: II 3–6, Pernigotti 2000: 52–53 and Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a: 109–111 follow the latter understanding. Kropp specifically suggests it may be a formula for insomnia adapted as a love spell, although the larger pattern of this narrative being used primarily for love spells makes this seem unlikely.

‡ Listen to *Horus, crying, listen to Horus, groaning:

“I have suffered, melting for seven women[?] from the third ⟨hour⟩ of the day until the fourth hour of the night. Not one of them sleeps, |⁵ not one of them dozes.”

*Isis, his mother, replied to him from within the temple of Habin, her face turned towards seven women[?], seven women[?] turned towards her face:

“Horus, why are you crying? Horus, why are you |¹⁰ groaning?”

“Do you want me not to cry? Do you want me not to groan from the third hour of the day to the fourth hour of the night? I am melting for seven women[?]. Not one of them sleeps, not one of them dozes.”

Horus-Isis Narrative Charms: This text represents an example of a narrative charm in which the main protagonists are Horus and Isis; see the notes to PCM I 7 front.

2. ογωε : “melting” Kropp and Pernigotti translate “desiring” (ογωω), Martín Hernández/Torallas Tovar “tied” (ωττ), and Blumell and Dosoo “alone” (ογαατ). Here we understand the stative form of the verb ογωττ (Crum CD 498b), following Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a. For the motif of LOVE IS FIRE, upon which this would seem to draw, see the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 2 ll. 33–38.

3, 7, 8, 13. νογσε : “women[?]” This word does not seem to be otherwise attested in Coptic. It may derive from the Demotic nsy (“prostitute (?)”); see Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 228–229, n. 76), or else represent a contraction of the Greek παρθένος (“maiden”). We here choose the neutral translation “women”. Ritner (1998) suggests that the seven women derive from the seven scorpion wives of Horus who appear in earlier Egyptian healing charms, which seem to draw upon a myth in which Horus is stung by his wife during intercourse, and must be healed; here the drama of Horus’ healing would be replaced by a narrative of his infatuation with the scorpion-women (cf. Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 229–231).

6. επ̄ρηε η̄ραβιν : “Habin” This is the temple of Hebenu, Alabastron Polis, modern Kom el-Ahmar (TM Geo ID 2684), where there was a temple to Isis (see Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 233 n. 89).

14. και επ̄ε[κοντ] : “even if[?] [you] did not [find me]” For this construction, see the notes to PCM I 16 o. 2 ll. 15–16.

16. υωγ · ει : “water, whether” There is a large space between the two words; from the only image available to us it is impossible to know if there is erased or damaged text here; there are traces of what might have been a vertical stroke approximately in the middle of the space, printed here as a mid-point.

20. αβιμελεχ : “Abdemelech” Abdemelech (Αβδεμέλεχ) is a Kushite official who appears in Jeremiah 45–46 (38–39), and in 4 Baruch/Paraleipomena Ieremioi and the History of the Captivity in Babylon (CAVT 227 (=CC 576?); see Kuhn 1970; Piovaneli 2000) as Abimelech (Αβιμέλεχ). In the latter works he is said to have been put to sleep for 66 or 70 years in order to be spared the destruction of Jerusalem; cf. Martín Hernández/Sofia Torallas Tovar 2012: 311. Abdemelech also appears in PCM I 9 ll. 11–12.

Complete formulary written on a parchment sheet, inscribed on the front in a single column of 38 lines. The shape of the sheet and the folding pattern is unclear, due to the low quality of the only surviving incomplete photograph of the manuscript.¹ The manuscript was acquired from a dealer in Cairo,² and belonged to Carl Schmidt's private collection by 1931. The manuscript seems to have been written by the same scribe as PCMI 6 & 8, thus forming part of the part 'Schmidt Magical Dossier', an archive of three manuscripts; the hand and linguistic characteristics of the group are more fully described in its introduction (pp. 80–81).

The present location of this manuscript is unknown. The only surviving image is printed in Kropp 1931, vol. We accept Kropp's readings in all cases for parts not visible in the image, except where he has restored text.

Horus-Isis Narrative Charms: This text represents an example of a narrative charm in which the main characters are *Horus and Isis; for other examples in Coptic, see PCM I 6, PCM I 16, PCM I 20; BKU I 1 (KYP M76) col. 2, and cf. PCM I 9, BKU I 7 (KYP M88) and BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) ll. 12–16, which incorporate aspects of these charms. For discussions of these texts, see Frankfurter 2009; Blumell/Dosoo 2018; Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: 97–99; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a. The basic structure of the texts consists of the sequence encounter between protagonist and antagonist (A), protagonist turns to helper (B), protagonist recites initial events (A'), helper provides solution (C) (Kalchenko/van der Vliet 2022: 216–217; Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 221–241). In the variants included in this volume, the primary protagonist is the young god Horus, who travels into *hell where he encounters the antagonist(s) in the form of one or more women (cf. the notes to PCM I 6 l. 3 for their identity) who refuse his attempts at seduction. He turns to his mother Isis as a helper, who provides ritual instructions which may be carried out both in the mythic narrative past and in the ritual present.

2–3. ⲟⲩⲣⲟ ⲛⲁⲟⲛⲉ ... ⲟⲩⲣⲟ ⲙⲡⲉⲛⲓⲡⲉ : “a door of stone... a door of iron” This passage describes a descent to hell; the door of stone would be the tomb, or the door to the underworld depicted on late antique funerary stelae. *Tartarus in the Iliad 8.15 is said to have “gates of iron iron and a bronze threshold” (σιδήρειαί τε πύλαι καὶ χάλκεος οὐδός), while the description of the Lord shattering “bronze gates and iron bars” (τὰς πύλας τὰς χαλκὰς καὶ τοὺς μοχλοὺς τοὺς σιδηροῦς; Psalm 106 (107) 14–16) was taken by Christians as referring to Jesus’ destruction of the gates of hell prior to his resurrection (see Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 222–227). For parallels, cf. PCM I 16 p. 1 ll. 5–9; PCM I 20 l. 1 (in which the destination is explicitly hell); BKU I 7 (KYP M88), and BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) ll. 14–15 (πελλωνια likely from πύλη ἰωνε). The “doors of iron” (ⲛⲉⲣⲟ ⲡⲉⲛⲓⲡⲉ) recur in BKU I 3 (KYP M77), a love spell in which a being threatens to destroy them.

7. ⲁⲓⲡⲉⲉ ⲙⲡⲟⲩⲡⲉⲉ : “I was seduced, but they were not seduced” For ⲡⲉⲓⲑⲉⲓⲛ with the sense of “be seduced” cf. Pseudo-Chrysostom, On Susannah 26 (CC 178): “be seduced, then; it is good for you to sleep with us” (ⲡⲉⲓⲑⲉⲉ ⲉⲛ ⲛⲁⲛⲟⲩ ⲛⲧⲉⲱⲣⲟⲡⲉ ⲛⲙⲁⲛ; Budge 1910: 51 l. 17; cf. Crum CD 578b).

13. ⲡⲱⲛⲣⲉ ⲙⲡⲣⲉ : “O child of the sun” Kropp and Richter translate “son of Re” (“Sohn des Re”).

24. ⲭⲉ ⲕⲁⲃⲱⲕ : “did you go” We translate this as a first perfect, understanding ⲭⲉ ⲁⲕⲃⲱⲕ, since this is the tense used throughout for this narrative section, which recurs in the juxtaposed negative first perfect in ll. 29–30 (ⲙⲡⲉⲕⲧⲟⲕ), and used in the texts which offer the closest parallels to this narrative (see Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 234–235 et passim). The form however resembles a third future (l. ⲭⲉⲛ ⲉⲕ(ⲛ)ⲁⲃⲱⲕ); this is how it is translated in Richter. It is possible that the discrepancy is caused by a typo in Kropp, since he also translates this in the past tense.

iron, and find seven maidens, and desire, and they did not desire, want to love NN, the daughter of NN, but she did not want you to kiss her, <why> did you not ^[30] fortify yourself and stand up and cast out seven tongues, saying ‘Thētf’ (seven <times>), O great one among the spirits, I want to make NN, the daughter of NN, spend forty nights and forty days clinging ^[35] to me like a female dog under a male dog, like a sow under a boar, for it is I who recites, you who [does] the wish!”

RBS, KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and readings of Kropp.

31. ⲑⲏⲧⲧⲓ : “thētf” Usually understood as a vox magica, perhaps understand instead a writing of the archaic phrase ti hz.tꜣf “give/cause his heart”; compare GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) l. 772: “a procedure to put the heart of a woman after a man” (wꜥ ky r ti hz.tꜣ shm.t m-sꜣ hwt). The form τ- for ⲧ is well attested from Coptic causative verbs (cf. Vycichl DELC 209). We would expect ⲑⲏⲧⲧ rather than ⲑⲏⲧⲧ for “his heart”, although note the Akhmimic form ⲏⲧⲧ in Crum CD 714a.

35–36. Animal Analogies: For similar references to animal behaviour as a metaphor for passionate love and desire, compare PCM I 17 back l. 17–front l. 1; PCM I 28 p. 6 ll. 3–14; PCM I 32 back ll. 16–18; BKU I 3 ll. 8–9 (KYP M77): “the desire... of a black dog, whose children he is about to take away before her eyes” (ⲡⲟϣⲱⲩ... ⲡⲟϣⲟϣⲟⲣⲉ ⲕⲁⲛⲉ ⲉⲣⲏⲁⲃⲓ ⲛⲉⲥⲱⲛⲣⲉ ⲉⲣⲟⲛ ⲓⲁⲧⲥ); London Hay 10414a (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 3; KYP M287) ll. 11–13: “... (may) she cling to me like a drop of water clinging to a jar, and may she become a (honey-)bee seeking, a female dog wandering, a female cat going from house to house, a mare going under mad (horses)” (ⲛⲉⲥⲱⲩ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ ⲛⲉⲃⲱ ⲛⲟⲩⲧⲁⲧⲓⲗⲉ ⲛⲏⲟⲟϥ ⲉⲥⲁⲣⲉ ⲛⲥⲁⲟϥⲕⲁⲗⲟⲥ ⲛⲥⲣ ⲉⲛ ⲟϥⲃⲱⲩ ⲉⲥⲱⲛⲉ ⲟϥⲣⲟⲣ ⲉⲥⲗⲉⲗⲉ ⲟϥⲉⲛⲟϥ ⲉⲥⲃⲱⲕ ⲉⲛ ⲟϥⲏ ⲁϥⲏ ⲉⲛ ⲟϥⲣⲱⲣⲉ ⲉⲥⲃⲱⲕ ⲉⲁ ⲛⲉⲧⲟⲃⲗⲉ). Some of these extend the analogies to inanimate objects: P.Herm.Copt. 55 + 71 (KYP M45) p. 5 ll. 2–5: “and may they love him like a drop of water clinging to the edge of a jar” (ⲁϥⲱ ⲛⲥⲉⲛⲉⲣ[ⲓⲧⲥ ⲛⲟⲩ] ⲛⲟϥⲧⲉⲗⲧⲓⲗⲉ ⲛ[ⲏⲟⲟϥ] ⲉⲥⲁⲣⲉ ⲛⲥⲁ ⲡⲃⲓⲧ [ⲏ]ⲟϥⲕⲁⲧⲟϥ). For these analogies, cf. Frankfurter 2001; Saar 2017: 36–37, 39; Dosoo 2020: 266–267 (noting that the common reference to female horses is due to the belief that they were “the most sexually eager of all animals”); Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: 137–138; Dosoo 2022c: 531–533. A similar analogy is found in the Demotic GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) ll. 1029–1031: “the desire which a female cat feels for a male cat, desire which a female wolf feels for a male wolf, desire that a female dog feels for a male dog, the desire which the god, the son of Sothis², felt for Moses...” (pꜣꜥ whꜣe iw hr ire im(y).tꜣ y.tꜣf r im (y)-mw whꜣe iw hr ire wnꜣe.t iy r wnꜣe whꜣe iw hr ire whꜣr.t iy.tꜣf pꜣ whꜣe r whꜣr nt r pꜣ nꜣr šꜣ Spt.tꜣ iy.ytꜣf r Mw.s.t.s).

36–37. ⲁⲛⲟⲕ ⲉⲧⲏⲟϥⲧⲉ ⲛⲧⲟⲕ ⲉⲧⲧⲓ : “it is I who recites, you who [does] the wish!” Compare PCM I 8 back ll. 9–10; BKU I 1 (KYP M76) front col. 1 ll. 17–18: “it is I who speaks, the Lord Jesus is the one who gives healing” (ⲁⲛⲟⲕ ⲉⲧⲱⲁⲗⲉ ⲡⲕⲟⲩⲉⲓ ⲧⲉ ⲡⲉⲧⲧⲓ ⲛⲓⲧⲧⲁⲗⲟⲓ), col. 2 back l. 8: “it is I who recites, the Lord Jesus is the one who gives healing” (ⲁⲛⲟⲕ ⲉⲧⲏⲟϥⲧⲉ ⲡⲕⲟⲩⲉⲓ ⲧⲉ ⲡⲉⲧⲧⲓ ⲛⲓⲧⲧⲁⲗⲟⲓ).

1. Front ll. 1–20, back ll. 1–10: Love spell invoking oil (KYP T343)

Parchment sheet with its lower margin lost and some damage to the left margin. The text nonetheless seems to be complete, since it continues and ends in the middle of the back; the manuscript contains a single formula. The rounded corner of the surviving upper right part of the sheet suggests that it may be a leaf from a codex. The parchment is very fine, and the text on one side can be seen through the other. The manuscript was acquired between 1926 and 1927 by Harold I. Bell and William L. Westermann from the Cairo antiquities dealer Maurice Nahman,¹ and is currently kept in the University of Michigan Library.

The text is written in black ink in a single column of 20 lines on the front (hair side), and in a single column of 10 lines on the back (flesh side). 1 vertical and 5 horizontal creases are visible; it is probable that the manuscript broke at the bottom along a fold, suggesting that the original manuscript was at least ca. 2.5 cm taller. The hand of the text seems to belong to the same copyist responsible for PCM I 6–7, making it part of the group designated here as the ‘Schmidt Coptic Magical Dossier’ (see pp. 80–81).

ⲡ O oil, O oil, O oil, O holy oil! O oil which flows from beneath the throne of *Iao of the sun call to you. I want to send you; you will go and I will bring you so that you will bring NN, child of NN, to me, I, NN, child of NN, and you will cause my love to be in her heart, and hers to be in mine ¹⁰ [like] a brother and a sister, and <like> a she-bear [who] wants to suckle her offspring, yea, yea!

I adjure you, he whose head is in heaven, whose feet are in the *abyss, whose forepart has the appearance of a sheep, whose hindpart has the appearance of a serpent, ¹⁵ he from whom the whole⁷ sky and⁷ of all darkness hangs, while the

2–3. ⲡⲛⲉⲗ ⲉⲧⲁⲧⲉ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ ⲉⲁ ⲡⲉⲑⲣⲟⲛⲟⲥ ⲛⲓⲁⲱ ⲥⲁⲃⲁⲱⲑ : “O oil which flows from beneath the throne of Iao Sabaoth” Cf. Gessel 1988, discussing stone reliquaries from Apamea (Syria) constructed so that oil poured into the top flows out of the bottom, sanctified by proximity to the saint. For formulae directly addressing materia, compare GEMF 4/PGM CXXII (KYP M488) ll. 31–52; GEMF 57/PGM IV (KYP M3) ll. 1496–1595; GEMF 68/PGM XXXVI (KYP M181) ll. 333–360 (all addressing myrrh burnt in offerings); BKU I 3 (KYP M77); GEMF 18/PGM LXI (KYP M183) ll. 159–196 (both oil); GEMF 156/PGM VII (KYP M156) ll. 643–651 (wine).

3–4. ⲡⲛⲉⲗ ⲛⲧⲁⲛⲥ ⲧⲁⲣⲥⲓ ⲛⲕⲉⲥ ⲛⲉϥⲓⲣ : “oil with which Isis anointed the bones of Osiris” The love of Isis and Osiris serves as a paradigm in many Graeco-Egyptian love spells, as does the claim that Isis used a particular procedure (Dosoo 2021c: 212 nn. 93, 94). The reference here seems to be to the resurrection of Osiris by Isis and Anubis, god of embalming, followed by her conception of their son *Horus. The oil used to anoint Osiris’ bones is implicitly powerful enough both to raise the dead, and to ensure love beyond death. Compare GEMF 4/PGM CXXII (KYP M488) ll. 31–32, addressing myrrh as that with which Isis anointed herself when she went to Osiris; GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) ll. 610–620 in which Isis addresses oil in order to anoint and heal her son Anubis. In the Coptic magical corpus, Isis is also mentioned in PCM I 4 p. 4; PCM I 6, 7, 9, 16, 20; BKU I 1 front col. 2 & back; Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellman-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128) p. 5 l. 1–p. 6 l. 5.

10. ⲙⲛ ⲟⲩⲗⲁⲃⲟⲓ : “and <like> a she-bear” Worrell (following Youtie) sees a translation of an originally Greek καὶ γὰρ οὕτως (“and indeed thus”) miscopied as καὶ ἄρκτος; he reconstructs ll. 9–11 as “and make my love arise in her heart and hers in mine, in the manner of a brother and a sister, and indeed thus I desire to beget (ⲉⲧⲁⲓ) her children”. This seems unnecessary, however, given the frequent use of animal metaphors to describe emotion; cf. the notes to PCM I 7 ll. 35–36. Polotsky proposes “a lioness whose children one wants to take” (“eine Löwin, deren Junge man [sic] wegnehmen will”, [ⲉϥⲟϥ]ⲱⲱ ⲉⲧⲁⲓ ⲛⲉϥⲱⲛⲣⲉ). Here we translate “she-bear”, but the word λᾶβοι originally, and still, had the alternative meaning of “lioness”.

13–14. ⲉⲣⲉⲛ ⲙⲙⲟϥ ⲟ ⲛⲉⲁ ⲛⲉϥⲟⲩϥ ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲁⲗⲟϥ ⲙⲙⲟϥ ⲟ ⲛⲉⲁ ⲁⲣⲁⲕⲱ : “whose forepart has the appearance of a sheep, whose hindpart has the appearance of a serpent” Worrell translates “in front of him being (what is) under the Sheep, behind him being (what is) under Draco”, with Skiles following him (“before whom is (what) is also under the Sheep (pl.), behind whom is (what) is also under Draco”). Both understand “the Sheep” to be a constellation, paralleling Draco. This seems unnecessary, since descriptions of such polymorphic cosmic beings are common in Coptic magical texts; see Dosoo 2022c: 501–503; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a: chapter 4.

16. ⲉⲣⲉⲡⲓⲕⲉ ⲛⲉⲓ : “while the turning” Polotsky and Pernigotti read ⲡⲓⲕⲉ ⲛⲛⲉⲓⲧⲁⲗ and translate “while the winking of his eyes...” (“mentre l’ammiccare dei suoi occhi...”).

† I will tear it out; iron, I will dissolve it”.

“No, my lord, do not hand me over to *Temeluchus, he who is set over the judgement, rather I want ⁵ you to go down to *hell and tear out all the thoughts of the Devil concerning NN, the <child of> NN and cause my love to be in her [heart] and hers to be in mine, for it is I ¹⁰ who recites, <and> you are the one who does the wish.”

RBS, KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph.

1–2. οὐπενίπε †ναβολῇ ἐβολ : “iron, I will dissolve it” For the topos of destroying stone and metal, cf. the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 1 ll. 7–9.

3. ἡδαιμελοχός : “Temeluchus” For this figure, see *hell in the glossary, and cf. P.Berol. 10587 (Beltz 1983: no. I 555; KYP M510) ll. 3–7: “send Temeluchus to me, he who is over the punishment of the (pl.)... he who tortures the lawless and the liars and those who swear falsely, that he wreak vengeance for me upon them!” (ἡατηροῦ ἡναῖ τεμελοχός πετρίχην ἡκολασις ἡν . . . λ πετβασανίσε ἡἡανονος ἡἡ ἡρεφχίσιολ : ἡἡ ἡἡρεφωρκ ἡἡογχ ετρεφρ πακβα ἡἡἡαγ).

4. ἀλλὰ †οὔωω : “rather I want...” Compare the rhetorical device described in the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 1 ll. 15–16, although the construction of the argument here is less clear. The example here may rather represent a threat in which the speakers have become confused; we might expect (i) the first speaker to threaten to hand the second to Temeluchus, (ii) the second to beg for this not to happen, and (iii) the first to reply with a command based upon the threat. Here parts ii and iii of this hypothetical dialogue seem to have been merged together.

5–7. ἡἡωρκ ἡἡεεγε τηροῦ ἡἡαἡβολός ἐραῖ ἐχἡ ἡεωε ἡἡἡ παἡ : “tear out all the thoughts of the Devil concerning NN, the <child of> NN” Polotsky understands this phrase to mean something like “fill NN, child of NN, with thoughts snatched from the Devil”, comparing PCM I 28 p. 5, ll. 22–23: “her mind will have devilish thoughts” (πεσπογς ἐρ ἡεωγε ἡἡαἡωλίκων), but this would seem to require the addition of another verb, such as † (“give”) rather than “tear out”. As Michael Zellmann-Rohrer points out (private communication), this passage may imply that the goal of the ritual is not to create a new sexual or romantic relationship, but rather to maintain an existing one, in this passage by preventing one partner from having negative thoughts concerning the other. This would correspond to the Greek rituals identified by Faraone (2009: 27–30 et passim) which have the goal of “maintain[ing] or increas[ing] affection” used by social inferiors (including women) on higher status men.

9–10. ἀἡ[οκ] ἡἡετἡωγτε ἡτοκ πετρε ποῡωω : “for it is I who recites, <and> you are the one who does the wish” For parallels, see the notes to PCM I 7 ll. 36–37.

Linguistic description: Sahidic (non-standard).

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–13: Formula for sleep mentioning Isis, Nephthys, and Horus (KYP T179)

Complete papyrus sheet, generally well-preserved but slightly damaged on the edges and along the folds. The manuscript was likely folded to form a small package; approximately 6 horizontal and 11 vertical folds are visible. The sheet was acquired in 1887 in Thebes,¹ and is held in the Staatliche Museen in Berlin.

The text is written in black ink on the vertical fibres in a highly informal and irregular hand. The writing is bimodular, largely bilinear, and right-sloping, with significant variation in letter height and shading. The γ varies in shape between Υ , $\vee$, and y , with the last being the most common. γ , q , and $\wp$ have long descenders, while x and 𐤭 have flourishes on the upper part of the left oblique stroke. The supralinear stroke is either curved, or resembles an accute accent or later djinkim, and the scribe makes use of diaeresis on 𐤓 . Erman noted that the hand's idiosyncracies prevented a precise dating.² We may note some approximate parallels to manuscripts from the Monastery of Epiphanius in Thebes— 𐤀 with a closed, rounded bulb but straight oblique stem; bilinear 𐤁 and 𐤂 , narrow 𐤃 and 𐤄 , rounded 𐤅 , rounded 𐤆 with serifs, y -shaped γ , some decoration of x and 𐤭 (P.Mon. Epiph. 164, 230, 436, 482), datable to the seventh century—although we propose a more cautious sixth to eighth century date for this text.

The dialect is Sahidic, but with some highly idiosyncratic features; alongside frequent haplography and dittography (especially of 𐤂), we occasionally find 𐤀 for Sahidic 𐤄 or 𐤅 (e.g., ll. 2, 8), as well as more unexpected substitutions, such as $\text{𐤓} \text{𐤅}$ (l. 2) and $\text{𐤅} \text{𐤃}$ (l. 12).

What is wrong with you (f.s.)? ... The arrow goes around the sun, the water-wheel goes around the moon in the midst of the sky, as the Pleiades are in the midst of the sky, Isis and Sephthys, the two sisters who are afflicted within, who are grieved within, |¹⁰ who are in the abyss, for you are *Ax, you are *Abrazakh, the *angel who sits upon the Tree of Paradise, who set sleep upon Abdemelech for seventy-five[?] years; you will bring sleep upon NN, the son of NN, now, now, quickly, quickly!”

RBS, KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and autopsy.

1–2. Erman 1895, Kropp, and Pernigotti understand this first phrase as a question “If I send you to my work, will you go...?”; Meyer notes this as a possibility. Previous editors translate “your hand”; here we propose that the inserted τ represents a correction. On this understanding, possession of the “golden cup” permits the first speaker to command the second. Alternatively, if we translate “your hand”, the second speaker may be implicitly requested to fill it with water or mud.

3. ⲙⲡⲉⲓⲗⲟⲟⲓⲛ ⲛⲉⲁ ⲛⲁⲓ : “I did not send you concerning those things” For this rhetorical construction, see PCM I 3 front col. 1 15–16 and the accompanying note.

4. ⲟⲩⲟⲩⲁ : “Kushite?” Previous translators have understood ⲟⲩⲟⲩⲁ as a vox magica, although we may note two more concrete possibilities. ⲟⲩⲟⲩⲁ is the Coptic spelling of Hushai the Archite, the friend of King David who appears in 2 Samuel. The meaning of the phrase “sun of Hushai” is not clear, however, and the definite article before ⲟⲩⲟⲩⲁ would imply another word. Χουϛ is the Greek writing of Cush, the eldest son of Ham in (inter alia) Genesis 10.6, and Χουϛⲓ is the transliteration of Hebrew כּוּשִׁי (kūšī), “Kushite”, generally translated in Greek as Αἰθίοψ. Awareness of this meaning among Greek-language authors appears in e.g. John Chrysostom, Exposition of Psalm 7 (καὶ ἀντὶ τοῦ Χουϛⲓ, Αἰθίοπός φησιν). Alternatively we might understand χοῦς (“soil”, “dust”), or in Psalm 21 (22) 16 “the grave” (as χοῦς θανάτου) as a masculine noun.

7–8. ⲁⲅⲣⲱ... : “What is wrong with you...” Bélanger Sarrazin suggests to understand ⲁⲅⲣⲱⲧⲁⲣⲥ and ⲭⲁⲗⲁⲅ as constellations, by analogy with the Pleiades mentioned later, with the later as ⲡⲁⲗⲁⲗⲁⲅ (“water wheel”), perhaps “Aquarius”, although Aquarius in Demotic was “the water” (pꜣ mw i.e. ⲥⲡ-ⲙⲟⲟⲩ); an alternative might be Scorpio, attested in Coptic as ⲧⲉⲗⲏ (Spiegelberg 1910: 147). If it were a stellar body, ⲁⲅⲣⲱⲧⲁⲣⲥ might refer to one of the planets or constellations identified with Horus, whose name might be found in -ⲅⲣ-. Here we interpret ⲁⲅⲣⲱ as a question, and propose to read the following word as ⲧⲟⲣⲉ (cf. PCM I 4 p. 4 l. 1), “arrow”, which, if a constellation, might refer to Sagittarius (Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming a).

11–12. ⲁⲃⲧⲙⲉⲗⲗⲉⲭ : “Abdemelech” Perhaps the “Kushite” referred to in l. 4; the target of the spell is to sleep until the sun of the Kushite (i.e., Abdemelech) rises, that is, until he awakens; cf. the note to PCM I 6 l. 20.

1. Front ll. 1–22: Prayer for pregnancy (KYP T482)

2. Back ll. 1–20: Account of wine (KYP T1563; TM 85366)

A well-preserved papyrus sheet, with some damage to the lower left, containing a prayer for pregnancy on the front and an account of wine on the back. The manuscript was part of a lot bought from the Cairo-based dealer Maurice Nahman by Francis Willey Kelsey, who brought it to Rome in 1920. It was then purchased by Henri Hyvernât on behalf of John Pierpont Morgan (Jr.), and is now kept in the Pierpont Morgan Museum.¹

The prayer is written in black ink, with crosses marking the beginning and the end of the text. The account on the back is written in two different hands at 180° to the front. The rough surface of the manuscript led the copyists on both sides to jump across sections of pre-existing damage,² and makes it difficult to be sure of the extend of folding; 10 horizontal creases may be visible. Kollēsis is apparent on the left side of the sheet (viewed from the front). The order of the writing of the two sides is not immediately apparent; the writing of the accounts on the vertical fibres does not follow the normal practice for such documents, and suggests that this was the later re-use. In this case, it may be that the copyist of the prayer decided to begin on the horizontal fibres of this sheet since the damaged surface, worse on the vertical fibres, made this the more sensible choice.

The hand is fairly, but not entirely, regular, with varying letterforms and sizes, a right-sloping bimodal majuscule, with ⲃ, ⲕ, ⲣ, ⲧ, and ⲉ showing a tendency towards quadrilinearity. Letters are sometimes deliberately enlarged, as where one marks a divine name at the beginning of l. 18. ⲁ has a rounded bowl, with a short oblique stroke, sometimes with a slight serif at its lower end. ⲃ and ⲕ are large, and ⲁ, ⲕ, and ⲁ have curling serifs at their tips. The points of ⲙ are rounded, the central downward point clearly marked rather than flattened. ⲧ is highly mannered, with a right-facing serif on its descender, and often another on the left side of its horizontal bar, so that it can at times resemble a ⲉ. ⲧ is also regularly ligatured to the following letter, as is ⲉ. ⲥ is very small, shaped like a Latin minuscule y. ⲟ has a flattened central apex, at times resembling q. Parallels to this hands can be found in manuscripts dated by their editors to the seventh or eighth centuries,³ although we cannot point to any specific dated parallels. Alain Delattre suggests that the account on the back shows features typical of seventh-century examples, suggesting that the earlier magical text should also be dated to this century.⁴

The dialect is a non-standard Sahidic, with some common features—haplography of ⲛ & ⲙ, and the writing of ⲃ for ⲙ. The absence of ⲛ > ⲙ assimilation before labial consonants is perhaps indicative of a broadly Middle Egyptian origin,⁵ and we find occasional aphaeresis of an initial ⲉ (e.g., l. 22), doubling of consonants, with the unmarked consonant preceding the aspirated or voiced variant (ⲭ > ⲕⲭ, ⲙ > ⲙⲙ in ll. 8, 12), and omission of a nasal before a stop (ⲛⲧ > ⲧ, ll. 15, 16).

The account on the back is of considerable interest for determining the context of the earlier prayer;⁶ it consists of a series of records of deliveries and payments of wine made on the 9th and 10th Koiak (6th & 7th December), written on the left in one hand, with a second hand copying the figures and writing totals and additions to the right. Similar accounts have been found at the monasteries of Apa Apollo at Bawit and Apa Thomas at Wadi Sarga.⁷ Two monks are mentioned as recipients of wine in ll. 16–17, Ounobre and Apollō, both referred to by the title “my brother” (ⲡⲁⲕⲟⲛ) typical of texts from Bawit,⁸ and Apollō is described as coming from the nearby city of Assiut. The prayer therefore likely belonged to one of the inhabitants of the monastery of Bawit, and was re-used for accounts when it was no longer needed; papyri from Bawit are known to be among those acquired by the Pierpont Morgan from Nahman in 1920.⁹

|^{Greek} + O Master, Almighty Lord God, |^{Coptic} since from the beginning, you created man according to your likeness and according to your image, and you also honoured the barren woman and the one who gives birth, you |⁵ yourself said to our mother Sarah: “By this time next year you will have a child”. Again in this way, I entreat you and I invoke you, you who sit upon the *cherubim, that you listen to my prayer today, I, NN, son of NN, |¹⁰ over this *cup of wine that is in my hand, so that when I give it to NN, the daughter of NN, you will grace her with a seed of man! Yea, Lord, you who listen to anyone who calls upon you, *Adonai Elon *Sabaoth, god of gods |¹⁵ and lord of lords, even if a man has bound a phylactery to her, even if someone has given her an enchanted cup, even if it is from you, may the *binding of her womb be released, and [of her] navel? and of her belly!

I adjure you |²⁰ by your great name and by the sufferings you received upon the cross, that you accomplish every word which has been spoken over this cup which is in my hand! +

2–3. ΚΑΤΑ ΠΕΚΝΙΝΕ ΔΥΩ ΚΑΤΑ ΤΕΚΡΙΚΩΝ : “according to your likeness and according to your image” An allusion to Genesis 1.26: “God said, “Let us make a man according to our image and according to our likeness” (ΠΕΧΔΙ ΝΟΙ ΠΝΟΥΤΕ ΧΕ ΜΑΡΕΝΤΑΜΙΟ ΝΟΥΡΩΝΕ ΚΑΤΑ ΤΕΝΚΡΙΚΩΝ · ΔΥΩ ΚΑΤΑ ΠΕΝΕΙΝΕ; Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin Ms. or. fol. 1605 fol. 1v col. 1 ll. 10–15). For other references to this passage, see PCM I 26 p. 3 ll. 25–26, p. 4 l. 12, p. 5 l. 1, p. 9 31–32, p. 11 l. 17, p. 15 ll. 19–20.

5. ΔΚΧΟΟΣ ΕΤΕΝΜΑΔΥ ΣΑΡΑ : “(you), yourself said to our mother Sarah” A reference to Genesis 17.15–18.15, 21.1–3, in which God promises Abraham that his wife Sarah will bear a child, Isaac, despite the fact that Abraham is one hundred years old and Sarah ninety; the miraculous pregnancy of Sarah serves as a model for God’s capacity to allow women to conceive. For a similar Jewish text from the Cairo Genizah intended to make a woman give birth quickly, drawing upon the prototype of Sarah and other Biblical mothers (including Eve, Hagar, Rebecca, Lea, Rachel, and Zipporah), see MTKG I T.-S. NS 322.10 1a ll. 12–28.

14. ΕΛΩΝ : “Elon” Cf. PCM I 34 p. 3 l. 3 [.]¹ΩΝ, and *Eloei in the glossary.

15. ΝΟΥΦΥΛΑΚΤΗΡΙΟΝ : “a phylactery” The reference to “binding a phylactery” as a possible cause of infertility is surprising; normally a “phylactery” refers to an amulet which would itself represent a source of healing. It is possible that this therefore represents a case in which anti-‘magic’ discourse is being deployed; the woman may have previously sought out the use of a phylactery which has harmed her and may itself constitute the source of the problem. Compare the story reported in Augustine, City of God 22.8, in which a woman receives a miraculous cure from a long illness when she throws away an amuletic belt which she had been given by a Jewish practitioner. The other possible causes for infertility envisaged here are clearer—that someone has given her a curse in the form of a potion (cf. note to PCM I 26 p. 16 l. 9), or that God himself has caused it.

19. [ΤΕΣ]ΝΕΠΗΛ : “navel?” Perhaps understand ⁵ελπε, “navel” with a loss of the initial ε and λ-π metathesis; compare the additional η added in ll. 3, 4 (ΠΕΚΝΙΝΕ, ΤΑΘΗΝΗ).

Complete papyrus codex with binding intact, consisting of 30 pages (15 folios), each page inscribed in single columns of 27–30 lines in black ink. The codex consists of 3 quires: quire 1 is a ternion (folios 1–6), quire 2 a quaternion (folios 7–14), quire 3 a singleton (folio 15). The folios are numbered on the verso (even pages), except for folio 1, which is numbered on both sides; the numbering goes directly from ς (6, p. 12) to η (8, p. 14) so that the final folio is numbered 16 (ις) instead of 15.¹ The quires are likewise numbered from 1–3 on their rectos (odd pages). The stitching was reinforced by slim parchment guards, visible along the spines of pages 6–7 and 20 (i.e., between quires 1 and 2); the parchment can be identified as the remains of a Psalter, preserving portions of Psalms 96 (97) 7 and

93 (94) 8.² There is considerable damage to the lower right parts of the first two folios (pp. 1–4, viewed from the front), as well as to the eighth folio (pp. 15–16) perhaps caused by worms. Damage on the other pages is generally restricted to the margins (as on fol. 3, 14–15=pp. 5–6, 27–30), or to abrasion of the ink.

The covers are intact, formed by a papyrus leaf wrapped around chunks of papyrus and other organic material to form thick boards, then covered by two separate pieces of leather. A light coloured parchment strip was interleaved through slits cut in the leather to create decoration on the front and back cover—a circle inside a square inside a rectangle. Four loops of leather on the back (one each at top and bottom, two on the outside edge), probably corresponding to lost clasps on the front, would have served to close the codex when it was not in use; a surviving leather strand on the upper outside corner of the back cover may be the remains of a bookmark.³

The manuscript was acquired by the National Museum of Antiquities of Leiden as part of the 1828 purchase from Jean d’Anastasy (1765–1860), Consul General of Sweden and Norway in Egypt.⁴ It appears in the sale catalogue (RMO inv. 3.1.6), on p. 95 as no. 9. In their edition, Pleyte and Boeser state that that it was found in Thebes by d’Anastasy in January 1829, but this is impossible based on the timeline of the sale; the catalogue was prepared in 1827, and January 1829 is in fact the date of the shipment’s arrival in Leiden.⁵ Although no provenance is given in the catalogue, many of the manuscripts from this sale did come from Thebes,⁶ and its format closely resembles that of other codices from the Theban region.⁷

The manuscript is written in a very consistent formal literary hand, an upright unimodular, bilinear Coptic majuscule characterised by PATHs as a “mixed” hand, and by Boud’hors as tending towards the Biblical majuscule.⁸ Supralinear strokes are short and curved, and diaeresis is often written as a single flattened dot. Ekthesis and enlargement of the first letter occurs at the beginning of certain texts, often also marked by dashed horizontal lines and diplai in the margins; on several ² We are grateful to Anne Boud’hors and Frank Feder for their help in identifying these passages. For similar parchment fragments likely used as guards, see Boud’hors/Garel 2016: 48–49.

pages more elaborate decoration divides texts and marks titles. Before writing, the scribe marked the corners of the textblock with pinpricks to serve as guides.⁹ The ink, very opaque under ultraviolet light but less so under near-infrared light, may be identified as an iron gall ink (a mixture of iron and tannins).¹⁰

Trismegistos and Sanzo 2014 (82) date the text to the sixth century, while PATHs, following Proverbio (1997: 161–162) date it to the fifth to sixth centuries. Sanzo 2019a (236) has more recently followed a later, sixth to eighth century dating. The dating of the closest parallels, from Thebes, rests uncertain, but we follow Sanzo 2019a in proposing a date from the late sixth to eighth centuries, based on the analysis of the best studied of the manuscripts with similar hands and formats, and the archaeological context of other Theban codices.¹¹

The dialect is a form of Sahidic very close to the literary standard. The non-standard forms we find are generally the most common—haplography, dittography, and the occasional exchange of schwa/ε, ε/η, β/ϕ.

The manuscript contains a number of amuletic texts, most known from other contexts. The first text of the manuscript is the Prayer of Gregory, a protective prayer with later parallels in Greek.¹² The second text is likewise an amuletic prayer, without a title or known parallels. The third and fourth texts consist of the well-known Jesus-Abgar correspondence, while the fifth is a prayer attributed to Judas Cyriacus taken from the literary text known as the Finding of the Holy Cross. The sixth and seventh texts are lists of the names of saints, while the final text consists of the incipits of the canonical gospels and Psalm 90 (91). These texts are more fully discussed in the accompanying notes, in particular those of their first pages.

Note that Pleyte and Boeser use the sign = in their edition to indicate words which continue over multiple lines, but this is not present in the codex.

¹⁰ Jacobi/Scheper/Menei forthcoming.

¹¹ Cf. n. 6 above for close parallels. Behlmer/Alcock (1996: 3) date BM EA 71005 to the seventh century, without excluding a late sixth century date; on the larger context see Boud'hors 2008; Boud'hors 2017a, who notes that most papyrus codices from the Theban region date to the seventh or eighth centuries.

A prayer and an adjuration which I wrote, I, Gregory, the servant of the living God, so that it might be a |⁵ phylactery to all who will take it and read it, that it might undo every working that comes about through evil men, |¹⁰ that is sorceries and enchantments and *bindings of men through terrible sicknesses, and jealousy |¹⁵ and envy and idleness, that is not finding any work to do, and in general every [matter] that we know about |²⁰ and that we do not know about, and every thing [that] comes about through meddlesome men and cunning [men ...] |²⁵ evil.

I invoke you, O Lord God almighty, I, Gregory, [your]

p. 1 l.1–p. 14 l. 14. Prayer of Gregory: As first noted by Crum (1899), parallel versions of the Prayer of Gregory are attested in several Greek codices dating from at least the eleventh to sixteenth centuries CE, suggesting that this was its original language (Strittmatter 1930: 178; Strittmatter 1932: 141–144; Nesseris 2021: 93–94 with n. 12; Kropp 1931: II 169). This text belongs to a larger genre of exorcistic prayers attributed to saints which are common in Greek magical and liturgical handbooks; parallels exist in other languages, notably Syriac (see the discussion on p. 23). Other examples are attributed to figures such as John Chrysostom, Basil of Caesarea, Athanasius of Alexandria, and Ephraim the Syrian (Delatte 1927: 125, 230–263; Nesseris 2021: 91–97). Like the later Greek examples, the Prayer of Gregory makes extensive use of adjurations (“I adjure you...”), but only against negative external forces (demons, diseases, and evil acts), unlike many of the other magical texts in this collection, which also adjure God and his subordinate beings, such as the saints and the angels. The Gregory to whom the prayer is attributed is unclear; the versions published by Strittmatter (1932: 141–144) are attributed to Gregory Thaumaturgus (ca. 213–270 CE), while that first noted by Crum (Kropp 1931: II 169) is attributed to Gregory the Theologian, i.e., Gregory of Nazianzus (ca. 329–390 CE).

24–25. ⲛⲧⲓ ca. 5 | ⲙⲁⲣⲓⲟⲛⲏⲣⲟⲥ : “[...] evil” Boeser translates “depraved men” (“hommes dépravés”), Lexa “cowardly” (“lâches”), and Kropp “bad [men?]” (“böse [Menschen?]”).

5–7. κεχαρεξ ετεριη νι ερουν : μη τεριη νι εβολ : “may you watch over the entrance and the exit” Compare Psalm 120 (121).8: “He (the Lord) will watch over your coming and going forever and ever” (κηχαρεξ ετεκσινει ερουν μη τεκσινει εβολ ца енез ꙗеуеz; Budge 1898: 135); Anna Cherkashina is thanked for identifying this allusion.

10–13. ηεχηα ετσολεπ εβολ : μη ηεχηωρημα ετηπ εροϋ : “its open places and and its lands that belong to it” Boeser translates, “its fields and lands, with their surrounding areas” (“ses champs et ses terres, avec leurs dépendances”). Lexa translates “their visible and hidden places, their fields and gardens” (“leurs lieux visibles et leurs lieux cachés, leurs champs et leurs jardins”).

23–24. ηχιησους νιη [ετ]ωροп ογχι ηε/μα νι[μ] : “every act of violence that has been done against every place” Here and elsewhere, Boeser translates “malicious spirits, which are (hidden everywhere) in the place” (“esprit malins qui sont, (cachés partout) en l’endroit”). Lexa translates “violence that could arise at any location” (“violence qui pourrait naître à n’importe quel lieu”). The term “acts of violence” (ηχιησους) translates the Greek ἀδικήματα, and seems to refer broadly to any intentional evil carried out against the text’s beneficiary (cf. Strittmatter 1932: 141.20 et passim).

is ordained to happen, or if someone *bound a place, having placed in it the bond of deceit, hidden in its ^{|5} foundations, or in its extended places, or in its entrance or in its exit, or in the door, or in the window, or in the ^{|10} bedroom or in the yard, or in the dining-room or in the courtyard in the middle of it, or in the field, or among the fruits, or in the garden, or at a ^{|15} forked road or crossroad, or in a fruitless tree, or in the waters that are in the rivers or in the canals, or in vineyards, or ^{|20} in any place!

O acts of violence, every one that has happened, or that is among those ordained to happen, [I] adjure you, I, Gregory, the servant of Jesus ^{|25} Christ?, the great name that [is fearful] and that is filled with trembling and terror, that is

3–20. The “bond of deceit” and list of sites: The “bond of deceit” here seems to refer to a binding curse (Greek κατάδεσμος, “binding, bond”) which has been buried either somewhere in the home of the victim, or in one of the common sites of deposition, in a body of water or a crossroad; not mentioned here, but present in one of the partial Greek parallels (Reitzenstein 294 n. 3, cf. note to ll. 14–16) is a grave, another common site for depositing curses. In the Classical Greek tradition which was transmitted to Egypt, curses were often written on lead tablets and folded before deposition, but in Egypt papyrus and other supports, such as ostraca, were also often used. For a discussion of depositing curses, cf. Gager 1992: 18–21, and cf. *Binding and Releasing in the glossary. In addition to the mediaeval Greek parallels, similar lists of potential means of cursing are found in Syriac Christian and mediaeval Jewish magic; for a Syriac example see Dickens/Smelova 2021: 120, 127–130; for Jewish magic, see T-S K 1.168, ll. 108–112, in Schiffmann/Swartz 1992: 143–159. In comments published in Dickens/Smelova 2021, Gideon Bohak compares such lists to those found in the “Spell-loosener of Hanina ben Dosa”, a late antique Jewish Aramaic text which continued to be used into the 20th century, in which he sees a Judaised version of older Mesopotamian anti-witchcraft texts, such as the Maqlû (“burning”) series, attested by the ninth century BCE. For the “spell-loosener”, see Bohak 2019, and for similar lists in the Maqlû, see Abusch 2015: esp. tablet iv 10–73 (317–323), with discussions in Abusch 2011; Schwemer 2014: 274–276.

10. ܡܳܕܳܝܳܬܳܐ : “yard” Respectively, Boeser, Lexa, and Kropp translate “stable” (“écurie”, “Stall”).

14–16. ܳܘܳܕܳܝܳܬܳܐ ܳܥܳܘ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ : ܳܦ ܳܩܳܠܳܬܳܐ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ : “or in a forked road or crossroad” Previous translators (Boeser, Kropp, Lexa, Pernigotti, Smith) have translated as “in two or three items of clothing”, but there is no tradition of placing curses in items of clothing. The solution is provided by a partial Greek parallel in BnF Gr. 2316 (KYP M3784) fol. 435v l. 14, which gives ἐν διοδία ἢ ἐν τριοδία (“at a fork or crossroads”; Reitzenstein 294 n. 3), these terms literally referring to a place where three or four roads meet, a common place to leave curses in the Greek binding tradition and its successors. The putative ܳܠ read by previous editors seems rather to be an ܳܥ. Compare also the instructions to bury a curse at “a crossroads” (ܳܘܳܕܳܝܳܬܳܐ ܳܥܳܘ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ) in P.Vindob. K 880 (Stegemann 1933–1934: no. 3; KYP M239) l. 49. For the form, cf. ܳܕܳܠ for ܳܕܳܠ Kasser CDC 95a.

16. ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ : “road” We understand this as part of the preceding clause (ܳܩܳܠܳܬܳܐ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ). Previous translators have read ܳܦ ܳܕܳܠ with Boeser, and restored ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ afterwards, i.e. “fruit trees”, assuming that the scribe forgot to copy the clause. The traces do not seem to fit this, however, and the text already includes “fruits and gardens/orchards” (ܳܦ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ) in ll. 13–14.

19. ܳܕܳܠ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ : ܳܡ ܳܕܳܠ ܳܡܳܠܳܬܳܐ : “or in the canals, or in vineyards” Kropp and Lexa translate “in the fields or in the gardens” (“dans les champs ou dans les jardins”, “in den Wiesen oder in den Gärten”). Boeser translates “or in the terrains” (“soit dans les terrains”).

glorious, and the honoured one, worthy of prostration, the indescribable one, the ..., the name that is holy and [|]⁵ blessed, *Adonai *Eloei *Elemas *Sabaoth, that you release and you withdraw from everyone who [|]¹⁰ will recite in themselves this prayer, and every place in which it will be put, and all those belonging to it, and that you go, each one [|]¹⁵ of you, upon the head of the one who sent you to do these abominations, and upon the head of the ones who consented to them, whether it is a [|]²⁰ foreigner, or it is someone who is related to him, or a it is someone who is passing by, or a slave, or a free person, or it is a magician, or a [|]²⁵ female magician, or a Persian man, or a Persian woman,

3–4. ⲁⲧⲭⲟⲟⲛⲓ : “ ... ” The meaning of this word is unclear; Boeser suggested either reading ⲁⲧⲭⲱ (“ineffable”), or the (unattested) ⲁⲧⲭⲱⲛⲓ (cf. Crum CD 776b–777a), which he translates as “inaccessible” (“inabordable”), followed by Kropp as “unreachable” (“unerreichbar”), and Smith as “unencounterable”. One of the Greek parallel texts has ἀχράντου in this place (Strittmatter 1932: 142 n. ll. 1–2), so it is possible that this is an error for ⲁⲧⲭⲱⲛⲓ (“undefiled”), its Coptic equivalent (cf. Crum CD 798b).

8–12. ⲛⲧⲉⲧⲛⲁⲛⲁⲭⲟⲣⲓ ⲛⲥⲁⲃⲟⲗ ⲛⲟϥⲟⲛ ⲛⲓⲙ ⲉⲧⲟϥⲛⲁⲧⲁⲟϥⲟ ⲛⲉⲣⲏⲧⲓ ⲛⲧⲉⲓⲡⲣⲟⲥⲉϥⲭⲏ : ⲛⲁ ⲛⲓⲙ ⲉⲧⲟϥⲛⲁⲕⲁⲥ ⲛⲉⲣⲏⲧⲓ : “and you withdraw from everyone who will recite in themselves this prayer, and every place in which it will be put” Smith translates “withdraw from every one near whom this prayer shall be recited”. Kropp translates “from every ‘place’ where this prayer is said, or from every prayer, or from any place where it is laid down” (“zurückweichet von einem jeden ‘Orte’ an dem man dieses Gebet aussprechen wird, oder von einem jeden Orte, an dem man es niederlegt”).

p. 51. 17–p. 61. 7. List of Potential Culprits: A list of all potential enemies who might have harmed the beneficiary of the ritual through magic, the evil eye, or some other means, expressed in terms of relationship to the beneficiary (foreigner/relation/passers-by), social status (enslaved/free person), socio-ethnic identity (magician, Persian, Chaldaean, Hebrew, Egyptian), and gender (male/female). Our translation of the initial lines, which posed problems for previous translators (see apparatus) is confirmed by the Greek versions gathered in Strittmatter 1932 (142.4–8); these later lists give different socio-ethnic options—magician, Persian, Syrian, Egyptian, Anatolian, Hebrew, Indian, French, and African (μάγος/μάγισσα, Πέρσης/Πέρσις, Σύρος/Σύραινα Αἰγύπτιος/Αἰγυπτία, Ἀσιανός/Ασιανή, Ἑβραῖος/Ἑβραία, Ἰνδός, Γάλλος, Ἀφρός/Ἀφρά)—demonstrating the tendency of such lists to expand according to the horizons of the redactor. Similar lists of ethnic identities appear in other Christian amuletic texts, with many of the most striking examples in Ge’ez: “undo the spells of Arabs and of Romans... of Jews and Ethiopians... of Muslims and Christians... of foreign Muslims and Europeans...” (Streclyn 1955: 119, cf. pp. xix–xx, 13, 37, 55, 119 etc.). Similar lists of potential enemies can be found in older Egyptian ritual texts, such as the execration texts listing national enemies (e.g., Fischer-Elfert 2005: 60, cf. the discussion of lists in amulets on pp. 22–23), and in the amulet P.Berol. 3027 ro col. 2 ll. 6–10, against a female enemy who may be a Levantine (zm.t), Nubian (nhsy.t), slave (hm.t), or noble (šps.t; Borghouts 1978: no. 66; XVIII Dynasty). Similar lists also appear in the Mesopotamian anti-witchcraft Maqlû (“burning”) series (cf. note to p. 4 ll. 3–20); see Abusch 2015: tablet iv 80–92 (324), which likewise lists possible adversaries in terms of relationship to the beneficiary, ethnic identity, and profession. For the listing of both genders of each ethnic group, cf. the note to PCMI 12 p. 37 ll. 18–20.

have it in their hand as a phylactery, and save them again from every evil thing and every evil!

Again, ¹⁵ I adjure you, every act of violence, by the great name that is glorious, God Almighty—the one who brought his people out from ¹⁰ the land of Egypt with a strong hand and an exalted arm, the one who struck Pharaoh and all his power, the one who ¹⁵ spoke with Moses on the mountain of Sinai as he gave his law and his ordinance to the children of Israel, and he caused him to ²⁰ eat manna—that you flee far away, and you do not return at all to stand ²⁵ in the place in which is placed this prayer!

Yet again, I, Gregory,

10–12. οὐσίχ εσχοορ ἡν οὐσβοῖ εφχοσε : “a strong hand and an exalted arm” These are recurrent phrases in the Hebrew Bible; cf. Exodus 13.16 “For with a strong hand the Lord brought you out of the land of Egypt” (εἰραι εἰν οὐσίχ εσχοορ ἀπχοεῖς ἡτῆν εβολ εἰν πκαε ἡκῆμε; Kasser 1961: 164); Exodus 32.11 “you brought them (i.e., the Israelites) out of the land of Egypt with your great power and your exalted arm” (ἡτκακῆτοῦ εβολ εἰν πκαε ἡκῆμε εἰραι εἰν τεκνοσ ἡβον ἡν πεκβοῖ ετχοσε; Maspero 1892: 46).

the servant of the living God, I invoke you, you, every act of violence, by the great name that ^{|5} is fearful of the Father of our Lord, Jesus Christ, the god of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, just as you acted together, whether ^{|10} it was magic, or idols, or from places of worship, or any place you were sent from to cause ^{|15} terror and torments and dumbness and deafness and speechlessness and disgrace of his face? ^{|20} and all types of pain, whether you have come near or are far away, be afraid before the name of the Lord, ^{|25} and withdraw yourselves from every place in which this prayer will be read

8–9. ἵκε ἐτετῆνο ἡμος εἰ ὄντων : “just as you acted together” Smith translates “all at once.” Kropp translates “according to what you all are” (“gemäss dessen, was ihr allzumal seid”). For our translation, cf. Crum CD 350a.

10. ἡντμαγος : “a magic” Boeser translates “magic objects” (“objets magiques”).

12–13. ἡταγνεγτηγῆν ἡρητογ : “you were sent from” Smith translates “to which you have been sent” Smith but cf. Crum CD 420a.

19. γενῆνταῖς εἶρα : “disgrace of his face” We are unable to find a parallel for this phrase; the literal translation is “disgrace/ugliness of his face/voice” (εἶρα from either γο or γροογ), and in the past the phrase has been translated by Boeser as “deformity of the face” (“la difformité de face”), by Smith as “disgrace”, by Kropp as “ugliness of the speech” (“Hässlichkeit der Sprache”), and by Lexa as “paralysis of the face” (“la paralysie de face”). The phrase probably refers to something specific. We might understand a concept inversely related to that of the “favour of the face” (παρις ἡρη), the quality that makes one socially popular and successful; in this case, this would be a reference to a curse to make someone hated, for examples of which see PCM I 22 ll. 27–50; PCM I 27; P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front ll. 52–84; and cf. Dosoo 2018: 21; Dosoo 2023a: 174–176. See also Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 2.

5–6. ⲛⲧⲁⲣⲁⲛⲉ ⲛⲙⲱⲧⲉⲛ : “who brought you” Smith translates “who is like you.”

12–24. List of angel names and interpretations: Several of the interpretations here demonstrate genuine knowledge of Hebrew on the part of the composer (cf. Davidson 1967: 117, 240, 324). Gabriel’s name is indeed composed of the Hebrew elements “man” (גִּבֹּר geber) and “god” (אֱלֹהִים ’ēl); compare the Scala Magna, whose definition of Gabriel is likewise “Man and God” (φρῶμι οὐροϕϱ; Macomber 2020: 198). See also PCMI 26 p. 3 l. 20, in which Michael claims “my name is God and man” (ⲛⲁⲣⲁⲛ ⲉⲣⲙⲱⲧⲉ ⲉⲣⲛⲱⲙⲉ). The first element of Raphael similarly derives from the root “to heal” (רָפָא rāpā), while that of Sedekiël is “justice” (צֶדֶק sedeq). Anaël may be derived here from the verb “to answer, respond” (עָנָה ’ānāh; we thank Ortal-Paz Saar for this suggestion). The rationale behind the other derivations given here is less obvious to us. A similar list of angel names and their interpretations may be found in PGMP 14 (KYP M435; we thank Michel Zellmann-Rohrer for the reference). For other Coptic lists of angels and their associated attributes, see The Book of Bartholomew (CC 27; ed. Westerhoff 1999: 136–139); P.Lond.Copt. 524 (KYP M359) front ll. 116–19.

everyone who has these with them, carrying them, have with them a great help, which is filled |⁵ with every good thing, for God is with us.

Listen, you <who come> from the end of the earth, for God is with us, for when you |¹⁰ are strong, again, you will be defeated, for God is with us, and the scheme that you prepare, the Lord will bring it to naught, |¹⁵ and the words that you will say, they shall not remain within you, for God is with us. A stone of stumbling and a rock of offence, |²⁰ do not permit them to dare approach those who have this prayer with them, for God is with us, for everyone who |²⁵ will bring this prayer to the place within which the prayer will be put will not fear your fear, nor will they be disturbed, for God is with us.

But you, yourselves, every one [|]⁵ who has with them this prayer of this entreaty, the Lord God will purify him of you, and he will be [|]¹⁰ with us as a guardian and he will deliver us from the fears of the Enemy and his demonic works, and if we are [|]¹⁵ faithful in all our heart, the Lord God will be a purification for us, for God is with us. For this reason, we will [|]²⁰ speak the word of the Lord: “Behold, I am with the children of God whom he gave to me. The people that dwell in darkness [|]²⁵ saw a great light, for God is with us”. Christ Jesus is with us, the one of whom they wrote concerning him,

 2–3, 18–19, 25–26. πνοῦτε ἡμῶν : “God is with us” Cf. the note to p. 10 ll. 6, 8, 11–12, 17, 23–24.
 7–9. πλοῖς πνοῦτε ματῶν ἡετῃς : “the Lord God will purify him of you” Smith translates “the Lord god purifies it in you”. For our translation, see Crum CD 400a.
 19–20. τεναχὼ ἡπορχε ἡπλοῖς : “we will speak the word of the Lord” Kropp compares Joshua 24: “But I and my household, we will serve the Lord” (ἀνοκ δε μν πανι ενναφμρε μπλοῖς; Thompson 1911: 124).
 21–23. εἰς ῥητε ἀνοκ μν νεφρε φημ ἡταπνοῦτε ταυ ναῖ : “behold, I am with the children of God whom he gave to me” This is a direct citation of Isaiah 8.18/Hebrews 2.13 (Horner 1920: 14).
 23–25. πλοῖς εἰς φῶς ἡ πκακε ἀφναγ εἰνος νογοῖν : “the people that dwell in darkness saw a great light” A direct citation of Isaiah 9.2, quoted in Matthew 4.16: “The people that dwell in the darkness saw a great light” (πλοῖς εἰς φῶς ῥη πκακε ἀφναγ εἰνος νογοῖν; Horner 1911: I 26).

“For they will call his name the *angel of great counsel, God who is strong, God of ⁵ great and wondrous counsel.”

Let us lift our eyes up to heaven and bless him with joy in our souls, crying out, saying, ¹⁰ “Glory and adoration and greatness are fitting for you, O Father and Son and Holy Spirit who exist in unity, ¹⁵ and a unity in a trinity; he is a single divinity in three hypostases and a single lordship and ²⁰ a single rule and a single power and a single energy and every authority, and a single person, and ²⁵ a single baptism, a single lord, a single god, the Father, and the Son and the Spirit!”

1–4. σενανογτε επεφραν δε παγγελος ηπνος νωρονης : πνογτε ετσησμον : “they will call his name the angel of great counsel, God who is strong” Cf. Isaiah 9.6–7: “they will call his name the angel of great counsel” (εγνανογτε επεφραν δε παγγελος ηπνος νωρονης; Bak 2020: 544), cf. the addition “wondrous counsellor, mighty god” (θαυμαστος συμβουλος θεος ισχυρος) found in some copies of the Septuagint (Rahlfs 1935: 574 note to l. 5).

12–26. Credal Statement: We have been unable to find an exact parallel for this credal statement, but it seems to be an adaptated citation of the Greek pseudopigraph known as the Instruction of the 318 Nicene Fathers (Didascalica CCCXVIII Patrum Nicaenorum), which claims to be the doctrinal teaching of the bishops present at the Council of Nicaea (325 CE). The work existed by ca. 435/436 CE, when it was cited by the Armenian Catholikos Sahak (Blumell 2017: 613 et passim). Specifically, it draws from the passage anathematising the Sabellian claim that God had a single hypostasis: “for we know Father is Father, and Son, Son, and Holy Spirit, Holy Spirit: one essence, one kingdom, one divinity (πατέρα γαρ οἶδαμεν πατέρα και υἱον υἱον και πνευμα ἅγιον πνευμα ἅγιον, μίαν βασιλειαν, μίαν οὐσίαν, μίαν θεότητα; Riedinger/Thurn 1985: 84). Compare the similar passage in the fourth century Ancoratus of Epiphanius of Salamis, which adds “a single baptism” (βάπτισμα μία; Holl 1915: 146 (118.3–4)), also present here (cf. Ephesians 4.5). One of the surviving Coptic versions of the Instruction (CC 19; CLM 359, 1002–1003 CE) records the variant: “We confess the Father is the Father, the Son is the Son, and the Holy Spirit is the Holy Spirit, three names, three hypostases, a single kingdom, a single essence, a single divinity, a single energy” (τῷονολογει ἡπειωτ επειωτ πε αγω παρηρ επωρηρ πε αγω πεπῖνᾶ ετογααβ επεπῖνᾶ ετογααβ πε ωρηῖτ ἡραν ωρηῖτε ἡγποστασις οἷμητερο ἡγωτ ογογσιᾶ ἡγωτ ογῖετῶτ ἡγωτ ογτριᾶς εσρεν ογμετογαι; Hyvernāt 1886: 254.9–13). “Energy” (ἐνέργεια/ἐνεργεια energeia) here refers the activity of the divinity; the term might be seen to point to a seventh-century date of composition or redaction for this text, linked to the Emperor Heraclius’ (r. 610–641) attempt to resolve the Chalcedonian schism with the compromise of Christ’s single energy (‘monoenergism’), but we consider this uncertain, since the teaching was already present in the sixth century. A letter from the miaphysite patriarch Damian of Alexandria (r. 578–605 CE) preserved in the Chronicle of Michael the Syrian (Patriarch of Antioch, r. 1166–1199) proclaims “one single Son and one single nature of the incarnate Word, one single hypostasis, one single person, and one single activity” (Hovorun 2008: 50 et passim).

A slanderous thought, a thought of envy and hate and enmity and arrogance and pride [|]⁵ and disobedience and gluttony and greed, the root of every evil, and boastfulness and every slander [|]¹⁰ and every defiled thought and every bitterness! The Holy Trinity spares everyone, the Holy Trinity, purifies the man [|]¹⁵ from within and from without, it brings us to itself from every temptation that is difficult to get out of, and every work of the Devil [|]²⁰ and every work of evil and every treachery of evil men. The Holy Trinity spares everyone who [|]²⁵ has with them this seal, and those who have with them this prayer, and every place in which it will be affixed, 12–13. †ϥϥ ϥϥϥϥ ϥϥϥ : “spares everyone” Lexa translates “turns them away from everyone (“les détourne de chacun”). Kropp translates this passage up to p. 14 l. 5 as a series of imperatives, “spare each one <...>!” (“verschone einen jeden <...>!”).

17–18. ϥϥ ϥϥ ϥϥ : “that is difficult to get out of” Boeser assumes something is missing here. Kropp translates “that we come out of it” (“dass wir aus ihr hervorgehen”), Smith “from them”. Πειρασμός is apparently treated as a feminine noun in l. 18, perhaps a mistake conditioned by the same preposition with feminine pronoun in l. 16 (ϥϥ, referring to the grammatically feminine word τρία “Trinity”).

so that it will be for them a phylactery and a remedy and every healing in⁷ every pain of every sort. |⁵ Let the Holy Trinity be with us, the glory and honour and greatness |⁸ and the power of the consubstantial and life-giving Holy Trinity, now and |¹¹ at all times, forever and ever, amen!

13. προσεῦχη ἁγίου γρηγορίου : “The Prayer of Saint Gregory” This is an end title, referring to the preceding text, as is clear from the parallels discussed in the notes to p. 1. Pleyte/Boeser, Boeser, Kropp, Pernigotti (1995), and Smith, mistakenly consider this line and the decorative lines surrounding it to be the title of the next prayer, which is in fact without a title.

 These names are probably to be understood as deriving from Emmanuel, from Hebrew עִמָּנוּאֵל (Īmmānū’ēl, “God is with us”), from Isaiah 7.14: “Behold, the virgin will become pregnant and she will give birth to a boy, and they will call him ‘Emmanuel’ (εἰς τὴν παρθένον ἡ σὺν τοῦ υἱοῦ γεννητὴν ἡ τέκνη μὲν οὖν ἐπεφραν καὶ ἐμμανουήλ; Bāk 2020: 536). In Matthew 1.22–23 this prophecy is explicitly made to refer to Jesus, so that ‘Emmanuel’ can be understood as another name of Jesus. The form ‘Manouēl’ may have arisen from a reanalysis in Coptic in which the initial e is understood as part of ⲭⲉ. Manouēl is also found as a name of Jesus in p. 17 l. 4 of this manuscript, as well as PCM I 12 p. 31 l. 8, p. 37 l. 8; PCM I 25 p. 17 ll. 34–35; PCM I 26 p. 12 l. 13; BL Ms Or. 6796 (Kropp 1931: I no. K 204 + 205 + 282 §2.27 l. 8 (Hevesi 2018; KYP M92). Compare also the name ‘Methemōn’, based on the Greek translation of the name in Matthew 1.23, for which see PCM I 25 p. 11 l. 6. Ortal-Paz Saar points out that Semanouēl might be understood as a writing of the Hebrew שְׁמַעֲנוּ אֵל (šəməā’ēnū’ēl “hear us, God”).

22. ⲉⲧⲛⲏⲩ ⲉⲡⲁⲓ : “rising up” Lexa hesitantly translates “descend” (“descendez en bas(?)”).

gate of the west, come to me, listen to my humble word, Akhaēl, Aēl, Manouēl, |⁵ Edekiēl, Sntaēl, Kheroubin, Kherinaēl, Sarinaēl, Arinataēl! O *cherubim and *seraphim who stand before the |¹⁰ face of Christ, come to me today!

Listen to my adjuration, O creatures of the archangels, *Michael, *Gabriel, *Raphael, |¹⁵ Uriel, Sedekiēl, Arael, Setēl, Azael, those who stand in the presence of he who dwells in heavens, the seven names |²⁰ worthy of hearing, they that, when any among the *angels and all his living creatures name them, the earth trembles, |²⁵ the mountains shake, the waters rejoice on account of the great light of his name: *Adonai *Eloei Alphamiēl, holy, Lord *Sabaoth, the heavens and the earth are full of your glory and your blessing!”

Rejoice, |⁵ all you creatures, for the Lord rose from the dead on the third day and he freed the entire race of Adam, |¹⁰ and he despoiled the Jews, who were ashamed of what they had done, and he met his disciples and gave them the good news, the great Alpha |¹⁵ who is established by all these things. Let them be ashamed, those who love the Devil, and fall down before this prayer. |²⁵ Every evil spirit, every unclean spirit, every sorcery, every impiety, withdraw yourselves; it is Christ Jesus who chases

3–4. ̒ⲙ ⲡⲉⲕⲉⲟⲟϥ · ̒ⲙ̅̅ ⲡⲉⲕⲥ̅ⲙⲟϥ : “your glory and your blessing” The *Sanctus usually ends with the phrase “your glory” (Greek δόξης σου, Coptic ⲡⲉⲕⲉⲟⲟϥ). The ending “your blessing” added here seems to attest to a variant also found in the sixth/seventh century BM EA 54036 (Quecke 1971; for the date see Mihálykó 2019: 294), a Coptic copy of the Anaphora of Mark containing the end of the reprise of the Sanctus by the priest. In this reprise “your blessing” (ⲡⲉⲕⲥ̅ⲙⲟϥ) replaces “your glory” (ⲡⲉⲕⲉⲟⲟϥ) at the end of the Sanctus, perhaps anticipating the following request to “fill this offering too... with your blessing” (ⲙⲉⲛ ⲧⲉἰ̅ϥⲥⲓⲁ ⲟⲩ : ⲙⲡⲛⲟϥⲧⲉ ̒ⲙ̅̅ ⲡⲉⲕⲥ̅ⲙⲟϥ). The inclusion of both here may imply that the composer of this text was aware of this variant and chose to harmonise it with the more common “your glory”. Note that the version here combines the Greek and Coptic versions of the Sanctus. We are very grateful to Ágnes Mihálykó for suggesting this possibility to us.

14–15. ⲡⲛⲟⲥ ̒ⲛⲁⲗⲗⲁ : “the great Alpha” Pleyte translates “he, the great Alpha”, Lexa translates similarly (“lui le grand Alpha”).

15–16. ⲉⲧⲧⲁⲭⲣⲛϥ ⲉⲭ̅ⲛ ⲛⲁἰ̅ ⲧⲏⲣⲟϥ : “who is established by all these things” Smith translates “that is stronger than anything”, but the comparative would be expressed with ⲉ-/ⲉⲣⲟⲥ; cf. Crum CD 463a, and, for example, Sirach 22.18: “a heart established by a wise thought will never be afraid” (ⲟϥⲛⲧ ⲉⲧⲧⲁⲭⲣⲛϥ ⲉⲭ̅ⲛ ⲟϥⲙⲉⲉϥⲉ ̒ⲙ̅̅ⲛⲧⲣ̅ⲛⲛⲧ ⲉⲛⲙⲁⲣ̅ⲣⲟⲧⲉ ⲁⲛ ⲉⲛⲉ; de Lagarde 1883: 144).

27. Pleyte omits this line in his translation.

O blood of Christ, guard everyone who carries this prayer! The Holy Trinity is
|⁵ with us all, amen.

Abgar, the king of the city of Edessa writes to the great king, the son of the living God, Jesus Christ, greetings! |¹⁰ Some people, honoured and worthy of belief, have reported about you saying that the world has been most worthy in our time |¹⁵ of your good coming through your appearance, that in which you have come to us, in our humble generation |²⁰ through your love of humanity which has existed since eternity, all enduring. So, when I heard these things, I believed firmly, |²⁵ without hesitation. And also they said that you perform great healings without

1–2 ⲡⲉⲥⲛⲟⲩ ⲙⲁⲛⲉ-ⲭⲥ : “O blood of Christ” The ‘blood of Christ’ (sometimes mentioned alongside his ‘body’) is commonly invoked in both amuletic and liturgical texts, referring simultaneously to the blood spilled during the crucifixion and its representation in the eucharistic ritual; for a recently discussion see Chepel 2017.

p. 20 l. 6–p. 25 l. 23. The Jesus-Abgar Correspondence: The pseudepigraphal letter of King Abgar of Edessa to Jesus, and Jesus’ response, are first recorded in the early fourth century Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius (13.1–20), while the evidence of Etheria (Itinerary 17.1, 19.19), a pilgrim from the Western Roman Empire, suggests the text was in circulation, perhaps as an amulet, by the 380s (Bradshaw 2020: 9–11). The version here, found in most Coptic witnesses, represents a variant adapted to be used as an amulet, as is clear from the promise that it will protect anyone who wears it or puts it in their house (p. 25 ll. 10–21). The incipit of the Jesus-Abgar correspondence is the only non-Biblical text commonly attested on scriptural amulets, demonstrating its importance as the sole text attributed directly to Jesus himself, and it is often juxtaposed with the incipits of the Gospels and Psalm 90 (91), as is the case here; cf. Sanzo 2014: 77–131, nos. 1, 4, 5, 59, 153–154, 174. For further discussion of these texts as amulets, see von Dobschütz 1900; Given 2016; Henry 2016; Polański 2016; Bélanger Sarrazin 2020; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming c; Preininger forthcoming b. But I tell you, my Lord, that if indeed we are ever deemed worthy |¹⁰ for you to trouble ⟨yourself⟩ and come to me, to the small city which I rule, it is enough for us together, and in love without envy or jealousy, |¹⁵ that you be king over us. Glory to your |²⁵ Holy Spirit, which is mighty forever! Amen.

3. πογγορ ετμοογτ : “the dead dog” As noted by Sanzo (2017: 241), this piece of anti-Jewish invective is absent from the other known versions of the Abgar letter. It may draw upon a tradition of associating Jews with dogs based on an interpretation of Paul’s warning to “beware the dogs” (†ετμητῆ ἐνεγγοορ) in Philippians 3.2, already understood by John Chrysostom as referring to Jews and Judaizing Christians (Sanzo 2017: 241; Nanos 2009: 454–455 et passim). This in turn draws upon the general Near Eastern use of “dog” as an insult or term of self-abasement (Thomas 1960: 416–417 et passim); the phrase “dead dog” specifically appears in, for example, 2 Samuel 16.9: “Who is this dead dog that he should curse my lord the king? I will go to him and take his head” (ογ πε πογγορ ετμοογτ δε εφεσαρογ ἡπαχοεις ἡρρο ἡναβωκ ερογ ἡταφι ἡτεφανε; Drescher 1970: 153).

The letter of Jesus Christ our Lord to Abgar. Amen.

The copy of the letter of Jesus Christ, the son [|]⁵ of the living God, writing to Abgar, the king of Edessa:

Greetings! You are blessed, and that which is good will happen to you, [|]¹⁰ and blessed is your city, whose name is Edessa, for you have not seen <but> you have believed, you will receive according to your faith [|]¹⁵ and according to your good intention. Your illnesses will be healed, and if you have committed many sins as  man, they will be forgiven [|]²⁰ for you, and Edessa will be blessed forever, and the glory of God will multiply among its people, and faith [|]²⁵ and love will shine in its streets. I, Jesus, it is I who commands and it is I who speak. Because you have loved greatly,

12–13. ἐπιδὼν ἡπεκνᾶς ἀκρίστευε : “for you have not seen <but> you have believed” A reference to John 20.29: “blessed are those who have not seen (me) and who have believed” (καὶ αὐτοῦ ἡπιστεῖν ποῦναι ἀκριστευε; Quecke 1984: 216).

I shall preserve your name as an eternal memory and an honour and a blessing among the generations who come after |⁵ you through your entire lineage, and they will hear it to the end of the earth. It is I, Jesus, who has written this letter with |¹⁰ my very own hand. The place to which this manuscript will be affixed, no power of the Adversary |¹⁵ nor unclean spirit will be able to approach nor to reach into that place, and forever. |²⁰ Be well in peace, amen!

The letter of our Lord Jesus Christ to Abgar. Amen.

He raised his voice in |²⁵ Hebrew and he prayed in this way, saying:

“Akrabi, Akrahei, Milas, Phinadōn, Aeir, *Eloei,

p. 25 l. 24–p. 28 l. 21. The Prayer of Judas Cyriacus: No title is given in this manuscript, but the text is recognisable as an extract from the fifth-century Finding of the Holy Cross (Inventio sanctae crucis), in which the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great (r. 306–337 CE), travels to Jerusalem to find the remains of the True Cross on which Jesus had been crucified. She enlists the help of the local Jewish population, torturing one particularly learned man named Judas Cyriacus by having him thrown into a dry well to starve until after seven days he prays to God to reveal the cross. This prayer is said to be in Hebrew, and causes the place where the cross is to make a loud sound and let forth the smell of incense. The prayer alone is excerpted here; a second Coptic copy is found on T.Varie 13 (KYP M107). The relationship between the two versions is unclear; some of the divergences between the copies are replicated in the Greek tradition, leading Pernigotti to propose that they represent independent translations of different Greek recensions (Pernigotti 1983: 86–87; Pernigotti 1989: 67). But as Ivan Miroshnikov (forthcoming) points out, the two Coptic versions begin and end at the same points, show agreements not found in the Greek witnesses, and contain some divergences best explained as miscopying from a Coptic model resembling the other copy, so that it is more likely that they represent two independent branches of a single Coptic translation. Below we provide some notes highlighting divergences between the published Coptic and Greek copies, but these are not exhaustive; a synoptic critical edition of all manuscripts is a desideratum. The text of the prayer is given first in ‘Hebrew’—in reality, a series of words resembling voces magicae with little genuine Hebrew vocabulary—followed by its translation (here, Coptic). The function of the prayer in this manuscript is unclear; it may be intended to be copied as an amulet or recited for another purpose, or it may be included simply because the opening Hebrew words could be used in other ritual contexts. Note that the Syriac version and some of the Greek manuscripts (e.g., Athens, National Library of Greece, 343 fol. 15v–25r; Delatte 1927: 289–298, at 295) lack the initial ‘Hebrew’ words, which are also absent in a re-telling of the story in the hymn found in the Coptic Difnar (XVIII CE, perhaps copy of XIV CE manuscript; O’Leary 1927: 15b); these omissions may indicate a discomfort with their potentially ‘magical’ associations. For the Finding of the Holy Cross and its textual history, see Borgehammar 1991: 145–303; Drijvers 1992: 165–180; Drijvers/Drijvers 1997: 44–45, 64; de Bruyn 2017: 87. A fragmentary Faiyumic Coptic version of the Finding of the Holy Cross, preserved as P.Berol. 5731 + 5732 (VI–VIII CE?), is under preparation for publication by Ivan Miroshnikov (forthcoming), whom we thank for discussing this text with us and helping us to improve our translation.

p. 25 l. 27–p. 28 l. 7. ‘Hebrew’ Version of the Prayer: For variants of the opening ‘Hebrew’ words in the Latin and Greek manuscripts, see Borgehammar 1991: 272–278. The words and their divisions vary significantly; most versions (including T.Varie 13 ll. 5–6) contain the genuine Hebrew sequence baroukh aththa Adonai (ברוך אתה אדני; “blessed are you, Lord”). The version here, however, retains only *Adonai, split between adjacent words to give “Phinadōn Aeir” (the second Baroukh below is a different part of the sequence). The version here is also unusually short, preserving only 24 words compared to 26 in T.Varie 13 and Sinai gr. 493 (Nestle 1895: 328).

Aamektōl, Azasēl, Boraō, Abraxiō, Athēthal, Baroukh, Ziamour, Mlmouth, Akhle, Biroba, Ermou, Kathadō, ¹⁵ Daula, Melmōn, Sesēn, Gēmnan, Jerusalem, Israel, Amen!”—whose interpretation is this:

“O God who is seated upon the cherubim, ¹⁰ *Four Living Creatures beneath him, and it is they who fly fearfully in the course of the air! O God who is in the limitless light, ¹⁵ that in which no human nature shall be able to dwell, for you, that is, you have created them for yourself as servants for your, four ²⁰ living, four-winged⁷ creatures, they who serve at every moment, calling out in an unceasing voice, ‘Holy, Holy, Holy!’, ²⁵ but the hands of two have been assigned⁷ to Paradise that they might guard Paradise, that they might guard the

p. 26 p. 8–p. 27 l. 3. Description of God, the Cherubim, and Seraphim: There are numerous divergences between the Greek and Coptic versions of the prayer (for a discussion of the manuscripts and some of the variation presented below, see Miroshnikov forthcoming, who is thanked for his observations). The Greek versions begin by addressing God as creator of heaven, earth, and/or humankind, and describe his act of measuring heaven (Gretser 1734: 428a; Wotke 1891: 307–308; Nestle 1895: 329; Olivieri 1898: 417–418; Delatte 1927: 295; references below by name alone) T.Varie 13 (front l. 12) and several of the Greek versions refer to God being seated on the chariot of the cherubim rather than the cherubim themselves (ἐξ ἡν ἡραρυ[α]; ἐπὶ ἄρματος, Nestle, Olivieri; ἄρματι in Wotke). The Greek texts describe the cherubim as “swimming in the airy courses in limitless light” (νηχόμενα ἀερίοις δρόμοις φωτὶ ἀμετρήτῳ in Wotke, Nestle, Olivieri, variations in Gretser, Delatte); in the two Coptic versions this clause is split, so that God is said to be in the limitless light, and while T.Varie 13 (l. 13) retains the description of the cherubim swimming (ἐγνήνῃς), the version in this manuscript has been emended to the more expected “fly”. The Greek versions also describe the limitless light as unreachable for human nature (ὅπου ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις παρελθεῖν οὐ δύναται in Wotke, Nestle, Olivieri, Delatte; παρέρχεται in Gretser), with T.Varie 13 (l. 15) following (ἡν φησὶς ἡρώμε ἡαυ πάρ ὡ[αροϋ]). As Miroshnikov notes, “dwell” (οἶκος) in this manuscript edited here likely derives from a visual miscopying of an earlier πάρ. The Greek versions describe God as having created six six-winged creatures (ἕξ ζῶα ἑξαπτέρυγα; absent in Delatte), of whom four, the cherubim, carry the throne of God, and two, the seraphim, have been assigned to guard the Tree of Life (“the path of the Tree of Life” (τὴν ὁδὸν τοῦ ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς) in Gretser). T.Varie 13 (ll. 16–17) likewise describes “six creatures with six wings each” (σοὺ ἡ[ζ]ωῶν ἐγν σο[οϋ] ἡτῆς ἡμοοϋ εποῦα ποῦα), but does not specify that four of them carry the chariot. The manuscript here describes four creatures with four ζωῶ; here we translate this as τῆς (“wing”), but it may also represent a confused copying of ἡτοοϋ ἡζωων (“four creatures”), paralleling the Greek ἅτινα μὲν τέσσαρα ζῶα (Wotke; Gretser, Nestle, Olivieri without ζῶα; absent in Nestle). T.Varie 13 (ll. 19–20) and the Greek texts note that they are called cherubim (ἡαῖ ετοῦμοϋτε εροοϋ χε χαίροϋν; χερουβὶμ καλεῖται Wotke; καλοῦνται Nestle, Delatte; λαβοῦνται Olivieri). The repetition for the ‘seraphim’ is present in this manuscript (p. 27 ll. 1–3), suggesting that the first instance simply dropped out in the process of transmission. T.Varie 13 (front ll. 20–21) and the Greek versions have “you placed (them) in Paradise” (ἀκκαῶγ ἡῖ ππαρῶδικοϋ; ἔθου ἐν (τῷ) παρῶδεῖσῳ), but the version here uses the phrase ἀγκα τοοτοϋ, literally “their hands have been placed”. Kropp translates “they who have not ceased” (“die nicht aufgehört haben”), but this makes the sentence negative, and would normally require the adverb εβολ to follow (cf. Crum 426a–b). As suggested by Ivan Miroshnikov, this is likely another error in transmission, originating in the ἀκκαῶγ of T.Varie 13. Finally, all of the other Coptic and Greek versions note simply that the seraphim were placed in Paradise to protect the (path leading to) the Tree of Life; it is likely that the repetition of “that they might guard” (ετρεϋποεῖς) in ll. 27 & 28 here is an instance of dittography.

Tree of Life, they who are called *seraphim. For you are Lord over all, we are |⁵ those who are yours, and your creation, God, you who handed over the angels who transgressed to the depth of *Tartarus, |¹⁰ and they are those who are guarded by the bolts of *hell as a punishment for them forever. If this is your will, |¹⁵ that the son of Mary, the true dove, rule, the one whom you sent by your hand to have him reveal your |²⁰ wonders—I know, O Lord, that unless he had come from you, he would not have performed these wonders, and unless |²⁵ he was your beloved son, he would not have arisen from the dead—

8–13. The Punishment of the Fallen Angels: We find again here minor differences between the different Coptic and Greek versions of the Prayer. In this version and the Greek versions, the fallen angels are said to be in the “depths of Tartarus” (βυθῷ ταρτάρῳ Gretser 1734, Wotke 1891, Delatte 1927; βυθῷ ταρτάρου Nestle 1895, Olivieri 1898; following references by name only), but T.Varie 13 (front l. 25) has “the depths of hell” (πῶς καὶ καὶ καὶ). In this version they are “guarded by the bolts of hell”, while the Greek versions and T.Varie 13 (front ll. 26–27) have “the abyss” (αὐτοὶ εἰσὶν ὑπὸ τὰ ἐνθυρώματα τῶν μοχλῶν τῆς ἀβύσσου Wotke, Nestle; τῶν μοχλῶν absent in Gretser, Olivieri; ὀχυρώματα τῶν μοχλευμάτων in Delatte). T.Varie 13 (front ll. 27–28) and some of the Greek versions end this section by noting that the fallen angels are “unable to gainsay to your command” (ἐμὴν ὡς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐναντιῶναι τῇ ἐντολῇ σου; τῷ σὺ προστάγματι ἀντειπεῖν οὐ δύνανται, Wotke, Olivieri, Delatte; δυνάμενοι in Nestle; absent in Gretser), a passage absent in the copy here. Again, these differences demonstrate the fluidity of the text; cf. the first notes to pp. 25 & 26.

13–21. Address to God concerning Jesus: Before “if this is your will”, T.Varie 13 (front l. 29) and the published Greek versions include the address “now, O Lord” (τενοῦ ὦν παροῦς καὶ τανῦν κύριε Gretser 1734, Nestle 1895; νῦν in Wotke 1891; δέσποτα κύριε in Delatte 1927); these versions also describe Mary as the “beautiful” rather than “true” dove, as in this text (καλῆς περιστερᾶς; Wotke 1891, Nestle 1895, Delatte 1927; absent in Gretser 1734, Olivieri 1898; τερροοῖπτε τῆς αἰῶνος; T.Varie 13 front l. 30). The specification that Jesus came in order to reveal God’s wonders is absent in T.Varie 13 and all of the published Greek versions. The following parenthetical note (“I know, O Lord, that”) is likewise absent in all of the other published Greek and Coptic versions, who instead begin directly with “unless he had come”; cf. the first note to pp. 25 & 26.

¹²² These are the names of the seven children of Ephesus: Archillides, Diomedes, ¹²⁵ Allatios, Probatios, Stephanos, Cyriacus, Sabbatios.

1. ἀρίρε σε ἡνεκμαεῖν ἡγταβον εροου πλοεῖς : “then perform your signs and show them to us, O Lord” T.Varie 13 (front ll. 33–34) has the similar “perform then, your great wonders” (εἰρε οὐν ἡνεκμοσ ἡωηρε). The Greek versions, by contrast, have “perform for us this sign” (ποίησον ἡμῖν τὸ σημεῖον τοῦτο, Gretser 1734; τὸ τεράστιον τοῦτο in Wotke 1891, Nestle 1895, Delatte 1927; τὸ τέρας τοῦτο in Olivieri 1898). As Ivan Miroshnikov suggests (personal communication), the vaguer, plural reference in the Coptic versions, modified from the singular, more specific, and deictic Greek original, may indicate light editing to allow this prayer to be used in a more general, and recurrent, ritual context.

3–6. κατὰ θε ἡτακωτῇ επεξεῖραλ μωυσις ἄκταβοϋ ενκεεσ ἡπενσον ἰωσηφ : “just as you listened to your servant Moses, and you showed him the bones of our brother Joseph” A reference to a tradition recorded in the Book of Mary’s Repose 32–35, extant in Ge’ez and partially in Syriac (see the translation in Shoemaker 2002: 306–309). According to this tradition, Joseph’s bones had been hidden by Pharaoh so that when the Israelites wished to leave Egypt they could not find them (cf. Exodus 13.19). Moses and the people of Israel reproach God, who causes the Archangel Michael to strike the river, causing the water to part to reveal a box in which he finds the bones of Joseph. Similar traditions appear in the Babylonian Talmud; see Borgehammar 1991: 176–77.

19–20. πογχαῖ ἡπκοσμοσ : “the salvation of the world” This title is absent in T.Varie 13, and all but one of the published Greek texts, which has “saviour of the world” (σωτὴρ τοῦ κόσμου; Olivieri 1898).

22–27. The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus: The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus are a group of third-century Christians said to have been put into a miraculous sleep by God to save them from the persecution of Decius (249–251 CE), awakening nearly two hundred years later during the reign of Theodosius II (401–450 CE); they testify before the emperor before passing away and having a church built over the cave in which they slept. The earliest attestations of the legend are found in the Syriac writings of Jacob of Sarug (ca. 450–521 CE), dependent upon an older, likely Greek, source (Honigmann 1953: 125–168; van der Horst 2015). These names here were probably intended to be copied onto an amulet to protect the wearer or the place; cf. the walls of the eighth-century anchorite’s grotto in Pachora, Nubia, whose walls are decorated with several of the texts included in this manuscript, including the names of the Sleepers of Ephesus (see Griffith 1927: no. 29; Sanzo 2014: 77–78: no. 1). Compare the different tradition of the names of the Sleepers alluded to in PCMI 21 p. 9 ll. 24–25.

The Forty Martyrs of the city of Sebaste: Domitian, Valens, Hesychius, Smaragdus, ^{|5} Sisinnius, Severianus, Philoctimon, Heraclius, Cyrion, Alexander, Valerius, Eutychius, Vibianus, Lysimachus, ^{|10} Cyril, Eutychius, Eunoicus, Flavius, Xantheas, Leontius, Meton, Aggus, Ecdicius, Acacius, ^{|15} Aetius, Nicholas, John, Chudion, Gaius, Claudius, Ulitomos, Athanasius, Priscus, Candidus, ^{|20} Sacerdon, Gorgonius, Theodulus, Theophilus, Domnus, Aglaius.

This is the order of the beginning of the four Gospels.

^{|25} Gospel <of> Matthew.

The book of the birth of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

p. 29 ll. 1–22. The Forty Martyrs of Sebaste: The Martyrs of Sebaste were forty Christian soldiers belonging to the Legio XII Fulminata said to have been martyred by Licinius around the year 320 by being abandoned on a frozen lake. The earliest mention of the Martyrs is in the homily on them by Basil of Caesarea dating to 373 CE (PG XXXI: 508–525); see Karlin-Hayter 1991. Their names appear in several contexts as amulets; in addition to the hermitage at Pachora (see note to p. 28 ll. 22–27), they are found in three manuscripts belonging to the ‘Berlin Library’ (KYP A14; VIII CE)—BKU I 8, 19 front, & 20—as well as O. Eleph. Wagner 322 (KYP M1122; IV–V CE); P. Lat. Bat. XIII 25 (KYP M1072); P. Ryl. Copt. 101 (KYP M323), SB VI 9615 (KYP M1056), SB XXVIII 17249 (KYP M1076); none of these seems to preserve the same sequence of names as that present here. Cf. de Bruyn 2017: 218–220; Dosoo 2023b: 75–76.

3. σΥΛΛΗC : “Valens” Smith misreads as “Onalles.”

5. CΕΥΗΡΙΔΗC : “Severianus” Smith misreads as “Seuepianos.”

8. σΥΛΛΗΡΙC : “Valerius” Smith misreads as “Onallerios.”

p. 29 l. 23–p. 30 l. 28. Incipits of the Four Gospels and Psalm 90 (91): The incipits of the four canonical gospels and of Psalm 90 (91) are the most common texts copied onto scriptural amulets. Their arrangement here follows the ‘canonical order’, found in most, but far from all, incipit amulets with multiple gospels; see Sanzo 2014: 102–104 et passim. The amuletic use of Psalm 90 (91) seems to pre-date Christianity, being found in a first-century CE text from Qumran (11QP^aAp^a; see Puech 1990; Kraus 2005; Chapa 2011; Sanzo 2014: 106–130). These incipits, like the other texts in this manuscript, were likely intended to be copied as amulets.

25–26. i.e. Matthew 1.1 (Horner 1911: 12).

The Gospel according to Mark.

The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the son of the |⁵ living God, as it is written in Isaiah the prophet...

The Gospel according to Luke.

|¹⁰ Inasmuch as many have undertaken to write the words concerning the things which have been agreed among us...

The Gospel according to |¹⁵ John.

In the beginning was the word and the word was in the presence of God and |²⁰ the word was a god...

Ninety, the blessing of the song of David.

The one who dwells in the help of the exalted one will be in the shade of |²⁵ God of heaven. He will say to the Lord, "You are my helper and my refuge"...

1. pp. 1–45: Invocation of God and the Archangel Gabriel for protection from demons (KYP T359)

Papyrus codex, lost in a fire in 1904.¹ The earliest description of the codex, by Bernardino Peyron in 1876, describes it as consisting of 46 pages, of which two (the second folio) were blank.² The next description, by Francesco Rossi, describes it as consisting of 44 pages, implying that the second folio had been lost.³ Both authors note its very unusual format, with the folios inscribed on the right-hand side only.⁴ Kropp (1931), who had never seen the manuscript, misunderstood the two pages as being missing between the second and third surviving pages (corresponding to our pp. 5 & 7), but this is not noted by Rossi, and the text that survives does not imply lost pages. Kropp does not seem to have realised that the codex consisted of 44 pages of which only 22 were written, instead understanding it to have 22 surviving pages.

The codex was acquired by Bernardino Drovetti (1776–1852), consul general of France in Egypt, likely between 1804 and 1818, and sometime between then and 1821 his collection was sent to Livorno in Italy for sale.⁵ Drovetti donated the Tractate to the philologist Amedeo Peyron (1785–1870) at some point after 1841, and after Peyron's death his nephew, Bernardino Peyron (1818–1903), donated it to the Biblioteca Nazionale ("National Library") in Turin.⁶ Rossi published the manuscript in 1894, and in 1896 Carl Schmidt examined and transcribed it; this transcription was used as the basis of the edition of his student, Kropp.⁷ The manuscript was lost in the fire, of unknown causes, of the night of 25th to 26th January 1904, which resulted in the destruction of 67% of the Library's manuscripts, and 78% of its printed volumes.⁸

Prior to the manuscript's loss, a handwriting sample was produced by Crum, which Kropp published alongside his edition.⁹ This is the only surviving image of the manuscript known to us, posing considerable challenges to palaeographic dating. The sample demonstrates a bilinear, largely unimodal hand with a rounded α , slightly enlarged and angular β , slight serifs on z and τ , curved μ , slightly narrow c , and γ shaped like a Latin Y . Very similar letterforms may be seen in the literary codex Turin cat. 63000, codex 3 (CLM 47) from the This (or Thinis) group (TM Arch ID 498), purchased by Drovetti at around the same time as the Tractate.¹⁰ This codex, and the other ca. 16 codices of the archive, were sold by Drovetti to the Egyptian Museum in Turin on the 24th January 1824,¹¹ but at least one leaf from the archive was among those given by him to Peyron as part of his later gift to the scholar along with the Tractate,¹² making a link between them more likely. Based on material considerations, the This group can be dated to the late seventh or eighth century,¹³ and evidence from two codices (a book-list and a colophon) suggest that the group belonged to the church of the topos ("place", probably monastery) of John the Baptist in This.¹⁴ These seem to have been the only other Coptic papyrus codices in Drovetti's collection. We thus tentatively

⁸ Gorrini 1904: 18, 21, 26, 29, 34, 38, 41; 1,500 of a total of 4,500 manuscripts were saved; of printed volumes, 6,800 were saved, and 23,711 destroyed. Gabrieli 1930: 51 does not list the Tractate among the manuscripts rescued, and Kropp 1931: I 63 confirms that it was destroyed.

propose a similar, seventh or eighth century date for the Tractate, and note that it too may have come from This, perhaps even the collection of the church. While this is highly speculative, it is almost certain that the manuscript derives from the general region of Thebes, to which This belongs, and from where nearly all of Drovetti's manuscripts derive.¹⁵ Among the other manuscripts given by Drovetti to Peyron were a sheet of papyrus containing a formulary, perhaps for favour (PCMI 13, also lost in the fire),¹⁶ and an unpublished Coptic magical rotulus. This latter was sold by his family to the National Library in Turin in 1969, and the hand is different to that of the Tractate.¹⁷

The scribe uses supralineation to mark names, voces magicae, and autosyllabic consonants. The dialect is a highly standard but not entirely consistent form of Sahidic, with occasional common non-standard features, such as haplography, and the interchange of β/q. More unusual is the occasional interchange of z/c and x/ϣ, and the presence of a single Faiyumic form (ⲱⲛⲁⲗ, p. 35 l. 5)

The text consists of long invocation of God and (from p. 13) the archangel Gabriel, with notable similarities to other extensive 'magical liturgies' such as the Prayer of Mary 'in Bartos' (see PCMI 25 pp. 2–9), the Endoxon of the Archangel Michael (see PCM I 26), and the prayer to the Baktiotha preserved in three manuscripts.¹⁸ Peyron described it as a "gnostic tractate on the particular virtues which the celestial spirits possess from God" ("trattato gnostico delle particolari virtù, che hanno da Dio gli spiriti celesti"), referring specifically to the content on p. 7 l. 1–p. 9 l. 6.¹⁹ This title was taken up by Rossi, so that it has become traditional to refer to the text as as 'Rossi's "Gnostic" Tractate'. While the text is neither meaningfully 'gnostic' nor a tractate, we retain the distinctive name of 'Tractate' here in deference to history, removing the word 'gnostic', which is liable to mislead those encountering the text for the first time.

Since the manuscript is lost, our edition makes use of the edition of Rossi as the base text, sometimes preferring the readings of Schmidt (in Kropp) where these seem more plausible. At places we suggest alternative readings, marked 'CMPT' (for Coptic Magical Papyri Team). Since the text is written only on the recto of each sheet, we number the pages first by their ordinal number of writing (first, second, and so on), corresponding to folio numbers in Rossi and page numbers in Kropp, followed by the actual page number, including blank pages in the count, thus, the second page written is the fifth page of the codex: "second page

¹⁶ Rossi 1894: 24 says that this fragment was "united with this papyrus" ("unito a questo papiro").

Draw the four *angels in front of the *veil of the Father while wearing a crown of roses, with a branch of myrtle in your hand and some ammoniac |⁵ in your mouth.

Offering: *frankincense, flea-wort?, *styrax, oil of *myrrh, *mastic?, fat? and blood? of a dove?, cinnamon, rose? oil ... charcoal ... white wood, olive wood.

First page: This page is not given a folio or page number in Rossi, Kropp, or Meyer. It seems possible that this page should be placed at the end of the manuscript, rather than the beginning; compare the similar invocations in PCM I 25, 26 & 28, which have illustrations and ritual instructions after the spoken formulae. The initial cross may suggest, however, that this is indeed the beginning.

2–5. κφορι ἡογκλον ἡογερτ ερεογκ[λ]ατος ἡμορσνην εἴ τε[κ]χις ερεο[γ]αμογνιάκογ εἴ ρωκ “while wearing a crown of roses, with a branch of myrtle in your hand and some ammoniac in your mouth” As Lemm 1901: 306–307 points out, a close parallel to this passage may be found in chapter 47 of the Gnostic text known as the ‘Second Book of Ieou’: “and Jesus performed this mystery (baptism with the Holy Spirit) while all his disciples were wearing linen garments, crowned with myrtle, with a kunokephalon of kristē in their mouths, and a branch of artemisia in their two hands” (Ἦ ΔΕ ΑΓΓΕΙΡΕ ἸΠΕΙΡ ΕΡΕΝΕΦΜΑΘΗ ΤΗΡΟΥ ΒΟΟΛΕ ἸΖΕΡΒΟΟΣ ἸΕΙΔΑΓ ΕΥΣΤΕΦΑΝΟΥ ἡΜΟΡΣΝΗ ΕΡΕΟΓΚΗΝΟΚΕΦΑΛΟΝ ἸΤΕΤΕΚΗΡΗΤΗ ἸΖΟΥΝ ἸΡΩΟΥ · ΕΡΕΟΓΗΜΟΝΟΚΛΑΔΟΣ ἸΑΡΤΕΜΙΣΙΑΣ Εἴ ΤΕΥΣΙΧ ΕἴΤΕ; Créghur 2019: 218.23–28, 219 (trans.), 373 (commentary)). Kunokephalon seems to refer to some kind of plant; cf. Dioscorides, Materia Medica 4.69, perhaps referring to fleawort (Plantago indica L.; cf. LSJ s.v. ψόλλιον) or weasel’s-snout (Antirrhinum orontium L.; see André 1985: 83). The meaning of kristē is similarly difficult, although Dioscorides notes that another name for the kunokephalon is κρυστάλλιον (cf. André 1985: 79), so that this may simply be a construction that combines the two names. Créghur (2019: 373), following Amélineau (1891: 192), notes that it might refer to the island of Crete (Κρήτης ?), giving “Cretan kunokephanon”. Lemm suggests reading κριστη (his reading of κρηστη) in l. 6 of our manuscript, and so we tentatively follow him.

6. . . . στη : “fleawort” Cf. the note to ll. 2–5 above.

7. ωτνεσ - ο . . . ρωἡπε : “fat? and blood? of a dove” Kropp and Meyer translate “butcher the six (?) doves”, but this kind of animal sacrifice would be otherwise unattested in the Coptic magical corpus. Instead we suggest that the blood (and perhaps fat) of a dove is offered up; dove blood is often used in rituals for positive purposes, such as favour, or as in the case here, protection; cf. the note to PCM I 17 back ll. 1–5, and Dosoo 2022c: 517–519.

9. καρβωνε τ . . . χηλ[ον] . κλεγκο[ν] . [χη]λοῦ ἡχοειτ/ : “charcoal ... white wood, olive wood” Perhaps understand “charcoal from white wood or olive wood”; the incenses listed above were probably intended to be placed on the burning charcoals.

Adōnaēl, the one who is over the coming in of the Father and his coming out—request—so that you (pl.) will come to me and you will stand with me and you will [|]¹⁰ cast away before my face every unclean spirit! Let them all withdraw before my face so that they will not say, “Where is his God?” Let them all [|]¹⁵ tremble and flee from my presence, in the name of the Father, and the Son and the Holy Spirit!

AAAAAAAAAAAAA, [|]^{Greek} *holy, holy, holy, Lord *Sabaoth, [|]²⁰ the heaven and the earth are full of your holy glory! [|]^{Coptic} [We] give glory to you, we give glory

7. ἀπόλο/ : “request” This abbreviation likely indicates the point at which the reader was to insert specific information. Rossi understood it as an abbreviation of the name of the god Apollo (ἀπολλων), while Amélineau (1895: 15) prints Apolo in italics and suggests that it indicates the responses to be made by assistants, presumably imagining a call and response situation akin to a liturgy. We instead understand a writing of ἀπολογία (usually “defence”) whose nuances we still do not fully understand (cf. p. 34), but translate as “request”. This text displays some of the most extensive use of this word. We propose that, like κοινά, it marks where the recipe is to be personalised, although its position—often breaking running text—might seem to challenge this theory. In most cases, such as p. 21 ll. 15–16, it would nonetheless fit well: “let them all flee before my face—mine, NN”, allowing the formula to be personalised (cf. e.g., PCM I 17 l. 21 for this very common construction). On this page our interpretation faces greater difficulties, since the nearest first person pronoun which it could supplement is in the following line, rather than before it, as we might expect. It is possible that ἀπολογία here does indeed supplement the ἐμὴ (“to me”) in l. 8. More probably, perhaps, it may stand in this case for a fuller formula, such as “I, NN, invoke you”. This would work quite well given that the following “so that” (ὥστε) is not otherwise preceded by a verb of invocation or adjuration, as we would generally expect.

13–14. ἡγεῖσθός σε ἐγὼν περνοῦτε : “so that they will not say, ‘Where is his God?’” Cf. Psalm 113 (115) 10: “... lest the nations say “Where is their god?” (μή ποτε ᾤτε ἡγεῖσθός σε ἐγὼν περνοῦτε; Budge 1898: 123).

We give glory to [you] ...raōm, the one who has come to sharpen?

14–15. ⲁϣⲁⲱ [ⲧⲡⲉ] ⲛⲟⲉ ⲛⲟϥⲕⲁⲙⲁⲣⲁ : “suspended [heaven] like a vault” A reference to Isaiah 40.22: “he who erected heaven like a vault” (πενταγταρε τⲡⲉ ⲉⲣⲁⲧⲥ ⲛⲟⲉ ⲛⲟϥⲕⲡⲉ; Bak 2019: 82). Note that ⲕⲡⲉ in this version translates καμάρα from the Septuagint, so that PCM I 12 may either be relying directly on the Greek text, or on a different Coptic translation.

21. ⲛ[ⲁⲱ]ⲗ : “sharpen” We might expect here a verb meaning “sheath” or “gird”, but we have been unable to find any word which would fit the reported traces.

10. ἈΡΑΚΤΟΣ : “Araktos” Kropp understands a reference to ἄρκτος, that is, Ursa Major, or the constellation of the Great Bear, which would make sense in the context of the mention of several other celestial bodies. In Egyptian astrology, Ursa Major is called the Foreleg ( msh.tyw) and is associated with the god *Seth (Neugebauer/Parker 1969: 190–191). It is frequently invoked in association with Seth-Typhon in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri (Gundel 1968: 59–64), although the context here would seem to be rather different, mentioning it simply as part of the natural world created by the Christian god.

by the head [of] Bathouriel, the great father, that you come to me and appear to me, quickly! I adjure you, *Gabriel, by the four corners of the fourteen firmaments, |⁵ that you come to me and you be with me, in this day and this hour, and you help me, in your power and your glory, quickly!

I adjure you Iōiriēl, by the cloud of light that is beside the Father, |¹⁰ in which he was hidden before he had created anything—that whose name is Marmarami, the great, the place of the spirit of *Adonai *Eloei Almighty—may you appear to me, and send me Gabriel, |¹⁵ the *angel of righteousness today, so that he will annihilate before me every spirit of Satan, all of which were created together in a single day!

O Lord God Almighty, |²⁰ reveal to me your power, send to me Gabriel, the angel of righteousness, so that he comes [to me] in haste, amen (three <times>),

I invoke you, Gabriel by the great pillar of light, that [supports all] creation?

3–6. The body of God: Descriptions of the body of God the Father are recurrent in the ‘magical liturgies’; compare PCM I 25 p. 14 ll. 11–24, PCM I 26 p. 7 l. 12–p. 8 l. 17. These descriptions are reminiscent of the Jewish Shi'ur Qomah (“Measure of the Body”) literature, which seems to have existed by the sixth century CE. In these texts the body of God is described in detail in terms of its enormous size, the names of the different body parts, and the ministering angels assigned to each of them. A systematic comparison between the Shi'ur Qomah and the descriptions in Coptic magical texts remains a desideratum. On the body of God in Coptic literature, cf. Fauth 2014: 72; Dosoo 2021d: 418, Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 7, and on the Shi'ur Qomah, see Fossum 1983; Cohen 1983 & 1985; Bohak 2008: 328–329; Gruenwald 2014: 245–248.

4–5. ὀρφामीηλ πινος ντιηβε ετην τοιχ νογναμ : “Orphamiēl, the great finger which is on the right hand” Orphamiel, the “finger of the Father”, is mentioned several times in the Coptic magical corpus; the reference is likely to the “finger of God” (δάκτυλος Θεοῦ) by which Jesus claims to cast out demons in Luke 11.20, drawing upon the language of Exodus 8.15 (8.19). For other mentions of Orphamiel, see PCM I 25 p. 14 ll. 11–13, p. 15 ll. 18–19; PCM I 26 p. 8 ll. 11–12; ‘Nahman’ Amulet (Drescher 1950; KYP M 529) ll. 14–15; BL Ms Or 6796 (Kropp 1931: I no. J; KYP M308) ll. 41–42; Fribourg AeT 2006.5 (Müller 2009; KYP M398) front col. 2 ll. 18–21; Moen Inv. no 34/607 (Clarysse 1986; KYP M4), and cf. Dosoo 2021d: 418.

11–13. νειφλακτηριον ετσε ετηνητρητ ἡπωτ : “phylacteries which are written on the chest of the Father” This likely refers to a breastplate worn by God the Father, upon which a vowel sequence is written. The breastplate is comparable to that of the Jewish high priest Aaron described from Exodus 28:15–21. This is made most explicit in BL Ms. Or. 6794 (Kropp 1931: I no. E; KYP M 306), in which seven rows of seven letters decorate the chest of God; in the Exodus, the breastplate is described as having four rows of stones. See Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 7.

13. ἡμανουήλ : “of Manouēl” Likely a name for Jesus, specifically a variant writing of Emmanuel; cf. PCM I 11 p. 16 ll. 2–4 and accompanying note.

23–24. ἡπο[ς νε]τῆλλος νογ[οειν] παι ηςις ... : “by the great pillar of light, that [supports all] creation?” We are grateful to Frederic Krueger for suggesting this reading. For the concept of pillars (usually four) supporting parts of the cosmos, cf. p. 17 ll. 5–6 & p. 43 ll. 1–3 of this manuscript, and PCM I 25 p. 14 ll. 25–26; PCM I 26 p. 6 ll. 17–18. As these examples show, we would expect τωογν εα rather than ηι εα, but there does not seem to be space for the former. The concept of a singular pillar of light is reminiscent of the pillars of cloud and fire which guided the Israelites by day and night respectively (Exodus 13.21–22), described in Christian sources as a pillar of light (στόλος φωτός/ετγλλος νογοειν) by at least the second century (e.g. Justin Martyr, Dialogue with Trypho 131.3; History of the Captivity in Babylon (Kuhn 1970: 108; CAVT 227 (=CC 576?)); cf. Krueger forthcoming for ‘pillar of light’ as an epithet for monastic leaders.

I invoke you, Gabriel, by the [...] of light [...]

1. τκηφαλis : “capital” The Greek word κεφαλis may refer to either the capital of a column, or a chapter or scroll of a book. Here we opt for the former meaning, since a column has been mentioned shortly before; cf. Exodus 26.32, which describes the pillars of the *tabernacle as having gold capitals.

8–12. ἡ τκεστολη εσογοῦῃ ἡε νογχιων ερεπιωτ χοολε ἡμος · ἡἡ πβο ἡτεφαπε εβο ἡε νογορτ νογωφῳ ἡκαθαρον : “by the garment which is white as snow, with which the Father is clothed, and the hair of his head, which is like pure white wool” Cf. Daniel 7.9: “the ancient of days was sitting; his garment was white like snow, and his hair was like pure wool” (ἡερεπαπας εἰν ἡεγοοῦ γμοος ἡε τεφρῆσῳ Δε ἡεσογῳβῳ ἡε νογχιων λγω ἡερεπῳ ἡτεφαπε ο ἡε νογορτ εφτῆβνη; Ciasca 1889: 317); Revelation 1.14: “his head was white and his hair was like white wool and like snow, and his eyes were like a burning flame” (ερετεφαπε ογῳβῳ ἡἡ ἡεφῳ ἡε νογορτ νογοβῳ λγω ἡε νογχιων ερενεφβαλ ο ἡε νογῳλῳ ἡκωλῳ; Budge 1912: 273).

|¹⁰ I invoke you, Gabriel, by the bath which the Father took when he was about to mould Adam, and the flower which sprouted in his left hand and the *cup which is in |¹⁵ his right hand, from which he had his *angels drink, and <the> entire world, that you come to me today—request!

14–16. παποτ ετ̣ε̣ν̣ τε̣φ̣σι̣λ̣ νο̣γ̣να̣μ̣ · ἡ̣τα̣φ̣τ̣σο̣ ἡ̣νε̣φ̣α̣γγ̣ε̣λο̣ς̣ ἡ̣ρη̣τ̣ϩ̣ : “the cup which is in his right hand, from which he had his angels drink” For the concept of a eucharistic ritual carried out by the angels in heaven, cf. PCM I 25 p. 7 ll. 23–24 and the accompanying note.

tear which came forth from the [eyes] of the Father over his son upon the cross, that you come to me today—request—!

I invoke you, *Gabriel, because of these |⁵ holy names of the Father: Mari, Nab, Marmarou, Babam, Phiōou, Bathouriēl, *Iao *Sabaoth, *Adonai, Almighty, Manouēl, Sabaoth, Abathou, Iakhaoi, Ikhaof, |¹⁰ Sabbathō, these in which Daniel was hidden, that you come to me at this place in which I am, concerning everything about which I have invoked you! You shall strengthen me in all of them |¹⁵ all the days of my life, amen (12 <times>)! Let my body be purified of every unclean spirit, whether a male demonic spirit |²⁰ or female demonic spirit or angelic spirit of ... or spirit of the First-Formed One! Do not allow them to be able to stand [in] my presence

8. מַנּוּעֵל : “Manouēl” Likely a name for Jesus derived from Emmanuel; cf. PCM I 11 p. 16 ll. 2–4 and accompanying note.

18–20. עִיֵּט פִּנָּא נְטֶמּוֹנִיּוֹן נְרֻוּיֵּט • עִיֵּט פִּנָּא נְטֶמּוֹנִיּוֹן נְרֻיֵּט : “whether a male demonic spirit or female demonic spirit” As noted by Frankfurter (in Meyer/Smith 1994: 108), such lists of possible demonic attackers, listing both male and female variants, find echoes in older Pharaonic Egyptian amuletic texts. See, for examples, Pap.Athen.Nat.-Bibl. 1826 ro col. x + 5 l. 12: “Book for driving off... male and female revenants” (md3.t n.t dr... mwt mwt.t; XIX–XX Dynasty; Fischer-Elfert 2005: no. 15); P.BM EA 10688 vo. col. 4.1–2: “every male revenant, every female revenant, every male enemy, every female enemy, every male opponent, every female opponent, every male akh-spirit, every female akh-spirit” (mwt nb mwt.t nb.t hft.y nb hft.t nb.t d3y nb d3y.t nb.t 3h nb 3h.t nb.t; XIX–XX Dynasty; Fischer-Elfert 2005: no. 18). Similar listing of potential male and female witches is also a principle in Mesopotamian anti-witchcraft rituals; see, for example, the Maqlû (“burning”) series (cf. note to PCM I 11 p. 4 ll. 3–20) edited in Abusch 2015: tablet I 78–86 (288–289), tablet II 42–50 (294–295), tablet IV 86 (324).

22–23. פֶּאֶרְחִיפּוֹלָסְמָא : “the First-Formed One” Cf. the note to p. 15 l. 17.

KD, EL & MP, edited from Rossi and Kropp; tracing after Rossi 1894.

Image: Since the manuscript no longer survives, we are dependent on the copy made by Rossi, whose general accuracy is nonetheless suggested by its strong resemblance to similar images from surviving Coptic magical manuscripts. The figure is of an angel, holding in his right hand a staff surmounted by a cross or staurogram, and in his left hand a sword or palm branch. His head is surmounted by curly hair and a halo, and two wings, represented as striated tubes, emerge from his shoulders. See Dosoo 2022a: 139–151 for images of angels in Coptic magical manuscripts, and for superhuman beings carrying palm branches in the context of Babylonian incantation bowls (VI–VIII CE) see Viložny 2015: 147–150, who notes that the motif denotes “positive or protective entities”. This image was perhaps to be copied four times to represent the four angels described on p. 1 ll. 1–2, likely to be worn as an amulet during the performance of the ritual and thereafter.

Papyrus sheet, now presumably lost. The sheet was found with the text described by Peyron and, following him, Rossi, as a “Gnostic” Tractate (PCM I 12). Peyron (1876: 66) describes this as a second, fragmentary, “Gnostic Tractate” (Trattato gnostico); as with the larger and better-known manuscript, this is not really an appropriate name for text that is neither a tractate nor ‘gnostic’, but again we retain the name in deference to this history. Rossi’s somewhat confusing presentation of the manuscripts led Amélineau (1895: 26) to mistakenly understand this manuscript as the last page of the larger Tractate codex (PCM I 12).

The manuscript was likely acquired along with the larger Tractate codex by Bernardino Drovetti between 1804 and 1818, then sent to Egyptian Museum in 1821. Drovetti would have gifted it to Amedeo Peyron between 1841 and 1870, before his nephew, Bernardino Peyron, gave it to the National Library in Turin prior to 1876. Like the larger Tractate, it seems to have been lost in the fire of 1904.¹

Rossi (1894: 24) describes it as being “united with” (unito a) the Tractate codex, implying that the two belonged together; we thus tentatively propose that it, too, may come from the Theban region, and be dated to the seventh or eighth century. Nothing in its content would speak against this, but both points must be understood as extremely speculative. The dialect of the manuscript, as far as can be determined given its fragmentary state, is Sahidic; in l. 1 ne for smē may suggest the influence of a Middle Egyptian dialect of the type demonstrated in the ‘Heidelberg Library’ (see pp. 261–262).

Since the manuscript has been lost, we reproduce here the edition of Rossi, suggesting alternative readings based on parallels where appropriate.

1. Front ll. 1–14: Invocation (KYP T617)

Incomplete oblong fragment of a pottery plate. The top, bottom, and right side are missing and the faded text is written along the remaining surface, with the right and upper margin lost. The plate was of high quality craftsmanship, likely flat, with a red, polished surface.³ The ostrakon's fragmentary state makes it unclear if it should be considered a recipe or an applied text. The object was a gift of Jerome F. Snyder to the LACMA, acquired by the collection on the 31st December 1980.⁴

The script, written in a faded black ink, is an undecorated, alphabetic, largely bilinear uncial, at times sloping to the right. γ resembles a Latin V; the α is rounded, with the upper part of the bowl somewhat separated from the stalk, and the μ very wide and curved; the β is enlarged, with a very flat base. The highly informal nature of the hand makes dating difficult; Dieleman does not attempt to date the piece. The combination of the rounded α and enlarged, flat-bottomed β leads us to tentatively suggest a seventh or eighth century date for this piece, since these are both typical of documentary texts from this period.⁵ The text would seem to be written in standard Sahidic; no dialectal irregularities are present in the surviving text.

1. σογχ : “Soukh” The name Soukh also appears in the curse PCM I 27 front l. 24, 26, back l. 4.

3. αρ αθα : “|ar Atha” There is a dark spot in the gap between the two words, noted by Dieleman as an unidentified letter. We interpret it as a smudge, but it may be a small letter, such as an o or an α, or else a mid-point.

5. ιωβη ιωφ : “Iōbeth Iōph|” Perhaps the opening of the Ērbeth-logos, for which see the notes to PCM I 4 p. 5 ll. 3–5; this may suggest this is a curse or love spell. The reference to someone drinking water in ll. 9–10 may suggest a love spell in which the target is to drink empowered water.

1. Front ll. 1–8, back ll. 1–5: Jesus-pupil narrative charm for healing the eye (KYP T392)

Broken wooden tablet with a narrative charm written as a palimpsest. At most half of the original height remains; the breakage took place prior to the writing of the charm, which seems to be complete. The manuscript was acquired by the British Museum from Jean d’Anastasy in 1839. The tablet has raised edges, and one remaining drilled hole each on the left and right-hand sides for binding it to other tablets to form a codex. Three hands are discernible (m^{1-3}): m^1 is responsible for line 5 of the back (presumably the only surviving line of the original text), m^2 wrote the charm, and m^3 wrote line 8 of the front, perhaps in an attempt to copy the contents of line 7.

M^2 is a right-sloping bimodal majuscule with some tendencies towards quadrilinearity. h has its minuscule form, while m is angular, with a shallow vertex. ϵ is often ligatured to preceding and following letters, with a distinctive, enlarged form where ligatured to a previous letter. b is very large, and the oblique strokes of κ are separated from the vertical. Supralineation is used inconsistently for abbreviations and autosyllabic consonants.

We accept the proposal of Agnes Mihálykó¹ that the hand of this manuscript is identical to that found on a liturgical prayer for the vesting of a monk from the Monastery of Apa Paulos (Deir el-Bakhīt) on the west bank of Thebes.² Alongside

² This manuscript is an ostrakon made up of BM EA 5892 + EA14241 + O.Bachit. 929. The British Museum pieces are published in Hall 1905: 23, plate 17 no. 2, with a translation in Winlock/Crum 1929: 139–140. O.Bachit. 929 may be consulted online at <https://www.koptolys.gwi.uni-muenchen.de/showOstraka.php?id=520>. A publication of both pieces is in preparation by Agnes Mihálykó; cf. Mihálykó 2019: 130, 148, 293, 304. As noted by Winlock and Crum, the prayer for the general similarity of letterforms, we note the specific $\epsilon+\iota$ and $\Delta/\Sigma+\epsilon$ ligatures found in both manuscripts.³ This shared scribal hand strongly implies that this manuscript also comes from that site, although this cannot be proven through what remains of the acquisition history of the two pieces.⁴ It is therefore likely that the copyist was a monk belonging to the monastery.

The pottery from Deir el-Bakhit can be dated to between the sixth and tenth centuries,⁵ but the ostrakon in the same hand as PCM I 15 has been dated more narrowly to the seventh to eighth centuries. We likewise propose the same range for this manuscript, noting similar hands in dated or dateable manuscripts from this range.⁶

The text is Sahidic with some common deviations from the literary standard, such as $\mathfrak{B}$ for $\mathfrak{q}$; there are a few surprising or unattested writings of words which would not seem to be dialectal, but rather idiosyncracies of the copyist. The use of the word $\lambda\alpha\sigma\epsilon$ with the sense “to heal” in back l. 2, if read correctly, may imply specifically southern dialectal influence (cf. Crum CD 151b).

Note that Hall & Hasitzka incorrectly begin l. 6 at the word $\mu\omicron\omicron\omicron$, assigning earlier words to l. 5. Hasitzka numbers the lines continuously, so that our verso l. 1 corresponds to her l. 9.

We note with particular gratitude the comments of Michael Zellmann-Rohrer on an earlier draft of this edition.

vesting finds a close parallel in the Bohairic prayer published in Tuki 1761: $\mu\mathfrak{q}-\mu\mathfrak{q}\alpha$. On ostraca from Deir el-Bakhīt more generally, see Hodak 2012.

³ $\epsilon+\iota$: PCM I 15 front ll. 2, 3, back ll. 2, 4; BM EA 5892 + EA142411. 13; $\Delta/\Sigma+\epsilon$: PCM I 15 front ll. 1, 2, 7, back l. 3; O.Bachit. 929 l. 3.

He said, ‘The mote will heal, the darkness will be undone, in the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit!’” front 2. ⲉϥϥⲗⲟⲟⲗⲉ : “a pupil?” Hall and Hasitzka opt for the translation “vine” or “grape” (Crum CD 54b). Here we translate “pupil” (ⲕⲟⲣⲏ), a sense attested in the unpublished glossary P.Mich. inv. 4949 (Crum CD 55a); the word may be a metaphorical extension of the sense “grape”, or else related to (or an error for) ⲁⲗⲱ (“pupil”), literally “maiden”. Von Lemm understands ⲉⲓⲟϥⲗ (“deer”, Crum CD 77a), cf. the similar story in BKU I 1 (KYP M76) front col. 1 ll. 1–18 in which Jesus heals a doe in labour. Vycichl (CED 41a) understands this specifically as a hypothetical female form, ⲉⲓⲟⲟⲗⲉ, with ι replaced by (miscopied as?) λ. Kropp and Zellmann-Rohrer follow him. Given this parallel, it is possible that ⲉⲗⲟⲟⲗⲉ represents a transmission error.

^{|5, m1} [erased passage] ⲡ ... in the name.

RBS, KD, EL, MP & JS, edited from photograph.

4–5. ⲁϥⲙⲁϥⲧ ⲉⲡⲁⲃⲁⲗ ⲡⲣⲱⲡ ϣⲉ : “he struck me in my eye, the binding?” This passage presents several difficulties of comprehension. Hall translates “it has pierced my eye; the man ...”. Kropp translates likewise, suggesting that “the man” here refers to a hunter who has left the deer injured. Hasitzka translates “O Man, I healed my piercing” (“O Mensch, ich heilte meine Durchbohrung”). Zellmann-Rohrer translates “mankind (could not heal my sight)” (i.e., ⲡⲉϥⲧⲁⲗⲟ), suggesting that the praeterite has a negative sense here. The word ⲡⲱⲡ, which we translate as “binding”, is attested as a verb in Kasser CDC 49a s.v. ⲡⲱⲡ, and also in Westendorf HWB p. 534 s.v. ⲡⲱⲡ.

6. ⲙⲡⲣⲓⲧⲱⲡⲉ : “redden” Probably implying “to set” (that is, the sun reddens as it sets).

6–7. ⲉⲛⲟϥ ⲡⲉⲣⲁⲛⲙⲁⲧⲉϥ : “Enoch the scribe” Enoch is often referred to as the “scribe of righteousness” (ⲡⲉⲣⲁⲛⲙⲁⲧⲉϥ ⲡⲁⲕⲁⲓⲟϥⲛⲏ) in Coptic literature, a title which first appears in 1 Enoch 12.4 (Isaac in Charlesworth 1983: 19). Pseudo-Chrysostom, On the Four Bodiless Living Creatures 11, 27 (CC 177; Wasink 1991: 30, 34 (text), 30–31, 34–35 (trans.)) describes how God translated Enoch into an immortal being (cf. Genesis 5.24), giving him the “pen-case of salvation” and the books of the angel Mefriel, his predecessor as scribe, which he copied in six days (cf. 2 Enoch 22.8–23.6, in which Mefriel is named ‘Vrevoil’; Isaac in Charlesworth 1983: 138–141) before returning to heaven, where he has since recorded the deeds of humankind. Pseudo-Theodosius of Alexandria, On Saint Michael (CC 387; Budge 1915: 345, 909 (trans.)) repeats this outline, noting in addition that the Archangel Michael presents the record to God; cf. Pearson 2000: 226–228.

7. ⲉⲡⲉⲕ : “in your” There are traces of one or two letters at the end of this line, perhaps belonging to an underlying text over which the present one is written as a palimpsest.

8. ⲙⲡⲣⲟϥϣⲉ ⲟⲕⲥⲁⲟⲓ . ⲁⲛ... : “{do not put} ...” This line seems to have been added after the writing of the preceding by a different, less regular hand. It apparently copies the text in the line above it, although the letters following ⲙⲡⲣⲟϥϣⲉ are too idiosyncratic to be certain that this is the case.

back 5. ⲡⲧⲥ . . . ⲓⲗⲡ ⲡⲧⲥ . . . ⲉⲛⲟϥ ⲡⲣⲁⲛ : “[erased passage] ⲡ ... in the name” This seems to be written in a different hand, and partially erased, in parts by washing, in parts by striking through the text. This may have been the original text of the tablet, before the current main text (in m2) was added, likely after the tablet was broken.

Contents:

1. Ostraca 1–3 (ll. 1–40): Love spell containing Horus-Isis narrative charm (KYP T298)

Complete formulary written continuously over the convex sides of three separate pottery ostraca with black ink. The ostraca were inscribed only after the vessels to which they belonged were broken.¹ Each ostrakon is fully covered with a single column of legible text with no significant margins or blank spaces, except for O.BYU Mag. 3—the ostrakon containing the end of the text—whose lower half is blank. The provenance of the manuscript is unknown. Aziz Atiya, professor of Languages and History at the University of Utah, likely acquired the ostraca in Egypt before donating them to the Harold B. Lee Library, Brigham Young University, where the ostraca are kept today. According to the catalogue records of the library, they were donated in 1980, however Atiya himself signed the catalogue only on the 31st of December 1981.²

The text is written in an upright majuscule, bilinear and bimodal, without ligatures. Although the scribe generally respects the space between letters and lines, the letterforms are irregular; the hand can be described as an alphabetic or evolving hand, according to Cribiore’s typology.³ α is written as a curved vertical line open to the right, with a small rounded bowl attached to its upper part. γ is written as Latin V and λ as an inverted V. The μ and ε are very curved, and the oblique strokes of κ, written in a single stroke, touch the vertical stroke. The letters are undecorated and unligatured. As in PCM I 20, the copyist does not use supralineation, but does make use of diaeresis above the iota. The copyist makes use of the tricolon to separate voces magicae at the beginning of the text, and begins each ostrakon by marking a simple cross.

The informality of the hand makes dating very difficult; as Blumell and Dosoo (2018: 204) note, the hand is very similar to that of Tsie, preserved in the archive of the monk Frange from the eighth century.⁴ It is also similar to a group of informal hands found in other Coptic magical texts, discussed by Choat and Gardner in their publication of P.Macq. I 1, which they date to the seventh or eighth centuries.⁵ At the same time, informal hands can display considerable similarities over large spans of time; Naqlun N. 45/95 (van der Vliet 2000; KYP M64) also shows many similar features, despite being dated to the fifth century based on its archeological context. We thus tentatively agree with Blumell and Dosoo's proposal of a seventh or eighth century date.

The dialect is a highly non-standard form of Sahidic, with several surprising features noted by Blumell and Dosoo (2018: 204–205). There is considerable haplography, confusion of visually similar letters (e.g., ε/c ostrakon 1 ll. 6), interchange of β/q, omission of ϣ, the writing of two consonants with the same point of articulation with a single letter (μβ/μπ > μ, ντ > ν/τ, τϥ > ϥ), the writing of /ti/ as τ-ϥ, and the regular use of the strong article (ϥ). Although none of these are particularly indicative of a geographical origin, Blumell and Dosoo (2018: 205, 209–210) suggest a possible origin north of Thebes; the other ostraca from Atiya's donation with known provenances come from Bawit, Wadi Sarga, and Edfu.⁶ At certain points (in particular ostrakon 2 ll. 1, 2, 5) the text seems to be significantly abbreviated, perhaps implying either miscopying, or that the manuscript was intended to serve as a prompt for a text well known to the reader.

ostracon 2 l. 1. ρο τε γμ : “Let <me> kiss <you>!” Cf. l. 11 (κο τε γμ), perhaps l. 2 (εβρη). Blumell and Dosoo propose to understand the command “sleep” or “lie down” (ἵκοντο) followed by the word for “sleep” or “dirt” (πίνος/ὑπνος, using the following νος). By comparison with PCM I 7 l. 9 and PCM I 20 l. 5, we suggest that Horus is here asking the woman to let him kiss her, with an initial imperative κω (for the sense “permit” see Crum CD 95a) followed by † (“give”, imperative or infinitive), then ογμ “a kiss”. Here, as often in the narrative charms, the difficulty of parsing the text syntactically may suggest either the writing of a primarily oral text, or that the written form served as an abbreviated aide memoire (compare in particular τμ in l. 5.).

15–16. σε μεκειμε εν : “<even> if you did not know how to find me” A recurrent phrase in the final section of narrative charms, this serves as a kind of ‘charter’ for the performance of the ritual in the present. In the mythic past it was possible for Horus to appeal to Isis directly, but even if this had not been possible the ritual she describes would still be sufficient. For parallels to this phrase, see PCM I 6 l. 14; PCM I 20 ll. 11–12; BKU I 7 (KYP M76) back ll. 3–4; BKU I 7 (KYP M88) ll. 29–30; Naqlun N. 78/93 (Kalchenko and van der Vliet 2022; KYP M1135) ll. 22–26; Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128) p. 5 ll. 18–19. By contrast, in PCM I 7 ll. 25–31 Isis asks Horus why he did not originally perform the ritual instead of seeking her help first, a variant which leads Kalchenko and van der Vliet (2022: 231–235) to see such phrases as formulas of reproach.

ostracon 2 l. 17–ostracon 3 l. 1. αμου [ε]πα[π]ατ : “Come to [my] cup?” This phrase is uncertain; if the reconstruction “cup” is correct, this would represent an epiclesis, calling on a supernatural being to empower liquid in a cup, which the practitioner would presumably drink, although the verb used, ογμν, rather means “to eat”; cf. the discussion in Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 237–238.

ostracon 3 7–8. εν σομ ιαω σαβαωθ : “by <the> power of Iao Sabaoth” The phrase “by the power of...” recurs in many Coptic magical texts; in this volume, compare PCM I 4 p. 3 l. 2, p. 6 l. 2; PCM I 25 p. 15 l. 12, p. 16 l. 2, p. 18 l. 6. This construction (e.g., hn t3 gm) does not seem to appear in older Egyptian texts, but rather to derive from the Greek ἐν δυνάμει + genitive, first clearly attested in Hellenistic Jewish texts (e.g., Testament of Levi 16.3 “by the power of the Most High” (ἐν δυνάμει ὑψίστου); Charles 1908: 59.3) and to become common in early Christian writings, in particular the Pauline letters (Romans 15.13, 19; I Corinthians 2.5; II Corinthians 6.7). The phrase does not occur in the Graeco-Egyptian magical corpus, rather appearing with the names of Jewish-Christian deities as an addition to Coptic narrative charms from around the fourth century (e.g., Mich.Ms. 136 p. 6 l. 5 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128), suggesting that it derives from a Christian context. Cf. the comments of Zellmann-Rohrer and Love (2022: 61–62, 237–238) who prefer to see an origin among Graeco-Egyptian magical texts.

2. Back ll. 29–46, front ll. 36–38: Love spell (KYP T330; hand 2)

A complete and well-preserved papyrus sheet containing two recipes written in different hands, the first a spell for a good singing voice, the second a love spell. The manuscript was purchased by Yale University from Hans P. Kraus, the rare book dealer, in New York on the 1st May 1964, using funds donated by Edwin John Beinecke.¹ The provenance of the manuscript is unknown, although Petersen notes that the references to place names in papyri from the same collection point to Middle Egypt, an origin that would agree with the dialectal features.²

The sheet is rectangular, with damage along the folds. 2 horizontal creases, as well as approximately 10 vertical creases, are visible. The manuscript was produced by cutting a length from a papyrus roll and turning it 90° to write the first recipe on the front (↓), before completing the recipe by copying the associated image and instructions onto the back (→). Subsequently, a second hand added the second recipe in the space remaining on the back, finishing in the narrow space at the bottom of the front, writing on the back at 180° to the other text on the object. Note that this interpretation reverses that of Emmel, who understood the text as beginning on the horizontal fibres; this would mean that the original scribe left an unusually large upper margin of 13.8 cm before beginning to write. Emmel thus begins the text on what we understand to be the back, numbering lines 1–28, before turning to what we consider as the recto, counting the first line as 29.

The first hand is highly informal and irregular, with letters varying in shape, shading, and size. Notable is the π, which may be written in either one or three strokes, and the c, which may be either very narrow, or very extended. The overall impression is of a sloping majuscule, with no serifs, although the λ has a characteristic shape, with the longer stroke (which may be written in either orientation) often demonstrating a marked leftwards curl at its top. The ς is tightly curled, and the ascender of σ is rather short. The impression is of a writer of the type classified by Cribiore as possessing an “alphabetic hand”, demonstrating knowledge of letterforms but clumsiness of coordination;³ a lack of experience may also be demonstrated by the extensive interlinear correction. The informality of this hand makes it extremely difficult to date.

The second hand is written with a thinner pen, generally using bilinear letterforms, but sometimes employing quadrilinear forms (notably the η), showing marked descenders on the ι, ρ, τ, and φ, and an enlarged β typical of post-seventh century documentary texts, of which this hand would seem to represent a good example. The γ is bilinear, and the τ shows a marked serif on the left part of its horizontal bar. In general the letters are separated, with only occasional ligatures (usually of ε or τ to the following letter); diaeresis is written as a single supralinear stroke, while supralineation indicating a schwa or autosyllabic consonant is usually marked by a dot. The hand becomes noticeably more upright, and uses thicker strokes, in the later lines of the back and on the front. Emmel suggested a seventh- or eight-century date for this manuscript, but the presence of the scribal mark of two oblique strokes (/), first attested in documentary texts of the eighth century, may allow us a more precise dating.⁴ Similar hands can be seen in SB Kopt. II 946 (TM 23156; 737 CE) and P.CLT 1 (TM 85755; 698 CE). Among the hands of this volume, it is comparable to nos. 10 and 18.

Both texts are written in non-standard Sahidic; the first shows the common writing of ε in place of the supralinear stroke, as well as alternation of ι/ει. More unusual features, such as the insertion of η where no letter or a schwa would be expected, the absence of ε or its replacement by γ, and the addition of unexpected vowels, suggests either considerable confusion about vowel qualities, or the phonetic writing of a non-standard variety. The second hand is far closer to standard Sahidic, but nonetheless occasionally displays the same general tendencies, notably the use of η for ε, and of ε for schwa, suggesting a dialectal affinity between the two writers. Kahle notes similar features as typical of dialects north of Thebes, with the use of η in particular being suggestive of Middle Egyptian dialectal influence.⁵

...the face of the Father... righteousness?... Hail, *tabernacle of the Father and the Son and the Spirit and those who are within it! Hail, seven *archangels¹⁵ who stand before the glory of the Father! Hail, *Principalities and *Authorities and *Powers that are on high! Hail, Church of the Firstborn and those who are within it! Hail, Powers! Hail, *cherubim! Hail, *seraphim! Hail, *Twenty-Four Presbyters of the¹⁰ Church that is in the heavens, and all who are in it! Hail, Paradise, and all who are in it! Hail, sun that shines! Hail, twelve powers that surround it! Hail, moon and all the stars! Hail, twelve rulers that appoint the hours of the night!¹⁵ Hail, twelve rulers that appoint the hours of the day! Hail, Hormosiel, the great ruler who gathers those of the heaven and those of the earth, he to whose voice those of the heavens listen, and they delight in it!

Now, I entreat you today, and I invoke you, Hormosiel, the one with the sweet voice²⁰ that is pleasant like <that of> Philemon, the one with the sweet voice, that you come to me today, me, NN, child of NN, and you stand over this *cup that is placed before me and you fill it for me with a voice which is sweet, which is pleasant, which [goes] up, which comes down, turning like a wheel, filled with all music,²⁵ which is sweet, which flows like a wind, which is not hoarse, does not breathe with difficulty, does not spit, yea, yea, for I adjure you by the right hand of the Father, I adjure you by the head of the Son,

General notes: Spells for a good singing voice are rare in the surviving corpus; there are no examples in Greek or Demotic, and only four others in Coptic: BL Ms. Or. 6794 (Kropp 1931: I no. E; KYP M306); BKU I 8 (KYP M81) ll. 1–39; P.PalauRib. 137 (KYP M719; unpublished); Turin Biblioteca Nazionale Ms. Peyron 158 c.1r (KYP M3761; unpublished).

19. ϣορμωσιελ : “Hormosiel” Hormosiel is one of the Four Luminaries known from Sethian Gnostic cosmologies; cf. the note to PCM I 25 p. 8 ll. 8–9. For Hormosiel as a celestial trumpeter, cf. BM EA 10122 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 4; KYP M289) front ll. 20–24: “Hormosiel the angel, the one in whose hands is the trumpet, who gathers the angels to the greeting of the Father, of the whole council of the Lord” (ϣορμωσιελ παγγελος παι ετερετσαλπιζ ντοτϣ εφσωοϣρ εϣοϣν παγγελος επασπασμος νπιωτ νπεχερωσια τηρϣ νπιωτ); Cairo JdE 49547 (Girard 1927; KYP M297) ll. 23–24: “Hail Hormosiel, the one who trumpets within the *veil of the Father” (ⲭⲉⲣⲁ ϣορμωσιⲉⲗ : ⲡⲉⲧⲥⲁⲗⲉ ⲡⲣⲟϣν ⲛⲡⲓⲕⲁⲧⲁⲡⲉⲧⲁⲥⲛⲁ ⲛⲡⲓⲱⲧ). Hormosiel recurs as an angelic trumpeter in Coptic apocrypha, such as the Investiture of Gabriel (CC 378; Müller 1962: 67.19–20) and Book of Bartholomew (CC 27; Westerhoff 1999: 136.10); cf. BKU I 8 (KYP M81), another spell for a good singing voice, in which Daueithe, another luminary, appears as an angelic lute player; Burns 2018.

20. ⲉⲛⲉⲙ ⲛⲫⲓⲗⲉⲙⲟⲛ : “like Philemon” Cf. Acts of Andrew and Philemon (CC 562) in which Philemon, disciple of Andrew, sings in the church of Lydda. His voice is “pleasing” and “sweet” (ⲛⲟⲩⲧⲏ, ϣⲟⲗⲉ), causing the pagan priests who come to kill the apostles to break into tears and convert to Christianity when they hear it. The sweetness of his voice is mentioned again when he is tortured by the governor Rufus; see Miroshnikov 2017: 22, 33–36, 43, 53, 65–67, 70 (trans.); Miroshnikov 2023 (translation of Coptic and Arabic versions); and compare the summary in the *Copto-Arabic Synaxarium, 14th Khoiak (Basset 1909: 376–377). The description of the pagan priests “delighting” (ἡδύνειν; Miroshnikov 2017: 60, 66 (trans.)) in his voice is reminiscent of l. 18 of this text. Compare also the boy with five loaves and two fish in John 6.8–9, called Philemon in Pseudo-Cyril of Jerusalem’s On Mary Magdalene (CC 118), described as having been given by God “a voice which is pleasant” (ⲟⲩⲥⲙⲏ ⲉⲥⲛⲟⲩⲧⲏ), likely the same figure (Coquin/Gordon 1990: 177 col. 1 ll. 21–22, 201 (trans.); Burke/Landau 2016: 206 (English trans.); cf. Miroshnikov 2017: 22).

back Image: This depicts the angel Hormosiel, his curly hair framed by a halo, with two tube-like wings, standing on a platform to blow his trumpet; the letters α and ω are written on his throat and body respectively; for a discussion of similar images of angels, see Dosoo 2022a: 139–151.

1–5. ⲥⲏⲛⲟⲩ ⲉⲛⲥⲉⲣⲟⲛⲉ ⲉⲛⲗⲉⲕⲱⲛ : “blood of a white dove” The blood of white doves is commonly used in rituals with a positive goal, such as acquiring favour or good business; cf. PCM I 25 p. 17 ll. 20–24; PCM I 26 p. 15 l. 32; Cairo JdE 45060 (Kropp 1931: I no. K; KYP M303) l. 59; BL Ms. Or. 6796 (2, 3) (Kropp 1931: I no. H; KYP M118) back l. 112; P.Stras. K 204 + 205 + 282 §2.22 l. 9 (Hevesi 2018; KYP M92); BM EA 10414a (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 3; KYP M287) back l. 17; cf. PCM I 12 p. 1 l. 7. For a discussion, see Dosoo 2022c: 517–519.

9. ⲙⲁⲥⲕⲉ : “musk” For this word, see Dosoo 2018: 17–18; alternatively understand “mastic”.

16–17. ⲉⲛⲡⲁⲗⲗⲟⲩ ⲛⲁⲧⲧⲱⲉⲩⲉⲙ : “the unfired cup” Literally “unslaked”, in this context perhaps understand a cup made from clay dried in the sun rather than fired in a kiln. Emmel suggests to translate “pristine”, that is, one which has not been used for cooking; cf. Crum CD 535a.

18–19. ⲉⲩⲱ ⲗⲉⲕⲱⲛ ⲉⲣⲏⲡ ⲗⲉⲕⲱⲛ : “white honey, white wine” These ingredients recur in other recipes for a good singing voice (BL Ms. Or. 6794 (Kropp: I no. E; KYP M306), front ll. 56–58; BKU I 8, front ll. 33, 39; P.PalauRib. 137 (KYP M719; unpublished) front l. 3), demonstrating that they belong to the same ritual tradition. The colour white likely has a positive connotation (cf. Dosoo 2022c: 518), while the honey has the quality of sweetness desired for the user’s voice (cf. front ll. 23, 25). See also Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 2.

20. ⲙⲟⲩ ⲧⲱⲛ : “water <from the month of> Tobī” Water blessed during the feast of Epiphany on 11th Tobī (19th January), the feast celebrating the baptism of Jesus, in a ritual called the ‘Sanctification of the Waters’ carried out the night before, during which the priest calls upon God to endow it with powers of purification. The ritual originally took place at the Nile, but from the tenth century was moved within the church building. The water is used to baptise the congregation (symbolically, by anointing the head in the modern rite), while participants may also take it home to use throughout the year (Basset 1915: 573–574; Drescher 1958: 60–61; Burmester 1967: 250–256; Grossmann 1991; Denysenko 2016; cf. the Coptic prayer for the sanctification in SPP XVIII 276 L.12–M.3). For other examples in the Coptic magical corpus, see BKU I 8 (KYP M81) l. 33; BL Ms. Or. 6796 (2), (3) back (Kropp 1931: I no. H; KYP M118) back ll. 104–105; P.Mich.Inv. 593 (Worrell 1930: 245, translating “brick water”; KYP M9) p. 6 l. 5–7 (cf. the same recipe in P.Mich.Inv. 594 front ll. 3–4; KYP M15). For examples of its use in later *Copto-Arabic magic, see the rituals for Psalms 4, 27, 31, 35, 74, 88 in Henein/Bianquis 1975; for Mediaeval and early Modern Greek magic (as ἀγιασμὸν τῶν Θειοφανείων/Φώτων etc.), see Delatte 1927: 43.15, 49.3, 50.22–23, 101.1–2, 127.32, 129.3, 137.11, 597.19–20, 620.22; for examples from Ethiopian magic, see Strelcyn 1981: 60.

Image: The figures here seem to constitute a performative depiction of the ritual; on the left a man and a woman stand side by side, while in the middle a figure, likely representing the practitioner, is depicted in the orant position, surrounded by kharaktēres representing his power. On the right, the man is now kissing the woman, with the kharaktēres beside him representing the force of the spell; see Dosoo 2018: 30–31 for a discussion.

29. ΟΥΔΗΡΑΝΟΣ : “a ‘tyrant’” This seems to be a technical term for a type of love spell which takes control of its target, but it is otherwise unattested in our corpus.

30. ρ : “three” Emmel proposes an uncertain abbreviated word modified by following ἄσπαρτον rather than a numeral here.

45. ἄνιογζωωρ : “dogs” Literally “these (black) dogs”, but an instance of the affective demonstrative (or ‘strong article’) being used in a generalisation, equivalent to a noun without an article in English (Layton 2000: 49).

back l. 44–front l. 36. ἡπερκαας εσγωῖ : “Do not let her eat...” This passage draws upon the common motifs of love as the inability to eat, or drink (LOVE IS ABSTINENCE), and of love as animal behaviour; see the notes to PCM I 7 ll. 32–36 for parallels for animal behaviour in the Coptic corpus. For parallels to the inability to eat or drink in the context of Greek magic, see Martinez 1995, in the context of Jewish magic, see Saar 2017: 126–128, and in the context of Syriac magic, see Cherkashina/Lyavdansky 2021: 78–81; Cherkashina/Lyavdansky 2022: 29–31. Compare Isaiah 40.15 for the analogy of a “drop of water in a jar” (οὐτελεῖλε εβολ ἐν ογκαλαος); cf. the discussion in Jernstedt 1929: 125–128; a near exact parallel to this phrase may be found in PCM I 28 p. 6 ll. 11–12. For other instances of the motif of LOVE IS ABSTINENCE in this volume, see PCM I 28 p. 5 ll. 11–13; PCM I 32 p. 1 l. 16.

1. Front ll. 1–20: Curse to cause sickness (KYP T483)

Complete sheet of papyrus with damage along the folds and a piece of the bottom-right missing, containing a curse intended to cause sickness. It is rectangular in shape, with 3 vertical and 8 horizontal creases visible. The back is uninscribed. The manuscript was purchased in New York, from Hans P. Kraus, the rare book dealer,¹ and acquired by Yale University on the 1st May 1964 with funds donated by Edwin John Beinecke. Its provenance is unknown, although Petersen notes that place names in papyri from the same collection point to Middle Egypt.²

The sheet is written in black ink in a single column of 20 lines (↓). The hand is a regular, bimodal majuscule, respecting intralinear space. The script demonstrates a slight slant to the right, particularly in the final seven lines. The horizontal and right vertical stroke of the $\mathfrak{u}$ are sometimes written in a single movement, leading it to resemble the minuscule form. There are occasional ligatures, in particular $\tau + \mathfrak{t}$. ϵ , $\mathfrak{o}$, and $\mathfrak{c}$ are very narrow, while λ and τ are wide, and $\mathfrak{v}$ is tall, extending beyonds the bounds of the general bilinearity. Supralineation is only used with voces magicae. Petersen (1964) hesitantly suggested a sixth or seventh century date, but close hands may be found in P.Ryl.Copt. 175 (TM 87349; 721 CE) and PSI Com. XI 2 (TM 65033; 743–769 CE); we thus suggest an eighth century date.³

The dialect is Sahidic, only slight diverging from the literary standard, writing the supralinear stroke as ϵ and lacking $\mathfrak{n} \succ \mathfrak{u}$ assimilation before a labial; while these are both common, the latter is particularly characteristic of Middle Egypt.⁴

¹⁵ I adjure <you> today, O *angel of the holy altar, that you will not be free, nor will you be released to go up to God, nor <to take> your offering up, nor to worship the true judge, nor to meet the Lord, until you have stood upon the body <of> NN and you have brought upon him suffering and disease ¹⁰ and sickness and a discharge and a fever and a pain and a weariness and a dejection and a shivering and a swelling and a demon of madness and seventy diseases, each one being different, and you bring them down upon the [body] <of> NN for all the days of his life, ¹⁵ so that neither a male magician nor a female sorcerer will be able to take pity on him, nor heal him from my hands, I, NN, child of NN, until I have mercy upon him!

Act and complete for me the entire desire of my heart, the demand of my soul through your great power, demoniac Asmodeus, yea, yea, quickly, quickly! ... ²⁰ Phellōth, Athes, quickly, quickly!

3. ΠΝΟΣ ΕΝΧ[Ε]ΡΟΥΒΙΝ : “the great cherub” Emmel translates “great guardian angel”. The title “great cherub” is applied in Pseudo-Chrysostom, On the Four Bodiless Living Creatures (CC 177) to the chief of the *Four Living Creatures who draw the chariot of god, in which he is named Kherubiēl (Wasink 1991); he is likely the lion-faced creature (Hagen 2007). Asarōth is mentioned as the mount of God in PCM I 26 p. 10 l. 27 and P. Vindob. K 8301 (Stegemann 1933–1934: no. 44; KYP M273) ll. 1–5, and the name also appears in P.Lond.Copt. 524 (KYP M359) l. 115, without further context, but with three other names (ΙΑΘΑΒΙΡ, ΚΕΓΓΙΝΛ, and ΣΕΒΡΙΝΛ) perhaps the other three Living Creatures; cf. Dosoo 2021d: 417.

5. ΠΑΓΓΕΛΟΣ ΕΝΠΕΘΗΣΙΑΣΤΗΡΙΟΝ ΕΤΟΥΛΑΒ : “O angel of the holy altar” As discussed in Krueger 2022, the “angel of the altar” (also “angel of the sacrifice” or “angel of the topos”) is the guardian angel of the church altar in Egyptian Christianity, attested from the fourth century. One of the angel’s tasks, alluded to here, is to convey the prayers and offerings of the congregation to God. The prominence of the angel of the altar here is perhaps a sign that the written curse was to be deposited at the altar; cf. BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) back ll. 80–82, a curse which is to be buried under the altar of a topos (i.e., a monastery, church or shrine; ΠΕΘΗΣΙΑΣΤΗΡΙΟΝ ΝΟΥΤΟΠΟΣ).

15. ΝΕΜΑΚΟΣ ΕΝΡΟΟΥΤ ΟΥΔΕ ΦΑΡΜΑΓΟΣ ΕΝΣΕΙΜΕ : “neither a male magician nor a female sorcerer” For the claim that (other?) “magicians” will be unable to heal a curse, compare PCM I 3, front col. 1 ll. 30–33, and cf. the discussion in Dosoo 2021b: 51.

18–19. ΑΣΜΟΤΕΟΣ : “Asmodeus” A demonic figure known from Tobit 3.8, 16 etc., in which he murders seven husbands of Sarah before he is banished and bound by the intervention of the angel Raphael. He recurs in the Testament of Solomon 5 in an account clearly inspired by Tobit (McCown 1922: 21*–25*; Charlesworth 1983: 965–967 (trans.)). Since the demon here seems to be under the command of the angel of the altar, Krueger (2022: 295–296) suggests that this text may have been associated with a church dedicated to Raphael. For other instances of angels commanding demons in curses, see P.Berol. 10587 (Beltz 1983: no. I 555; KYP M510) col. 1 ll. 21–23; Bodleian MS. Copt. c (P) 4 (Crum 1896; KYP M412) back l. 6.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–5: Invocation to protect virginity and marriage (KYP T659)

Complete rectangular sheet of papyrus, slightly damaged on the right side, leaving some of the individual fibres visible. The presence of the generic name marker likely indicates that this was a formulary, an invocation to protect the ‘purity’ of a woman, perhaps in the context of a celibate marriage. The manuscript was folded or rolled; vertical creases are apparent ca. every 2 cm, about 14 in all.

The manuscript was purchased as part of a lot of six Coptic manuscripts for $150 on the 13th October 1952 from Ulrich Steindorff Carrington, the son of the Egyptologist Georg Steindorff, who had died in August of the previous year. The papyrus had been part of his father’s collection.¹

The text is written in black ink on the front (→) of the papyrus; the back was left blank. Between the third and fourth line, there is a wider interlinear space of about 1 cm, separating possessive article from noun.² The script is an informal bilinear, bimodal, right-sloping majuscule. ø, τ, γ, Ⲡ have serifs, and there is a distinctive ø-ε ligature. The ⲃ is significantly larger than other letters, the ⲙ appears deeply curved; we follow the original editors in proposing a date in the late eighth to early tenth centuries.³ The dialect is non-standard Sahidic, displaying the lack of ⲛ > ⲙ assimilation before labials, the writing of the supralinear stroke as ε, and of ⲱ for ⲟ; the original editors suggest an Upper Egyptian origin, primarily because of the use of the επε-SUBJECT-ⲛⲁ future with ⲕⲉⲕⲁⲁⲥ in l. 3.⁴

I adjure you (pl.) today, that, just as you (f.s.) guarded your virginity and your purity and your marriage, may NN, child of NN, guard her virginity and her marriage |⁵ and her purity!

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph.

1. “you, (pl.)... you (f.s.)” A rare case in which the adjured being is female; for other examples see PCM I 25 p. 1 ll. 25–26 (addressing a female demon), PCM I 29 l. 10 (addressing a scorpion); BnF Suppl.Grec. 1340 (unpublished; KYP M39) l. 9 (addressing Artemis). The apparent alternation between plural and singular may be either an error, or indicate the use of the plural to indicate respect, an example of the phenomenon known in linguistics as the ‘T-V distinction’, in which V pronouns indicate greater formality or express a hierarchical relationship between speaker and addressee. For the first possibility, compare, for example, PCM I front ll. 1, 7–8 and PCM I 27 ll. 4, 9, in which singular and plural forms alternate. For the possibility of the T-V distinction, see the discussion in Blumell/Dosoo 2021: 124. The likely addressee here is Mary, in her role as the “ever-virgin” (ἀειπάρθενος), who is called upon to help the target to maintain her virginity in marriage just as Mary did (Blumell/Dosoo 2021: 139).

2. ΕΤΟΓΓΑΡΘΕΝΙΑ ΜΕΝ ΠΟΥΤΕΘΩ ΜΕΝ ΠΟΥΚΑΜΟΣ : “your virginity and your purity and your marriage” “Virginity” here likely refers straightforwardly to lack of sexual experience, rather than being ‘faithful’ to one’s spouse. “Purity” (᾿τῆβω) in this context translates Greek ἀγνεία, with the more specific meaning of “chastity”. The pairing of the two nouns is attested from around the fourth century in reference to Christian celibate ascetics, both male and female, and the Virgin Mary, who “guard” (ῶρεζ/φυλάσσειν) their virginity and chastity. The reference to “marriage” is less expected; Blumell/Dosoo (2021) suggest the context of celibate marriage, in which couples agreed to cohabit without engaging in sexual intercourse (to be distinguished from spiritual marriage, in which celibate ascetic couples lived together without formally marrying). Such marriages are attested in Egypt in literary sources which date from the fourth century, but are particularly common in Egypt around the ninth (Mikhail 2017: 42). On this understanding, this text would represent a short adjuration of Mary to be used by an individual in a celibate marriage—likely the husband, since it refers to the woman in the third person—to ensure that the wife remains celibate. Alternatively, it might be possible to understand the text as being intended to protect an unmarried woman from losing her virginity, and thus marriageability; this seems to be a concern in two other surviving texts, PCM I 23 ll. 21–49 and P.Stras. K 135 (Crum 1922b; KYP M474). The first of these texts also mentions the virginity of Mary, although both include the binding of the virility of a specific man, and neither mention marriage. Compare the discussion of these texts in Blumell/Dosoo 2021: 129–131 who suggest that young women’s parents might be the most likely commissioners of such a ritual.

Linguistic description: Sahidic with Faiyumic features.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–16: Love spell in the form of Horus-Isis historiola-based charm (KYP T342)
2. Back l. 1: Name of target (?) (KYP T6890)

Complete sheet of papyrus, damaged on the left, and along the fold line in the top third of the sheet, resulting in damage to lines 5 and 6. At least 5 vertical and 2 horizontal creases are visible. The papyrus is of uncertain provenance, having been gifted before 1965 to Sergio Donadoni (1914–2015) by his former student Carla Burri, perhaps acquired during her time as cultural attachée to the Italian Embassy in Cairo (1964–1981).¹ The papyrus remains in the private collection of the Donadoni family in Rome.

The hand of the front is an irregular, generally upright majuscule; letter heights are inconsistent and there is little interlinear space. The α has a rounded bowl separated from a straight oblique stem, Δ and χ are narrow and highly angular. ε, ø, and c are also narrow, although ε has a long middle stroke. κ is written in two movements, the first resembling a Latin V, with the lower oblique stroke drawn separately in a second movement. μ is curved but not deeply, and o is small; γ is written like a Latin V. The bottom stroke of the ϣ is straight and sloped to the left, while ϣ is bilinear. There is no supralineation or punctuation, but diaeresis is always used on ι. The hand's idiosyncrasy makes dating difficult, but similar letterforms may be found in a few private legal documents from the Faiyum (CPR IV 55, 66, & 88). Although dated by their original editor to the eighth century, this is somewhat arbitrary; documents from the Faiyum tend to date to the late eighth to ninth centuries, a range we likewise propose for this papyrus. We may note that like this magical manuscript, Faiyumic legal texts tend to be wider than they are tall.²

A single word is written on the lower left part of the back, at 90° counterclockwise to the front, in a second, alphabetic, hand suggestive of an even lower level of scribal training. α consists of a short vertical stroke with a rounded second stroke written in nearly in the centre. ο resembles a mirrored α with a flat left-hand side, apparently written in a second stroke.

The dialect is broadly Sahidic, heavily influenced by what are best understood as Faiyumic features. The hypercorrection of λ to ρ suggests a writer whose own dialect was lambdicistic. There is a similar, albeit non-dialectal hypercorrection of τ to Δ, β to ϣ, and use of the long form of the vowels ει and ογ where their reduced forms would be expected in Sahidic. We also see the occasional omission of the circumstantial ε- (apocope), and the writing of ε for schwa or ̄n̄. There are examples of the exchange of the vowels ε/η and ο/ω, as well as, once (l. 1), ε for ̄ō. The use of μεχε-/μεχα for ̄πεχε-/̄πεχα is likewise associated by Quecke (1970: 373–374) with the Faiyum, although Kahle (1954: I 123–124) associates it with regions B–E, that is, from the Faiyum to Armant.

Horus-Isis Narrative Charms: This is an example of a narrative charm in which the main protagonists are Horus and Isis; for the structure and parallels, see the notes to PCM I 7 front. For a discussion of the woman encountered by *Horus in ll. 10–11, see the notes to PCM I 6 l. 3.

front 1. ⲁⲓⲙⲟⲟⲩⲉ ⲉⲓⲣⲉⲛ ⲉⲓⲣⲉⲛ ⲛⲁⲙⲉⲛⲧⲉ : “I walked by the door of hell” We might expect “I walked through the door of hell” here—this is how it has been translated in all other editions, and is found in the parallels to this narrative charm; see PCM I 7 ll. 1–3, PCM I 16 ll. 5–9; cf. Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 223. If the preposition is indeed ⲉⲓⲣⲉⲛ rather than ⲉⲓⲣⲉⲛ, however, this does not seem possible, unless we are dealing with an idiom otherwise unknown to us.

3. ⲩⲉⲥⲉⲕⲓⲛ : “bag” van der Vliet translates “travelling bag”, understanding a writing of the Latin bisaccium. This is phonologically plausible (cf. ⲥⲁⲕⲏⲛ, ⲥⲁⲕⲓⲛ for ⲥⲁⲕⲕⲓⲟⲛ in Förster WBGW: 715), although the loanword is only attested in modern Greek (as βισάκκι; Dickey 2023: 85). The normal contemporary Greek equivalent is δισάκκιον (Sophocles 1860: 260) which appears in documentary papyri from Egypt. Donadoni does not translate, but suggests a diminutive of βῆσ(σ)α, an Alexandrian word for a type of jar or drinking cup; see LSJ s.v., Bonati 2016: 35 (with further references), although the attested diminutive is rather βῆσ(σ)ίον.

3. ⲉⲕⲁⲧⲉⲥ : “jar” Donadoni translates “water-wheel” (norīa), understanding a variant of ⲕⲟⲩⲧⲉ (“turning round, circuit”); Pernigotti follows this translation.

11–12. ⲕⲁⲛ ⲛⲡⲉⲕⲉⲣⲉ [ⲉⲣⲟⲩ] : “even if you did not find me” For this construction, see the notes to PCM I 16 o. 2 ll. 15–16.

12. ⲕⲓⲣⲓⲉ : “Kirie” Roxanne Bélanger Sarrazin proposes that the final invocation should be understood as beginning here, supplying “(say)” before this word (private communication 26/3/2020). This seems like a promising possibility, since we might expect an invocation to begin here. Perhaps understand with Donadoni the vocative κύριε κύριε, “O Lord, Lord!”

14. ⲉⲛⲉⲟⲩⲙⲓ : “lust” Likely a euphemism for the male genitalia, as in PCM I 24 ll. 32–33.

15. [. .]ⲩ : “...” As suggested by Donadoni, ⲛⲟⲩ “to go” (Crum CD 219a–b) would fit well here, although it is better attested in Coptic as an auxiliary verb with the meaning “to be about to” than as an independent verb of motion.

back 1. ⲥⲟⲫⲓⲁ : “Sophia” Donadoni understood this as a description (“indicazione definitoria”) of the content of the text of the front, presumably the Greek word “wisdom” (σοφία), but it seems more likely that we have here the cognate personal name; this may be an indication that the formulary was later re-used as an applied text targeting a woman named Sophia.

Linguistic description: Sahidic with Middle Egyptian features.

Manuscripts belonging to the archive: PCM I 21–29; possible relationships with PCM I 30–33.

Nine formularies of various formats (6 sheets and 3 codices) on parchment and paper. Seven of the manuscripts were purchased in May 1930 by Prof. Carl Schmidt along with several Greek, Demotic, and Coptic¹ papyri and ostraca for 1575 marks, and subsequently acquired by the University of Heidelberg papyrus collection no later than in 1933.² In October 1933, two further manuscripts (PCM I 25–26) from the archive were bought for the University of Heidelberg by Carl Schmidt from the Cairo antiquities dealer Maurice Nahman for 90 Egyptian pounds.³ The presence of several Greek papyri from the Faiyum in the first sale suggests that this was the origin of the lot.⁴

Six of the manuscripts—PCM I 21–26—all written on parchment, can be identified as having been written by the same scribe based on palaeographical analysis; these include the two manuscripts of the second sale. The scribe identifies himself in a colophon in one of the manuscripts, PCM I 23, as Deacon Iōhannēs, “servant of Michael of Pcellēt”. In the colophon, he also provides a date of production of the manuscript, 11th Paopi 684 AM (9th October 967).⁵

² These initial purchases were PCM I 21–24, 27–29; Bilabel/Grohmann 1934: 392; Seider 1964: 163, n. 31; Gardner/Johnston 2019: 31–32. On the Heidelberg papyrus collection, see also Schmelz 2018.

⁴ From Krokodilopolis: P.Heid. Gr. II 239; from Tebtunis: P.Bad. VI 169; P.Heid. Gr. IV 318; from Thegonis: SB VI 9540; from Kerkeosiris: SB VI 9537, but cf. also P.Bad. II 28, apparently from Hermopolis. Cf. Seider 1964: 163; Gardner 2023a: 49.

Iōhannēs likely produced the other manuscripts within (at most) a few decades of this colophon, so that they can be dated with some certainty to between 951 and 1000 CE. The remaining manuscripts (PCM I 27–29) are dated palaeographically to either the tenth or the eleventh centuries (cf. the discussions of the individual manuscripts).

PCM I 25 & 26 are written as palimpsests, with the codices produced by taking single folios from pre-existing codices and folding them in half to create bifolios. Those of PCM I 25 were identified by Hans Quecke in 1974 as pages drawn from a Pauline lectionary which he dated to the ninth century.⁶ Although PCM I 26 was lost when he made the identification, Bilabel's description of the manuscript as a palimpsest led him to suggest that its leaves belonged to same original manuscript, a hypothesis since confirmed by Gardner.⁷

The remaining parchment manuscripts from the archive are small sheets (PCM I 21–24). These are tall, narrow, and oddly shaped, suggesting both that they mimic the format of the rotulus, or vertical roll, and that they are made from scraps left over from the production of larger parchment sheets.⁸

Three of the Library's manuscripts are written on paper; two, PCM I 27 & 29, are sheets. PCM I 28, by contrast, is a codex of 16 pages, produced from sheets almost exactly the same size as that of PCM I 27, suggesting perhaps that they were produced in the same mould;⁹ both of these manuscripts seem to be written in the same hand.

The hand of Iōhannēs is regular, with separate letters written with a rather thick stroke. The script is majuscule, bilinear, and generally upright, though occasionally sloping to the right. The α is small and triangular, the β also angular, but quite large, the ζ shaped like the numeral 3, and the ζ usually shaped like a x with a z-like tail.¹⁰ There are small serifs on the ascending oblique strokes of λ and Δ, curling slightly to the left, and the τ usually has a small serif on the left of its crossbar (more rarely the right). The ϣ and σ are expansive, the latter with a small bowl and a long, curved ascender which rises from the lower part of the bowl; it thus follows the ductus (though not the form) of the Faiyumic rather than Sahidic Quecke (1972: 5 n. 2) accepted their reading, but corrected this to 19th October, noting that the previous year was a leap year. Meyer/Smith (1994: 179) follow Bilabel/Grohmann's dating, although Meyer 1996: 2 follows that of Quecke. The correct reading was made in Johnston/Gardner 2018: 47–48; cf. Gardner 2023a: 51–53. We have confirmed the date using the online Almagest Ephemeris Calculator (<https://webpace.science.uu.nl/~gent0113/astro/almagestephemeris.htm>; accessed 1/3/2023).

ϸ, perhaps another indication of its geographical origin.¹¹ The † varies between a form with two serifs on the horizontal crossbar, and a sans serif variant. Iōhannēs typically uses dots instead of supralinear strokes, but does use supralineation for voces magicae, nomina sacra, abbreviations, and a few other words. Colons and two oblique strokes, sometimes tripuncts and three oblique lines, are used for punctuation. Paragraphoi consisting of simple lines are used to separate recipes and textual sections.

The hands of PCM I 27 & 28 are so similar that we suggest a single scribe (see the introduction to no. 27 for a discussion). The writing is datable to the tenth or eleventh century (see the introduction to PCM I 27). PCM I 29 is written in a hand unrelated to the other hands, but of a similar date.¹²

The ink of Iōhannēs and the scribe of PCM I 27 & 28 is brown in colour, with different manuscripts displaying different degrees of darkness; in each case, the ink is visible under ultraviolet light, and almost entirely transparent under near-infrared light, suggesting the use of a plant-based ink. The ink of the front of PCM I 29 is black, and shows similar opacity under visible, ultraviolet and near-infrared light, suggesting it to be a carbon-based ink; the back is plant based like that of the other manuscripts.¹³

The dialect of all of the manuscripts can be described as a form of Sahidic heavily influenced by a Middle Egyptian dialect of the type likely spoken in the Faiyum,¹⁴ although the lambdicism typical of classical Faiyumic (F4, F5) is rarely apparent.¹⁵ Some of these are typical for non-standard forms of Sahidic: β for ^sq; ε in place of the Sahidic supralinear stroke, or more dramatically ε- for ^sñ-/ñ-; interchange of ε/η and o/ω; haplography of nasal consonants (μ/η for μμ/ηη); lack of η > μ assimilation before a labial consonant; the simplification of the sequence nasal + stop to the stop alone (μπ/ητ > π/τ); the ‘strong’ article (π-/†-/μ-) often being used where we would expect the normal definite article in Sahidic. Others are more indicative of a Middle Egyptian dialectal influence: ε/η for ^sΔ;¹⁶ η for the Sahidic supralinear stroke; ι for unstressed ^se; Δ for stressed ^so; ζ is occasionally

In the following notes we provide only a few instances of the rarer dialectal (or idiolectal) features. Cf. the briefer characterisations of the dialects in Bilabel/Grohmann 1934: 305, 392; Meyer 1996: 5. Note that ‘Middle Egyptian’ here refers not to Mesokemic, but rather to the larger family to which Mesokemic, as well as Hermopolitan and Faiyumic belong; see Funk 2020. Jacques van der Vliet (2018b: 100–101) characterises this variety as ‘Fayoumi-Sahidic’.

omitted,¹⁷ and we sometimes find distinctive Faiyumatic forms;¹⁸ double vowels are not usually written, but occasionally Sahidic single vowels are doubled;¹⁹ the prefixes $\epsilon\kappa\epsilon$ -, $\epsilon\pi\epsilon$ - etc. (circumstantial/future III) are quite consistently written as $\kappa\epsilon$ -, $\pi\epsilon$ -; as a result of the treatment of $\bar{\eta}$, $\epsilon\bar{\eta}$ regularly appears as the conjunctive prefix; the abbreviation $\overline{\sigma\epsilon}$ is used for $\bar{\sigma}\chi\omicron\epsilon\iota\varsigma$. None of these features appear with complete consistency within any of the manuscripts, but some are found in all of them, and in manuscripts produced by all three scribes. Similar features have been described by Ivan Miroshnikov in an acrostic hymn to the Archangel Michael dated to the tenth or eleventh century,²⁰ and can also be found in various documentary texts and inscriptions from the Faiyum from this period.²¹

All of the manuscripts (with the sole exception of PCM I 27) display the (often extensive) use of Arabic loanwords, albeit almost exclusively in the recipes rather than in the spoken formulae. The Coptic of all three scribes, and in particular Iōhannēs, is so non-standard at times as to suggest that it may not have been their first language—gender is confused, pronouns and conjugation bases may be absent, and entire clauses occasionally seem to have dropped out in the process of copying.²²

The likely findspot in the Faiyum, and the dialectal features, have led Gardner and Johnston to tentatively suggest a possible relationship to the monastery of the Archangel Michael in Phantou, near modern Hamuli.²³ As Gardner has observed, the original lectionaries lying beneath the palimpsests resemble those produced at this monastery,²⁴ and the self-identification of Iōhannēs as “servant of Michael” would be consistent with an attachment to a monastery dedicated to the archangel.²⁵

We should note that several other Coptic magical manuscripts from the Institut für Papyrologie in Heidelberg contain marked similarities of dialect, content, and hands to the ‘Heidelberg Library’ which, although they cannot be as directly connected to the main archive, may nonetheless have once belonged to it, or at least derive from a similar context.²⁶ The most notable of these are PCM I 30 & 31, both of which contain the same dialectal features as the main Library, and which contain reference to “three evil incenses” (ⲉⲃⲟⲟⲩⲧ etc.),²⁷ also attested in PCM I 27 from the Library. While the manuscript of PCM I 31 is lost, the hand of PCM I 30 resembles that of PCM I 29, although it is not close enough to suggest a single scribe with any certainty. PCM I 32 & 33 also display notable similarities in terms of their content to the manuscripts of the Heidelberg Library, although to a less marked degree.

²⁶ We should also note here P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 392 a–b and 994, identified by Krisztina Hevesi as part of the same manuscript as BKU I 26 (KYP M525); this manuscript has very similar linguistic features to the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Archive. A new edition of the full manuscript is in preparation by Krisztina Hevesi and Anne Grons.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–23: Curse (?) (KYP T229)

A narrow, irregularly cut sheet of parchment, completely preserved and inscribed with brown ink on the front only. The first three lines of text are written in linear kufic and Coptic, followed by a figure flanked by a description of the ritual procedure as part of which it is to be copied. Below is the invocation, marked on top and bottom by a separation line. The purpose of the formulary seems to perhaps be a curse, since there is space for the naming of two targets in the final lines; it may specifically be a separation spell, since two individuals are mentioned.

The manuscript belongs to the group known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’, and is part of the 1930 purchase; it was written in the hand of Deacon Iōhannēs, whose scribal and linguistic features are more fully described in the introduction to this archive (see pp. 259–263). Several recognisable features of his style can be seen in his use of a wide range of paratextual markers, simple horizontal lines to separate text sections, and of brown ink.

Our line numbering of this manuscript diverges from that in Bilabel/Grohmann; they number our ll. 9–11 as ll. 1–3, with our ll. 4–8 numbered 2–6 (overlapping with our ll. 9–11). The line numbered here as 12 corresponds to l. 7 in Bilabel/Grohmann, with the following lines numbered sequentially.

1–3: As recognised by Gardner (2023b: 88–89), these ‘kharaktēres’ represent a form of stylised Arabic called by Casanova (1921: 52–53) ‘linear kufic’ (“koufique linéaire”). As the name suggests, it is based on the Arabic calligraphic style of the same name used in the early centuries of Islam. ‘Linear kufic’ exaggerates the angularity of kufic, adding a continuous baseline, and generally neglecting the diacritic marks that distinguish similar letters. Porter (2010: 133) notes that similar stylised kufic appears in non-magical contexts from the ninth century, and in eighth/ninth century Arabic magical papyri (cf. Bsees 2019: 203–204). In later periods the style came to be used for amulets, with early examples being found in twelfth-century magical bowls; it may also be found in pseudo-al-Būnī’s Šams al-Ma’ārif (Porter 2010; Porter 2011: 176–180; for pseudo-al-Būnī see Gardiner 2012: 100–105, 123–30; Coulon 2017: 225–229). In principle the script can be read (see the alphabet in BnF arabe 2676 fol. 5v, reproduced in Porter 2010: 137 as fol. 90), but in practice the degree of stylisation makes this difficult, and so we do not attempt decipherment in this volume. Other examples of linear kufic may be found in PCM I 25 p. 17 ll. 1–10, PCM I 31 (front tableau), PCM I 35 (back), PCM I 37 (back), and perhaps PCM I 33 (back). Linear kufic may also be found in the Armenian amulet San Lazzaro degli Armeni Ms. 3042 (1779 CE; Feydit 1986: no. VIII, see fig. 81), associated with a procedure for favour before social superiors.

5–6. ⲙⲉ ⲧⲉⲓⲧⲏⲥ : “metal plate” We tentatively propose to read ⲓⲧⲏⲥ as an unusual writing of the word ⲙⲏⲧⲉ “metal plate” (Crum CD 45b), but cf. PCM I 24, in which ⲓⲧⲏⲥ appears in a list of ingredients, and we interpret it as ⲡⲉⲧⲧⲉⲥ (c lost to haplography), with the sense “that which is dried”, which would not seem to fit here. Alternatively, perhaps understand ⲙⲉⲧⲉⲓⲧⲏⲥ as ⲙⲉⲧⲉⲓⲧⲏⲥ “with a nail”

9. Ⲫⲱⲙⲓⲯ : “Zōmiz” Gardner (2023b: 89–90) notes a possible connection to Semesilam (from Northwest Semitic šms ‘Im “Eternal Sun”; Bonnet 1989: 98–99), but a more likely derivation from Semyaz/Shemhazai or Shamhurish, respectively the leaders of the fallen angels in 1 Enoch 6–10, and the leader of the ifrit in Egyptian popular tradition (cf. Viaud 1978: 26–27). We note that Ⲫⲱⲙⲓⲯ could readily be derived from the Greek form Σεμιαζά (Semiaza), the original of the Ge’ez ሰምያዛ (Sämyaza, etc.; Langlois 2010: 146).

14. ⲡⲕⲁⲗⲁ ⲛ ⲛⲁⲗⲱⲛⲏⲓ : “leader of the djinn” As recognised by Gardner (2023b: 86) and Love (2022b: 702), this word is certainly the Arabic loanword جنى (ginniyy; “djinn”). We follow Gardner in understanding the meaning as “chief djinn”; Love suggests “the djinn-swallow” or “the djinn-headed”. Mößner and Nauwerth suggest, based on their translation of “bird of help”, a reference to the Holy Spirit (Mößner/Nauwerth 2015: 329).

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–41: Spell for favour (KYP T231)
2. Front ll. 41–63: Curse to make a woman hated (KYP T232)

Tall, narrow parchment sheet, complete and well-preserved, containing one procedure for favour and one curse. The manuscript is part of the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’ and was acquired by Carl Schmidt in the 1930 purchase. The hand is that of the copyist who identifies himself in PCM I 23 as the Deacon Iōhannēs; see the description of the archive (pp. 259–263) as a whole for this hand and its characteristic linguistic features.

The text is divided into several sections by simple horizontal lines, and contains two image tableaux associated with each of the procedures. The manuscript appears not to have been folded.

Here we count the initial line of kharaktēres as a line, whereas the texts of Bilabel/Grohmann and Frankfurter treat the following line as line 1, so that our l. 2 corresponds to their l. 1, and so on, until our l. 11–23, which they number again as ll. 1–13; our ll. 24 and following then correspond to their ll. 10 and following.

1–23. These lines are divided by horizontal strokes, represented here as supralineation.

28–29. πινος ἰκτερογυνι : “the great cherub” For this title, cf. PCM I 18 l. 3 and the accompanying note.

33–34. εις ζηντε : ταναχοογ : υπαγγελος ραχοογ : “Behold, I shall send my? angel before” A citation of Mark 1.2: “As it is written in the prophet Isaiah, ‘Behold, I will send my angel before you and he will prepare your way’” (κατα θε ετσηρ ζη̄ ησαιαο πεπροφητης ρε εις ζηντε τ̄ναχευ παγγελος ρατεκρη παι ετ̄νασοβτε̄ η̄τεκρη; Horner 1911: I 354). This passage occurs in scriptural amulets (e.g., P.Oxy. LXXXVI 5073), probably being understood as a guarantee of angelic protection (cf. Sanzo 2014: 141–142).

36–38. κα and κα η- : “give” Here we consistently translate κα and κα η- (Sahidic κω and κω η-) as “give” rather than the usual “place” to make the meaning clearer in English.

Write ⟨in⟩ menstrual ⟨blood⟩ on the edge ⟨of⟩ a *pot. ⁶⁰ Turn it on its back?. Place ⟨it⟩ upon three mud bricks. Kindle ⟨fire⟩ under it. Bury it at a crossroads. Offering: olive pit. Consume ⟨it⟩ in the fire. It is finished.

Image: We may note that the central figure is without a face, perhaps symbolising the concept of “hatefulness”, or loss of “face” described in the curse. The figure’s hand is placed at its mouth, perhaps representing the act of silencing the victim (cf. the notes to the image of PCM I 24).

45. ⲃⲁϥⲟⲗ : “hatefulness” For this expression, meaning literally a “burnt/dry face”, see van der Vliet 1991: 217; for other instances see PCM I 27 front l. 2; PCM I 31 back ll. 4, 5–6, 12; P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front l. 65; Cairo JdE 42573 (KYP M44) p. 2 l. 10. This is one of a number of expressions in Coptic which draw upon the idea of the face as the locus of the social self; cf. Nyord 2015: 257–259; Dosoo 2023a: 174–175; Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 2.

49–50. ⲕⲉⲗⲟⲡ = ⲉⲡⲗⲁ : “you will blacken the face” A metaphor drawing on the “blackened” cooking pot as a symbol of an undesirable or socially excluded person; compare Pseudo-Athanasius of Alexandria, On the Mercy of the Father (CC 51): “and as for the impious, they stand on the left of the place of judgement, their faces black like a blackened pot” (ⲡⲁϥⲃⲏⲃⲏⲥ ⲁⲉ ϣⲱⲟⲩ ⲉⲃⲁⲣⲉⲣⲁⲧⲟⲩ ⲡⲥⲁⲣⲃⲟⲩⲣ ⲡⲓⲡⲁ ⲡⲓⲧⲁⲡ ⲉⲣⲉⲛⲉϥⲗⲟ ⲕⲏⲏ ⲡⲟⲉ ⲡⲟⲩⲥⲁⲗⲁⲗⲉⲧⲉⲥⲭⲏⲣ; Bernardin 1937: 126.33); for Jewish parallels, see Weingarten 2014: 345.

50–52. ⲙⲡⲕⲉⲛⲟⲥ ⲧⲏⲣⲟⲩ = ⲛⲁⲗⲁⲙ = ⲙⲏ : ⲛⲉⲟⲩⲏⲣⲉ ⲧⲏⲣⲟⲩ ⲛⲥⲱⲏ : “the entire race of Adam and all the children of Zoe” For this expression, see the notes to PCM I 25 p. 7 ll. 12–14.

59. ⲡⲱⲣⲱ : “menstrual blood” The word ⲱⲣⲱ (“menstrual blood”) is feminine, so the masculine definite article used here must indicate that the masculine word ⲥⲓⲟⲩ “blood” has been omitted. Menstrual blood is often used in curses, in particular separation spells, in the Coptic magical corpus; cf. PCM I 27 front l. 3; PCM I 27 front l. 2; PCM I 31 back l. 15; PCM I 37 back l. 19; P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front ll. 1, 26, 50, 82, back ll. 89, 101. This use seems to draw upon ancient Mediterranean ideas of menstrual blood as a powerful and dangerous substance; see Dosoo 2023a: 173 n. 247, 175–176; Preininger forthcoming a and c: chapter 4. Gardner (2023b: 96–97) prefers to understand an otherwise unattested word with the meaning “curse”.

59. ⲉⲡⲃⲏⲧ : “on the edge” For the word ⲃⲏⲧ see Jernstedt 1959: 161–162, who links it to the word ⲃⲏⲧⲟⲥ, “wheel”, hence “rim”, in turn from Latin uitus (Ivan Miroshnikov is thanked for this reference).

62. ⲕⲁϥ ⲭⲁⲉⲓⲧ : “olive pit” For this interpretation, see Crum CD 120a.

Linguistic description: Sahidic with Middle Egyptian features.

Contents:

Original use:

1. Front ll. 1–5: Witness testimonies (Arabic, unpublished; KYP T265)

Re-use:

2. Back ll. 1–20: Separation spell to undo a couple (KYP T22)
3. Back ll. 21–49: Curse to bind male virility and female virginity (KYP T23)
4. Back ll. 50–52: Colophon (KYP T24)

A completely preserved tall, narrow parchment sheet. Two curses are inscribed on one side (the back), aimed at preventing romantic or sexual relationships between men and women. A dated colophon, one of only two known among surviving Coptic magical manuscripts,¹ identifies the copyist as the Deacon Iōhannēs.² The manuscript was bought by Carl Schmidt in 1930 and is part of the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’, six of whose manuscripts were copied by Iōhannēs (cf. pp. 259–263 for a description of his hand and linguistic features). Two sets of images and multiple instances of simple horizontal dividing lines appear on the manuscript.

The remains of an unpublished Arabic text is written on the front of the sheet

² Front ll. 50–52; cf. the more detailed discussion on pp. 259–260.

at 180° to the Coptic text. This text represents the original use of the sheet, the majority of it having been lost when the parchment was cut down to its current size. Five faded lines are visible, preserving what appear to be the testimonies of witnesses to a legal transaction, one named Sa'īd b. 'Abd Allāh.³

Note that the edition in Bilabel/Grohmann (followed by other editors) numbers our ll. 8–9 as l. 8, and does not count the line of kharaktēres in l. 44, resulting in a divergent line numbering.

Image: We do not propose an interpretation of the image here. Gardner/Johnston (cf. Gardner 2023b) suggest that the image represents an animal effigy standing in for the victim with his mouth and penis bound, and that the kharaktēres to the right represent a magic square used to generate the “names” referred to in ll. 1–2 by overlaying them with the kharaktēres in l. 43, as planetary sigils are generated in the later work of Cornelius Agrippa (1486–1535; cf. Lehrich 2003: 99–110). We rather understand ll. 1–19 and 20–48 to represent two unrelated practices; the kharaktēres in l. 43 are paralleled in another text (see the note to ll. 21–43 below). The use of magic squares (awfāq, sing. waqf) is attested in Arabic magic from the ninth century, but almost exclusively in the form of the 3 × 3 square in which each row, column, and diagonal adds up to 9. Later, more complex, squares are attested from the late eleventh century, but in these the property of equal sums is still respected (Hallum 2020), which would not be the case here. We rather understand the “names” to refer simply to the kharaktēres themselves (cf. Dosoo 2022a: 121 n. 14).

9. ܐܢܝܢ ܐܢܝܢ : “anoint the face” As in PCM I 27 front ll. 15–23, it may be that the “face” here is that of an effigy standing in for the curse’s target; see Dosoo 2022d: 176–177.

20. ܕܗܝܐ : “that” Note the absence of a preceding speech act of request, adjuration, or invocation.

21–43. Binding Curse: This invocation has a near exact parallel in Chicago OIM E13767 (Stefanski 1939; KYP M7), an applied curse against a man named Pharaouō, the son of Kiranpales, to prevent him from having intercourse with Touaein, the daughter of Kamar. Stefanski dates the text to the ninth to eleventh century, although, based on the use of paper, we can assume a tenth-century date at the earliest. As discussed in Gardner/Johnston 2019: 36–37 (cf. Gardner 2023b: 76–78), the two texts are nearly identical, both verbally and in reproducing the same sequence of kharaktēres. Compare P.Stras. K 135 (Crum 1922b; KYP M474) for a less direct parallel with the same goal. Gardner/Johnson identify the “finger ring of the Father” as the ring given by Michael to Solomon allowing him to bind demons (cf. the introduction to PCM I 30), while the reference to Elijah may be to the prayer of Elijah upon mount Carmel to bring down fire from heaven (1 Kings 18.36–38) or else to the revelation to Elijah on mount Horeb in 1 Kings 19.1–18 (cf. Frankfurter 1993: 63–64). They also understand the “binding of Jesus” to represent the binding of the Devil made possible by Jesus’ crucifixion, but this would not seem to be possible grammatically; rather it seems that the binding is mentioned as having been powerful enough to bind Jesus to the cross. For a similar text in Syriac, see Cherkashina/Kuzin 2022.

22. ܕܗܝܐ : “of the mountain” The word could be translated as either “mountain” or “desert”; here we opt for “mountain” since this more clearly evokes a single object which could be bound; cf. l. 30.

^[50] I, the Deacon Iōhannes, servant of Michael of Pcellēt, I wrote on the 11th of Paopi and[?] <in the> 684th year.

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and autopsy; tracings by JS.

32. Bilabel/Grohmann believe something is missing at the beginning of the line, but this is not apparent to us.

35. ⲡⲥⲟⲙⲁ ⲛⲣⲟⲩⲧ : “male body” A euphemism for the penis; see Till 1951: 26–27, and cf. Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) p. 4 l. 19. A similar binding of the penis is found in the Syriac text edited in Cherkashina/Kuzin 2022.

42. ⲛⲉⲩⲛⲉⲩ ⲛ ⲉⲃⲁⲗ : “he will not be able to beget” We might expect ⲛⲉⲩⲛⲉⲩ ⲉⲓ ⲉⲃⲁⲗ “he will not be able to come out”, as translated by Meyer. Bilabel/Grohmann suggest that the verb might be ⲛⲓ (“receive”) or ⲛⲟ (“put forth”). The latter is the word used for “sowing (seed)”, equivalent to Greek σπείρειν, which also has the sense of “beget”; although we have been unable to find a parallel for this in Coptic, this would seem to be the most plausible interpretation.

47. ⲛⲣⲟⲩⲧ : “male” The term “male” here seems to refer to the quality of the ingredient. In Greek and Latin, the highest grade of frankincense is regularly described as “male” (ἄρρην, masculum) in medical, botanical, and magical texts (LiDonnici 2001: 69). Alternatively, we might translate ⲣⲟⲩⲧ as “wild” as Meyer does; Pliny the Elder (Natural History 12.35) notes that some types of myrrh are “wild” (silvestrium) rather than cultivated, but he describes the best kind of wild myrrh as “troglydytic” (troglydytic), that is, from Ethiopia, and it is the Greek form of this adjective (τρογλῦτις) which usually describes high-quality myrrh in the Graeco-Egyptian magical papyri rather than “wild” (e.g., GEMF 31/PGM I (KYP M153) ll. 71–72).

48. ⲡⲕⲉⲙⲉⲛⲧⲓ : “the movement of hearts” We follow Gardner/Johnston 2019: 46 in suggesting a compound of ⲛⲕⲉⲛⲧ ⲣⲉⲧⲉ; compare PCM I 32 p. 1 l. 15: “move her heart” (ⲕⲓⲛ ⲉⲛⲉⲥⲛⲧ), referring to the act of making someone fall in love, although its meaning here would be more obscure, perhaps serving as an end title.

50–52. For discussions of the colophon, see van der Vliet 2005b: 277; Gardner/Johnston 2019: 47–48; Miroshnikov 2022: 407–408; Gardner 2023a: 51–54; Gardner 2023b: 74–75. Bilabel/Grohmann understand Pcellēt to be the name of the father of Iōhannes, van der Vliet and Miroshnikov understand it as his place of origin, while Gardner/Johnston understand “the one assigned to write”. For phraseological parallels, see e.g., Lantschoot 1929: nos. 1d, 11c, 15b. Note that in these cases the placename seems to refer to the location of the topos of the saint rather than the place of origin of the scribe, e.g., no. 11 l. 35: ⲙⲓⲕⲁⲛⲛ ⲉⲡⲉⲁⲛⲧⲁⲩ (“Michael of Phantou”). For the writing ⲁⲉⲥⲁⲓ compare P.Teschlot l. 18 ⲁⲉⲣ ⲛⲉⲧⲣⲉ (for Sahidic ⲁⲓⲣ ⲛⲉⲧⲣⲉ), dated to 1027 CE. On the dating of this colophon, see pp. 259–260, with n. 5.

1. Front ll. 1–18: Silencing curse (KYP T47)
2. Front ll. 19–36: Love spell (KYP T48)

Complete and well-preserved parchment sheet containing a silencing curse and a love spell. The manuscript is part of the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’, acquired in the 1930 purchase, and is written by the Deacon Iōhannēs; a discussion of his hand and linguistic characteristics can be found in the description of the archive (see pp. 259–263).

The text is written on the front only, divided with simple horizontal lines into several registers, and contains two sets of images, one associated with each procedure.

“I entreat and I invoke you today, Baroukh, the great mighty one, that as ^{|5} soon as I bury you at the door of the house <of> NN, child of NN, and I bind you upon the forearm <of> NN, child of NN, you shall give silence ^{|10} to the mouth <of> NN, child of NN, concerning NN, child of NN—and before every person, the small and the great—and  dumbness and a bridle and a closing to the mouth of NN, the child of NN, before NN, child of NN, and a parching and a loss of breath at once, before you have divided⁷ her place, just as you ^{|15} closed the mouths of the lions before Daniel the prophet, you shall shut the mouth of NN, son of NN, concerning NN, child of NN, all the days of his life. Yea, yea! Quickly!”

Sukk with <wine of the> *first fruits. Offering: *frankincense, *agarwood. When the moon is full. Good.

Image: The central feature of the image is a bird-like figure with its hand to its mouth, apparently symbolising silence. Similar figures with hands to their mouths illustrate other silencing curses; see, for example, GEMF 73/PGM IX (KYP M748) back; Louvre E 14251 (unpublished; KYP M3734), and compare the image above PCM I 22 l. 29, although this seems to be primarily a curse of separation rather than silence.

12. ογχαλινος : “a bridle” The concept of placing a bridle on one’s human or demonic enemies in order to control them is recurrent in the Coptic magical corpus, often associated with silencing curses, as is the case here. Compare PCM I 25 p. 9 l. 30; PCM I 34 p. 4 ll. 23–25; P.Würzburg inv. 42 (Brunsch 1978; KYP M494) l. 17.

14–16. ⲡⲉⲉ ⲡⲧⲁⲕ ⲟⲩⲧⲁⲙ ⲉⲣⲟⲩ : ⲡⲉⲛⲙⲟⲩⲓ : ⲉⲓⲛⲛⲛ ⲁⲗⲛⲛⲓⲗ ⲛ ⲡⲉⲣⲱⲩⲧⲏⲥ : “as you closed the <mouths> of the lions before Daniel the prophet” A straightforward reference to Daniel 6, which describes how the prophet Daniel was cast into a den of lions for worshipping the Jewish god and not King Darius the Mede, but survived when an angel of God was sent to shut the mouths of the lions. References to the salvation of Daniel by the closing of the mouths of the lions (assimilated to the curse’s enemies) appear in several Coptic curses; see also BKU III 389 (KYP M338) ll. 6–7; P.HengstenbergCopt. 5 (KYP M532) ll. 13–14; Bodleian MS. Copt. c (P) 4 (Crum 1896; KYP M412) ll. 23–24.

18. ⲁⲥⲟⲩⲭ : “Sukk” As tentatively suggested by Gardner (2023b: 102), this ingredient is certainly sukk (سك), a substance produced through a range of recipes, but often involving cooking fruit or fruit juice (dates, raisins, or grape) with pounded gall nuts and then drying the product. Recipes are preserved by al-Kindi (801–873 CE) and Moses Maimonides (1138–1204 CE) (Lane 1863: 1387b; Gottheil 1935: 137–138; Groom 1997: 228; Amar/Lev 2017: 117–118; King 2017: 152–53; King 2020: 460). It could be ingested for medicinal purposes, worn as a perfume (sometimes mixed with *musk or ambergris), and used to dye fabric or darken facial hair. Here it is probably mixed with wine of the first fruits and used to copy the tableau onto a support which is then to be buried at the door of the curse’s target. The same word likely appears in P.Vindob. K 8303 (Stegemann 1933–1934: no. 51; KYP M279) front l. 10 as [ⲁ]ⲥⲟⲩⲭ. It appears as a loanword (סך or סך) in texts from the Cairo Genizah as the ink to be used to copy text onto applied objects in love spells (Naveh/Shaked 1998: Geniza 5 p. 4 l. 4; Geniza 6 p. 2 l. 8). In the eleventh-century Arabic Gāyat al-ḥakim (known in Latin as the Picatrix) it is used as an ingredient in burnt offerings for Venus and the moon, and as part of a soporific mixture to be ingested by the target (Ritter 1933: 220.1, 4 275.7, 299.7, 306.12; German translation in Ritter/Plessner 1962: 231, 232, 281, 312, 319).

²⁶, below image “I entreat and I invoke you again today, Salathiel, the Ethiopian of the Four *Powers—whose names are these: Arax, Barax, Sax, Thax—the one who went to Eve when she was within the enclosure and deceived her ³⁰ mind so that she ate from the tree, and she stripped naked! Thus again I entreat you today that you go to NN, child of NN, and trouble her mind so that she walks on her feet and goes to <the> door of the house of NN, child of NN, and he puts his male lust ³⁵ into her female lust with a shameless face—request—yea, yea, quickly, quickly!”

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and autopsy; tracings by JS.

Image: This is apparently a depiction of Salathiël and his four powers. The name ‘Salathiël’ seems to be derived from Satanael (via /n/-/t/ metathesis and then a shift of nasal /n/ to liquid /l/), the name of the Devil before his fall (cf. PCM I 26 note to p. 4 l. 3). As the chief demon, he is probably the figure depicted on the upper right with a crown; his face seems to have been deliberately painted slightly darker than the others to indicate that he is an “Ethiopian”, a common description of dark-skinned demonic figures in Egyptian Christian texts; see Dosoo 2022a: 162–164; Love 2022c: 648–649. For Satanael, cf. the note to PCM I 26 p. 4 l. 3. In other cases (e.g., PCM I 25 p. 15 l. 27; PCM I 26 p. 14 ll. 13–14, 21) Salathiël is clearly the name of an unfallen angel.

23. ἀλυγῆ : “salted fish” Here we follow Gardner (2023b: 104 n. 102) in tentatively proposing to read the Greek word ἀλυκή, apparently referring to a type of fish pickled by salting (see Morelli 1996: 82–88). Perhaps compare GEMF 15/PGM XII (KYP M160) 415 (366), a separation spell which makes use of an ostrakon from a pot for salted fish (ταρείχου ὄστρακον) to create an applied text, although the goal—separation rather than attraction—is the opposite of that here. Bilabel/Grohmann understand instead the word λευκή (“white”), modifying “pepper”.

29. ἐπικύχελ : “the enclosure” This refers to “the enclosure” of the Garden of Eden; cf. e.g., Pseudo-Timothy of Alexandria, Institution of Abbaton (CC 405; Budge 1914: 236.25, 485 (trans.)). The reference is to the Devil’s temptation of Eve, which could be understood as a kind of seduction paralleling the love spell described here; compare the notes to PCM I 32 p. 1 ll. 32–34.

34–35. ντερεπεσσηια : νροουτ ρ ερουν : τερεπεσσηια : νσιμε : “his male lust into her female lust” A euphemism for the genitalia; cf. the note to PCM I 20 l. 14 and Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 5.

Complete, single quire parchment codex of 20 pages. The codex is part of the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Library’ (see pp. 259–263) and belongs to the 1930 purchase. The manuscript was written by Deacon Iōhannēs (see pp. 260–263).

Only pages 2–18 are inscribed, while pages 1 and 20 served as blank outer covers. The manuscript is a palimpsest of a lectionary of Pauline epistles in which each of the readings is given its number in the sequence, and the day of the month on which it is read. The names of the months themselves are lost, but comparison with other lectionaries shows that it may have covered the months of Thout, Hathor, and Tobi.¹ Five single sheets from the original lectionary were folded in half and trimmed to create five bifolios.² As a result, the lectionary is written in two columns at right angles to the re-used text. Before the re-used codex was disassembled for conservation in the twentieth century, it was bound in a single quire with three parchment strings which were tied on the outer side.³ These strings of parchment likely came from the same codex.⁴ Other leaves from the same lectionary were used to produce PCM I 26.

Each page of the re-used text contains a maximum of 31 lines, with about 25 letters (roughly 20 to 30) per line. Besides the hand of Iōhannēs, we recognise other characteristics typical for his manuscripts, such as simple horizontal lines used to divide recipes and recipe sections (including one line at the very beginning of the manuscript) and various paratextual markers, including the mid-point, colon, and two oblique strokes. The text contains the same dialectal and grammatical features typical of this scribe (see pp. 261–262). This manuscript is exceptional for having been partially personalised; at two points, a personal name (Iōsēph, son of Paraseu; cf. notes to p. 13) replaces the generic name marker; it is unclear if this is because the manuscript was copied to be used by him, or if this particular text was copied from a personalised exemplar.

The nine texts contained in this manuscript are primarily concerned with healing, exorcism, and good fortune; most of these are discussed in the accompanying notes, but it is worth giving here a fuller introduction to the first text. The so-called Prayer of Mary ‘in Bartos’ is a prayer attributed to the Virgin Mary which calls upon God to protect the patient from disease, sorcery, and demons.⁵ This text may be one of the earliest composed of the surviving Christian magical texts, perhaps dating to shortly after the confirmation of Mary as the Mother of God (theotokos)

³ Meyer 1996: 4. On the same page, Meyer notes, following Quecke 1972: 6, n. 4: “Two perforations (1–1.5 cm. apart) near the top, middle, and bottom of the fold in the parchment accommodated the thongs (themselves 7.2 x 0.6–0.9 cm., 5.5 x 0.4–0.6 cm., and 7.1 x 0.3–0.5 cm.).”

at the Council of Ephesus in 431, which led to the production of dormition narratives describing her powers of healing and exorcism, linked to a prayer given to her by Jesus.⁶ A Greek copy, from the tomb of the Archishop Georgios in Old Dongola (ca. 1113 CE),⁷ probably represents the original language of the text, but there are at least 6 other copies in Coptic,⁸ making it the most common Coptic magical text after the Abgar Correspondence,⁹ although each copy displays significant variation. Close verbal parallels in several otherwise unrelated Coptic magical texts are suggestive of the influence of the Prayer of Mary on the genre as a whole.¹⁰ Early modern (and more standardised) versions of this prayer survive in Arabic and Ge'ez.¹¹ In the modern tradition, the text is known as the Prayer of Mary 'in Bartos'—Bartos probably referring to Parthia (Πάρθος)—and the prayer is said to have been spoken by her to free the Apostle Matthias from imprisonment.¹² An extended literary narrative, The Miracles of the Virgin Mary in Bartos (CC 885), whose Arabic version is attributed to Cyril of Jerusalem, survives fragmentarily in Coptic, and fully in Arabic, and describes Mary's use of the prayer to free prisoners and heal the suffering.¹³ The highly repetitive nature of this narrative may suggest that it is posterior to the Prayer; it seems to focus on the Prayer's capacity to melt iron, which appears in the early part of the text (here p. 2 ll. 24–25). The connection to 'Bartos', however, is absent in any of the Coptic versions of the prayer, and seems to be a later accretion; the version here describes the prayer as that which Mary spoke on her deathbed, creating a connection to the dormition narratives, which link the prayer given to her by Jesus to her “falling asleep” (i.e., death).¹⁴

This is the twenty-first prayer of Mary the Virgin, <that she> spoke on the day of her falling asleep. It works on every power of the Adversary; it heals every sickness ¹⁵ and every disease, in peace, amen.

And Mary lifted her eyes up to heaven, to God Almighty, saying: “I beseech you today, you who have always existed, I praise you, ¹⁰ today, *Iao, who comes upon the clouds of heaven, *Sabaoth, the one who is mightier than them all, you who existed before all of the aeons, before the heavens and the earth had appeared; ¹⁵ heaven became a throne for you and the earth  footstool for your feet! Listen to me today, in your great, blessed name: let every thing bow² down to me, ²⁰ for I am Mary, I am Mariham, I am the mother of the life of the whole world, I myself, NN, child of NN! Stone, let it break before me today! Iron, let ²⁵ it melt before me today!

1–5. ται τε τμεζ:κα : μπροσεγχι : “This is the twenty-first prayer of Mary the Virgin”

For a discussion of the tradition of the Prayer of Mary ‘in Bartos’, see the introduction to this manuscript.

2. ἡπαρενος : “the virgin” The copyist often seems to treat the initial π of certain Greek words as the Coptic definite article (π-), consistently omitting the expected article; this is the case even when the word itself is feminine and we would expect an initial τ-. Compare PCM I 23 l. 28–29, and the similar treatment of παρθενία in PCM I 23 ll. 26, 27, 28, 36, 39, and of other words such as παντοκράτωρ in PCM I 22 ll. 31, 32; PCM I 26 p. 11 l. 4; PCM I 28 p. 9 l. 5, p. 12 ll. 10–11. Compare also the better-known reanalysis of the Greek θάλασσα (“sea”) as τ-θαλασσα (cf. Clackson/Papaconstantinou 2010: 81).

11–12. πετσεμεζαν # ερογο ερωζ # τηρογ : “the one who is mightier than them all” The parallel versions have a phrase here referring to God’s judgement of all mankind, so that we might understand an earlier version of this passage contained something like “to judge them all”; cf. Tomb of Georgios North Wall col. 1, l. 4 (Lajtar/van der Vliet 2017: no. 9; KYP M501): καὶ δικάζων παντὶ γένει; British Library MS Or 6796 (1–3) l. 12 (Kropp 1965: no. c; KYP M118): εἴθε γενος νη [νηρ]ωμε; Collège de France Ms. 2 p. 23 l. 14 (KYP M573): εἴθαπ εγενος · νη νρωμε.

15–17. τπε : αςωωπε # νακ # νερονος # αγω # πκαζ # ηεγπωτφωη # νεκογενητ : “heaven became a throne for you and the earth  footstool for your feet” Cf. Isaiah 66.1: “Thus speaks the Lord, ‘Heaven is my throne and earth the footstool of my feet’” (ται τε θε ετερεπιχωεις χω ννος δε τπε πε παθρονος πκαζ δε ηεγποποδιον νηαογενητε; Kasser 1965: 180).

19–20. ἡαρεζωβ νηη # κεχωουγ ναι # πεσντ : “let every thing bow² down to me” We propose to read here a form of the verb κωλχ (“bend”) with the λ having been dropped, although the subject of this construction is usually knee (πατ). Compare Isaiah 45.23: “every knee shall bow to me” (ερεπατ νηη νακωλχ ναι; Pierpont Morgan M 568 fol. 47r, col. II, ll. 12–13). The parallels in Tomb of Georgios, North wall, col. 1, l. 6 (Lajtar/van der Vliet 2017 no. 9; KYP M501), British Library MS Or 6796 (1–3) ll. 19–20 (Kropp 1965 no. c; KYP M118) and Collège de France Ms. 2 p. 23 l. 19 (KYP M573) use instead the Greek verb ὑποτάσσειν, “be obedient, subservient” here. Meyer translates “submit” but does not discuss his reasoning.

1–2. ⲙⲁⲣⲟϥⲛⲁⲭⲱⲣⲓ ⲉⲓⲛⲁϥ : “let them withdraw themselves” ⲉⲓ at the beginning of l. 2 poses a problem for parsing; it might be understood either as the ending of ⲛⲁⲭⲱⲣⲓ, or else as a short prothetic vowel added before ⲛⲁⲭ. Here we opt for the latter, since Greek verbs ending in -εῖν are usually written with final -ⲓ or -ⲉ by this scribe, while a short prothetic vowel (usually ⲉ-) is often written before ⲛⲁⲭ (see, e.g., p. 5 ll. 3, 9 of this manuscript). The writing ⲉⲓ is a result of the often surprising interchange of (ⲉ)ⲓ/ⲉ found in this variety of Coptic (cf. e.g., p. 2 l. 9 of this manuscript; PCM I 26 p. 15 l. 26; PCM I 27 front l. 19; PCM I 31 back l. 16).

12. ⲟ This letter differs from the normal form of omicron, and seems instead be some kind of punctuation or lectional mark; compare the similar sign at p. 6 l. 11. Since both appear at similar line positions, it is possible that the copyist used it to keep track of the line count, marking the vertical halfway point of certain pages.

3–4. ΜΑΓΙΑ ΜΗ ΦΑΡΜΑΓΙΑ · ΝΗΜ : “magic and every sorcery” We might expect “every magic and sorcery”, but this would normally require the repetition of ΝΗΜ (cf. Layton 2000: 51 §60(e)). Compare a similar phrase found in another copy of the Prayer of Mary: “whether any sorcery or any magic” (εἴτε φάρμαγια ἢ εἴτε μαγία νημ; P.land.inv. 9 p. 1 ll. 6–7 (Kropp 1965; KYP M134)).

12. Εἴτε οὐκνοβ ρ ἀγκοῦ ρα · οὐγᾶ : “blood that was loosened under someone” A reference to a curse to cause bleeding, for which see the notes to PCM I 3 front col. 1.

16. ΠΕΤΕΝ:ΤΑϚ : “whatever he has” For this unusual writing of ^ςπετεύνταϚ, compare PCM I 31 front l. 23, and ετας for ^ςούντας found in the contemporary Teshlot archive (Richter 2000: 120–121).

25. ΟΥΔΕ ΜΕΡΡΑ ρ ΟΥΤΕ ΝΘΗΡ : “neither fates, neither deities” The word “fate” (μοῖρα) referred originally to the personified Greek goddesses of fate—Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos—who were believed to decree the fate of mortals, thus coming to be understood also as goddesses of death. A singular Moira appears in a list of Greek deities in the adjuration P.Carlsberg 52 (Lange 1932; KYP M125) p. 3 l. 18, likely inspired by mentions in Greek literature (cf. Blumell/Dosoo 2018: 249–250 n. 132). In this text, as well as a roughly contemporary amulet to protect a pregnant woman (P.Lond. Copt. 524 (KYP M359) front l. 21) the “fates” seem to represent a specific type of malevolent spirit. Likewise, “deities” translates the Coptic εντηρ, the largely obsolete plural of νογτε “god”, treated as an independent singular noun in standard Coptic (Crum CD 725b; Vycichl DELC 145–146). Like “fates”, the word seems to have come to refer to a type of demonic being in the context of Christian Egypt; cf. Krueger 2021: 130–132. We find “deities” listed among harmful demons in the Coptic magical corpus in PCM I p. 41 ll. 8–9; P.Lond.Copt. 524 (KYP M359) front l. 22 (alongside “fates”); Columbia inv. 554 ll. 18–19 (Schiller 1928; KYP M2); P.Berol. 11347 (Beltz 1985: no. II 42) back ll. 8–9. The word also appears in PCM I 4 ll. 4, 10 and Mich.Ms. 136 (Zellmann-Rohrer/Love 2022; KYP M128) p. 5 l. 3, albeit referring in these cases to Pharaonic deities (Amun, *Osiris, *Isis, *Apis) rather than harmful demonic beings.

and soul and his spirit, let him know that there is for him the help of the Father in heaven, amen! Jesus[?], amen! Jesus Christ, amen! Jesus, amen! |⁵ Jesus Christ, amen! Come to me today, O great God, who is in heaven! I adjure you today, <by> the *wellbeing <of> your seven *archangels—these who were with you since before you |²⁵ created Adam, the first man—so that they come to me today, and they protect and shelter the body of NN, child of NN, 11. q See note to p. 3 l. 12.

20. πενταφωστ = θαλασσα = εν τεφσαμ : “the one who struck the sea with his holy power” Compare Job 26.12: “He fixed the sea with his power and he spread the sea monster with his wisdom” (αφηνι θαλασσα εν τεφσον αφπερω πκγτος δε εν τεφσβω; Amélineau 1893: 450). The Greek rather has “he struck down” (ἐτρωσε) rather than “spread”, corresponding to “struck” (πωστ) in the text here, and suggesting that this text is independent of the surviving Sahidic translation of Job, as we would expect if it were translated directly from Greek.

I adjure you today, *Michael and *Gabriel, *Raphael, *Suriel, Salaphuēl, Azouēl, and the name of the powers that I named! ⁵ Michael, let him be on his right so that I may heal NN, child of NN, yea, yea, quickly! Gabriel, be on my left, so that I take away from him pain and every fear! Raphael, let him put a crown upon his ¹⁰ head! Suriel, let him trumpet before him! Raguel, let him give glory and favour to him in the presence of all the generation of Adam <and> all the children of Zoe, in the name of *Iao *Sabaoth! ¹⁵ Let him be sound in the name of *Adonai *Eloei! Let him be sound in the name of Iao Sabaoth! Uriel, the great god in heaven, I adjure you today by he of these great holy powers, Mēs Bētha ²⁰ Phraggis! I adjure you today by the twenty-four *veils which you created in your wisdom, yea, yea! I adjure you today by the *cup of blood, that which the *angels drank from so that they received the Holy Spirit, ²⁵ that <you> send to me your holy hand upon the water and this oil that are placed before me, I, NN, child of NN, and let <it> come down upon them,

5–7. “Michael, let him be on his right... Gabriel, be on my left” Invocations to angels to surround an individual for protection are extensively attested in Jewish and Christian contexts. The motif likely originated in Mesopotamia, where similar invocations to deities are found by the early second millennium BCE. By the ninth century CE, it is found in Jewish liturgical texts—notably the “Bedtime Shema”, a prayer read before sleep—but its presence in Jewish Aramaic incantation bowls from the sixth to eighth centuries CE demonstrates that its use is older. For discussions, see Levene/Marx/Bhayro 2014; Lajtar/van der Vliet 2017: 162–165. Similar calls for protection may be found in a few pre-Coptic Egyptian-language texts: “Isis before me, Nephthys behind me” (3s.t tp ʿwy=i Nb.t-Hw.t imy h.t=i; BM EA 10761 (Meyrat 2019: no. VIII col. 9 l. 9; XVIII–XVII BCE); “Horus is before me; Isis is behind me; Nephthys is as my diadem” (Hr h.t.f 3s.t m-s3zy Nb.t-H.t n t3y(ey) gr[p3(t)]; GEMF 16/(PDM xiv) l. 257; II CE).

12–14. “all the generation of Adam <and> all the children of Zoe” Humankind is commonly referred to collectively as the “children of Adam and Eve (ζωή Zōē), especially in favour spells and curses to remove favour from their targets. For other examples, see p. 17 ll. 39–41 of this manuscript, as well as PCM I 22 ll. 37–39; BKU 1 10 (KYP M112) l. 6; P.Bad. V 123 (KYP M315) front ll. 72–74; P.Lond.Copt. 369 (KYP M123) ll. 10–11; BL Ms. Or. 6796 (2), (3) verso ll. 51–52 (Kropp 1931: I no. For examples from Jewish magical texts from the Cairo Genizah; see Schiffmann/Schwartz 1992: T-S K1.6 l. 18, T-S K1.24 ll. 16–17, T-S K1.152 l. 22 (discussion on pp. 41–42); Naveh/Shaked 1993: Geniza 12 ll. 16–17; Geniza 15 p. 2 ll. 9–10; Geniza 18 p. 3 ll. 7–8; Geniza 28 p. 4 ll. 9, 11; MTKG I Or. 1080.15.81 l. 94; MTKG II 42 ll. 12, 18, 22, 32, 39; MTKG III 56 p. 1a l. 10; MTKG III 71 p. 1a l. 5; MTKG III 73 p. 1b ll. 11–12. Cf. Bélanger Sarrazin fc. a: ch. 4.

23–24. ἡπαπατ νεσνον : “by the cup of blood” Kropp translates “cup of blessing” (“Becher des Segens”), likely the original text of the Prayer; cf. Tomb of Georgios, North wall, col. 1, l. 33 (Lajtar/van der Vliet 2017 no. 9; KYP M501): τοῦ ποτηρίου τῆς εὐλογίας; British Library MS Or 6796 (1-3) l. 105 ((Kropp 1965 no. c; KYP M118): [ἡ]παπατ ἡπεςνογ; likewise in P.land.inv. 9 p. 8 l. 11 (Kropp 1965; KYP M134). These other versions also describe the apostles drinking from the cup, rather than the angels as is the case here. Reference to angels drinking a cup in order to receive the Holy Spirit is also found in PCM I 12 p. 35 ll. 14–16; PCM I 26 p. 4 ll. 17–20, implying a heavenly eucharistic ritual which predated its earthly form (cf. Dosoo 2021d: 419).

namely, Saint Mary the holy virgin, that she might bless the water so that it becomes a healing and a purification, so that in the moment that I will wash NN, child of NN, with it ^{|5} let him heal, yea, yea, quickly quickly!

I adjure you today by the four imperishable mysteries, which are Daueithea, Eleleth, Ōrem, Mōsiēl, who are the ones spread out ^{|10} upon the four sides of heaven! I adjure you today by the Father Almighty, by the holy sounds whose names are Akhi, Akha, Akhamra! I adjure you today by the first word that came out from your heart ^{|15} and became for you an only son, that is Jesus Christ, and his holy powers that I have named, that you will send to me the holy mother of God, ^{|20} Saint Mary the holy virgin, so that she blesses them, and the water, and she sanctifies them, and she seals them, this oil, so that in the moment that I will pour the water upon NN, child of NN, (NN, child of NN,) will become strong ^{|25} and healed and at total peace ... through the power of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, forever and ever and ever, amen, amen, amen, yea, yea, quickly, quickly, Jesus Christ!

8–9. ΔΑΥΕΙΘΕΑ ≡ ΕΛΕΛΕΘ ≡ ΩΡΕΜ ≠ ΜΩΣΙΗΛ : “Daueithea, Eleleth, Ōrem, Mōsiēl” As noted by Meyer (1996: 79) these are the Four Luminaries (φωστήρες), divine beings known from Sethian Gnostic cosmologies who rule over divisions of the divine realm. In the Berlin version of the Apocryphon of John their names are Harmozēl, Ōrōiēl, Daueithe and Ēlēlēth (ἡρμωζηλ ωρωιαηλ δαυειθε εληληθ; CC 0648; ed. Robinson 2000: II 54–57), but we find slight variation in each text mentioning them. The parallel versions of the prayer use the word φωστήρ (“luminary”) where this text has μυστήριον (“mystery”, ll. 6–7), suggesting that this version is corrupt (cf. Łajtar/van der Vliet 2017: 170–171). On the Luminaries in Coptic magical texts more generally, see Burns 2018; Piwowarczyk 2021: 56–59, 105–109, 134–137, 230–232.

21–22. Probably understand “so that she blesses it, this water... and she seals it, this oil”.

25–26. ΟΥΕΜΤΑ ≠ ΝΗΜ ≠ ΝΤΕΝ : “total peace ...” This passage seems to be ungrammatical; ΕΜΤΑ is doubly determined by ογ- and ΝΗΜ, and ΝΤΕΝ would seem to be either a conjugation base or genitive marker missing a following noun. It seems likely that this is the result of miscopying or textual corruption; Meyer does not comment but simply translates “completely well”.

2, 4. "grass <of> Mary", "wood <of> Abraham" Cf. the "Tree of Mary" (شجرة مريم sağara Maryam, cyclamen) found in an eleventh-century Judaeo-Arabic recipe from the Cairo Genizah (Bohak 2022: 49) as well as the Guide to the Psalms (Psalms 19, 20, 70; Henein/Bianquis 1975). "Wood of Abraham" appears in similar lists of ingredients for preparing the water in a pot in British Library MS Or 6796 (2, 3) (Kropp 1931: I no. H; KYP M118) back l. 107; BL Ms. Or. 6796 (Kropp 1931: I no. J; KYP M363) front l. 51; based on parallel names in Arabic and Aramaic, Crum (CD 546a; cf. Kropp 1930: III 108) suggests it to be the simpleleaf chastetree (Agnus castus (= Vitex trifolia L.)).

6. ⲛⲁⲗⲏⲭⲧⲁⲙ : "alēkhtam" Perhaps ⲁⲗⲧⲁⲙ (al-katam), African boxwood (Myrsine africana, L.), from which a dark dyeing agent is extracted (El Shamsy 2020: 191). Gardner proposes to parse ⲛⲁⲗⲏⲭ ⲧⲁⲙⲃⲣⲓ "on paper (ورق), prepare..." (دبر); cf. Richter 2015b: 228), although the preposition ⲉ- usually precedes the writing material. Meyer suggests several unconvincing possibilities.

8–18. The names of Mary: Meyer (1996: 80) suggests that we see here a coalescence of different Marys from the Gospels—the mother of Jesus; Mary Magdalene (John 20.1 etc.); Mary, daughter of Clopas (John 19.25); Mary (mother) of James (Mark 16.1 etc.)—into a "composite universal Mary". But the identification of the mother of Jesus with the mother of James is known from Greek patristic sources (e.g. John Chrysostom, Homily 88 on the Gospel of Matthew (PG 58: 777)). The appropriation of all of these names by the mother of Jesus is attested in Coptic pseudepigrapha more broadly. In Pseudo-Cyril of Jerusalem's On the Passion (a) (CC 116; Campagnano 1980: 26.26–29.5) and On Mary (CC 119; Campagnano 1980: 158.26–161.1), the Virgin Mary is born in Magdala (hence, 'Magdalene'), while her father Joachim is also known as Clopas, and James is one of the children of Joseph the carpenter whom she adopted (see Suciu fc.).

24–26. "Iamlikhos, Martianos, Marximos, Antinias, Ebsaimēs, Ouasik, Marouer" Graham (2022) points out that these are the names of the Seven Sleepers of Ephesus (cf. p. 167). The initial four names correspond to Iamblichos, Martinos, Maximilios, and Antoninos in the Byzantine Synaxarium, while Ebsaimēs and Ouasik might be versions of Stephanos and Kyriakos known from other lists; Marouer may begin with Syriac mār ("Lord"); cf. Tondello 2019: 72 n. 1; Grysa 2010: 49 n. 3). Meyer (1996: p. 81) instead understands Iamblichus and Antinous as two famous "pagan" figures here turned into demonic names, and Ouasik as Coptic "a fever", used as a demonic name.

25–26. "Tapkeh... Thapas... Thapaoh" As Meyer (1996: 81–82) notes these might be understood as names for the addressed being, "she of the earth... she of old age... she of the moon".

Image: Gardner (2023b: 114) and Love (2022c: 637) read the label as μαρ βηνη, “swallow chick”; Gardner suggests that it is a representation of the manipulation of a bird to be carried out in the course of the ritual. The manipulation of animal effigies in the context of the creation of an amulet would be otherwise unattested in the corpus, however; we instead understand the tableau as that as intended to be copied onto the amulet, with Masbēn representing a variant of the name Nassklnē (note the relatively frequent confusion of η, η, η demonstrated by this scribe). The depiction of the figure is comparable to that on PCM I 30, front, another bird-like Solomonic demon with a cross on its head.

2. ΝΑΣΚΛΗΝΗ : “Nassklnē” Meyer (1996: 82) suggests that this may name may be derived from Onoskelis (Ὀνοσκελίσ), a female demon with the legs of a donkey who appears in the Testament of Solomon 4.2 (McCown 1922).

14–15. ἄλογασιόγας : “whisperers” As recognised by Helmut Satzinger (Meyer 1996: 49), this is the Arabic الوسواس al-waswās, “the whisperer”, found in the Qur’an 114.4 as one of a number of beings from which the speaker asks protection from God. The Whisperer is generally understood to be another name for Satan, who tempts humankind by whispering “what is vain, or unprofitable, and destitute of good” (Lane 1863: 2939–2940 s.v. وس; cf. Amir-Moezzi/Dye 2019: 2346–2347). Here the originally singular Whisperer seems to be understood as a category of demonic being.

16–18. ἡν ἡγ φαρμαγία νημ ἡν ντεπδιαβολος πωτ νεγ σαβολ : “<and>? all sorcery, so that the Devil flees? from” This part of the recipe seems to be corrupt. Meyer translates “and all sorcery {and} of the devil. Drive them from NN”. Here we propose that another noun, perhaps πληγη (“wound”) stood before φαρμαγία, paralleling νερωγτ ἡν ρικ in the preceding line; a definite article (ἡ-) would be unexpected preceding a noun defined by νημ, as would its writing as ηγ. The form we would expect for Meyer’s translation would be πωτ νεωωγ εβολ, quite unlike the form we find in the text. Rather we understand the ντε- preceding πδιαβολος to be a conjunctive prefix, but this does lead to the problem of the plural indirect object (expressing the reflexive “he flees (himself)”) in νεγ (i.e. ⁵ηα=γ), where we would expect the third-person singular, ηαγ, although compare the use of the third-person plural for the singular on p. 8 ll. 21–22. For the use of ἡν + conjunctive, cf. the note to PCM I 26 p. 5 l. 6

It is finished.

1–11. This text is quite similar in content to the previous one (p. 10, ll. 19–27; KYP T241), and may constitute with it a single recipe.

7. μεθεμον : “Methemōn” For this name, cf. Matthew 1.23 “and they will call his name ‘Emmanuel’, which interpreted means ‘God is with us’ (meth’ēmōn)” (καὶ καλέσουσιν τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ Ἐμμανουήλ, ὃ ἐστὶν μεθερμηνεύμενον Μεθ’ ἡμῶν ὁ θεός; Horner 1911: I 6,8).

7, 10. κενωλ, τεγωλ : “may you contain?”, “and contain?” The word νωλ means “undo”, but it is likely, given the context, that ωλ “gather, contain” is intended, since this is the verb usually used in reference to stopping the flow of blood; cf. PCM I 3 ll. 33–34; P.Macq. I 1 (KYP M167) p. 16 ll. 1–4; P.Méd.Copt.IFAO (Chassinat 1921; KYP M941) l. 334; P. Vindob. K 11088 (Hevesi 2015; KYP M374) ll. B 4–7.

10. βοιωι = εγραιοις · τεγωλ : “help! May they protect and contain?” Here we translate an imperative followed by a third future with a third person plural subject, then a conjunctive with a third person plural subject. Meyer (1996: 49) suggests as possibilities three imperatives (βοιωι ραεις νωλ), an imperative followed by two circumstantials (?) (βοιωι εκραις (τ)εκνωλ), or else a “word of power” followed by the third person plural forms of circumstantial or conjunctive verb forms.

p. 13 l. 1–p. 16 l. 15: The adjuration contained in these pages addresses the “Nine Guardians” who protect the body of the Trinity, with three each attached to each person, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. As recognised by Mößner/Nauerth (2015: 344) their forms depicted on p. 12 likely imitate the person they guard, with those who protect the Father and Son being anthropomorphic, and those who protect the Holy Spirit being avian in reference to the Holy Spirit’s appearance as a dove. The Nine Guardians appear in several other texts, including BKU I 24 (KYP M206); BKU III 387 (KYP M 336); BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1 front ll. 1–12; KYP M302; BM EA 10122 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 4; KYP M289). There is a similar depiction in the last of these, but with iconography combining the human and birdlike imagery. The figures here are depicted with crosses upon their heads, suggesting their divine nature, and carrying staffs topped with crosses. They are surrounded by kharaktēres derived primarily from the Greek vowels (α, ε, ι, η, ω), in particular Alpha and Omega in reference to Revelation 22.13. Sequences of names beginning beth- are common in Coptic magical texts, and are associated both with the Nine Guardians and the *Twenty-Four Presbyters; for discussions, see Łajtar/van der Vliet 2017: 181–85; Dosoo 2022a: 157–159; Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: 94–95.

I adjure you, O Nine Guardians, by the wound <from> the spear which was thrust in the right side of Jesus, the Son of God, when he ³⁰ he was upon the cross—water and blood poured out—that you (s.) protect NN, child of NN, yea!

3, 9. ἀνακ ιωσηφ υἱ παρασευ : “Iōsēph, son <of> Paraseu” The mention of a particular individual here offers a striking exception to the usual presence of the generic name marker NN elsewhere. There are a two obvious possibilities that might explain this; the first is that this text was copied from an applied amulet or personalised formulary (cf. Saar 2007), and the second is that this manuscript is itself a (partially) personalised copy—if this is the case, Iōsēph would be the individual for whom this manuscript, and perhaps the other manuscripts of the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library produced by Deacon Iōhannēs, was copied.

11. νακι : “labour pang” The labour pangs of Mary are also evoked in the Endoxon of Michael, PCM I 26 p. 12 ll. 19–24.

19–20. σωτωρ : αρετω = τενητ = οτερα = ρωτας : “Sōtōr, Aretō, Tenēt, Ōtera, Rōtas” This is a writing of the *Sator names, whose canonical Latin form is Sator Arepo Tenet Opera Rotas.

6–7. ΜΗΘΗΜΩΝ, ΣΟΥΜΙΘΙΟΝ, ΠΕΡΙΧΗ, ΑΚΡΑΜΑΤΑ : “Mēthēmōn, Soumithion, Perikhē, Akramata” Apparently variants of the names of the *Four Living Creatures of Revelation 4.6–8, often given in the Coptic and Nubian tradition as variants of μελιτων, σουρογοιον, αγραμματαπ, and παραμυρα; cf. Tsakos 2014. For the specific form of the first name, cf. the notes to p. 11 l. 7.

13–14. ΑΡΘΑΣΑ ≠ ΑΒΑΚΤΑΝΙ : “Arthasa, Abaktani” Cf. σαβαχθανί (sabakhthani), one of the last words of Jesus on the cross in Mark 15.34, Matthew 27.46.

17–18. ΩΜΑΡ ≠ ΑΔΩΝΑΙ, ΠΑΩΡΑΤΟΣ, ΠΑΜΙΑΝΤΟΣ, ΠΑΜΗΤΡΑΤΟΣ : “Ōmar, Adonai, Paōratos, Pamiantōs, Pamētratōs” Perhaps understand the Greek words ἀόρατος (“unseen”), ἀμίαντος (“undefiled”), ἄμετρος or ἀμέτρητος (both “immeasurable”; or less likely, ἄμητρος, “without mother”), prefixed by the definite article π-. The initial word may be “mār” (Aramaic for “Lord”), preceded by the Greek or Aramaic vocative particle ὦ (ὦ, ω), i.e., “O Lord Adonai” (see Meyer 1996: 94–95; Gardner 2023b: 118).

18–19. ΟΥΦΑΜΙΗΛ, ΟΡΦΑΝΙΛ : “Ouphamiēl, Ōrphanil” Cf. ὠρφαμιηλ (Ōrphamiēl), described as the “great finger on the right hand of the Father” on p. 14 l. 13 of this text.

Anael! Jesus Christ, help NN, child of NN, by the power of these names, Taramiēl, Eskehōēl, Mesōb, Memoi! Jesus Christ, may you protect NN, child of NN, yea, yea, ¹⁵ and all who will carry this image! May he be like the Tree of Life in <the> middle <of> Paradise, yea!”

The procedure: draw with saffron and wine of the *first fruits and rose water on paper. Bind them upon them. ¹⁰ Draw again upon a platter, wash them off, pour it on the head²; sun-facing² water. Draw² again <with wine of the> first fruits upon a sheet, upon the shoulder of <the> *pot. <Wear> a scarlet cloak². <A> virgin palm branch on the shoulder of <the> pot. Offering: *mastic, *agarwood, *styrax, *musk incense, water, ¹⁵ rose water. It is completely finished. Amen.

My heart has uttered a good word. I, myself, will speak of my works to the king, my tongue <like> a scribe’s pen writing quickly: he is more beautiful than all the children of men! May you contain ²⁰ the blood <of> NN, child of NN! *Michael, *Gabriel, *Raphael, *Suriel, Sarathiēl, Zetekiēl, Anaēl, Sōtōr, *Sabaoth, Almighty, Jesus, Jesus, Jesus Christ the saviour, Emmanuel, Aretō, *Adonai, Methemōn, may you contain the blood <of> NN, child of NN, yea, yea! ²⁵ Tenēt, *Eloei, Ōtera, *Elēmas, Tōras, Sabaoth, help with protection, and give healing to NN, child of NN, yea, yea, quickly, quickly!

8. ⲛⲁⲥⲁⲃⲣⲁⲛ : “with saffron” For the use of ink made from saffron in Coptic magic, see Richter 2023: 166–68.

10. ⲁⲗⲉⲉⲙ : “platter” We understand this to be a writing of Arabic الجām al-ġām, cf. *platter in the glossary, and Richter 2016a: 155. Meyer suggests that the word is perhaps related to the word “alchemy”. Meyer also notes a suggestion by Beltz that it comes from ⲕⲁⲛ/ⲉⲙ (“reed, rush”) and to a suggestion by Emmel of ⲥ(ⲉ)ⲗⲙⲁⲓ (“jar, vase”; Meyer 1996: 50, n. 16, 10).

10. ⲕⲁⲛⲉ (ⲁⲛⲉ) : “head” We follow Gardner 2023b: 119 in understanding this as a drawing of a round face with two triangular ears on top, to represent the word ⲁⲛⲉ (“head”). Such an ideographic writing would seem to be unparalleled in the Coptic magical corpus, but would fit the context well. Meyer suggests that the drawing is rather “a pot or other vessel with two handles”. Perhaps compare GEMF 34/PGM LXII col. 1 l. 1, in which a drawing of a lamp stands in for the Greek λύχνος (“lamp”).

11. ⲛⲁⲧⲉⲃⲗⲓⲕⲟⲛ : “sun-facing” Cf. the note to p. 17 ll. 25–27.

12. ⲉⲡⲛⲁⲧ ⲉⲛⲥⲁⲗⲉⲗ : “on the shoulder of the pot” Alternatively understand an unexpected writing of ⲛⲁⲗⲁⲗⲉ, “ear”, but with the specific sense of “handle (of the pot)” (Crum CD 212b–213a).

12. ⲟⲩⲗⲁⲛⲉ ⲕⲱⲭⲱⲥ : “scarlet cloak” Cf. Matthew 27.28 in which Jesus is dressed in a scarlet cloak (ⲛⲟⲩⲭⲗⲁⲛⲉⲥ ⲛⲕⲟⲕⲕⲟⲥ; Horner 1911a: 330), a symbol of royal status, by the Roman soldiers mocking him.

16–19. “My heart has uttered a good word. I, myself, will speak of my works to the king, my tongue <like> a scribe’s pen writing quickly: he is more beautiful than all the children of men!” A direct citation of Psalm 44 (45) 2–3: ⲁⲡⲁⲣⲏⲧ ⲧⲁⲭⲟ ⲉⲃⲟⲗ ⲛⲟⲩⲱⲗⲁⲭⲉ ⲉⲛⲁⲛⲟⲩⲥ ⲧⲛⲁⲗⲱ ⲁⲛⲟⲕ ⲛⲛⲁⲣⲃⲛⲏⲥ ⲛⲡⲣⲟ ⲡⲁⲗⲁⲥ ⲟⲩⲕⲁⲱ ⲛⲓⲣⲁⲛⲛⲁⲧⲉⲩⲥ ⲡⲉ ⲛⲣⲉⲓⲃⲉⲡⲛ ⲉⲩⲥⲣⲁ ⲉⲛⲉⲥⲱⲥ ⲉⲛ ⲡⲉⲩⲥⲁ ⲡⲁⲣⲁ ⲛⲱⲛⲣⲉ ⲛⲡⲣⲱⲛⲉ (Budge 1898: 49 as verses 1–2).

22–26. ⲥⲱⲧⲱⲣ, ⲁⲣⲉⲧⲱ, ⲧⲉⲛⲉⲧ, ⲱⲧⲉⲣⲁ, ⲧⲱⲣⲁⲥ : “Sōtōr, Aretō, Tenēt, Tōras” Variants of the *Sator names, whose canonical Latin forms are Sator Arepo Tenet Opera Rotas.

24. ⲛⲉⲙⲉⲙⲱⲛ : “Methemōn” Cf. the note to p. 11 l. 7.

41–43. ΓΕΝΟΣ ΤΗΡΩ = ΝΑΔΑΜ = ΝΕΩΤΗΡ ΤΗΡΩΥ ΝΖΩΗ = ΎΝ ΠΑΠΟ ΤΗΡΩ ΝΙΣΜΑΗΛ: “all the race of Adam (and) all the children of Zoe and all the offspring of Ishmael” For this phrase, see the notes to p. 7 ll. 12–14. Note that here Adam and Zoe are joined by Ishmael, the son of Abraham and Hagar and ancestor of the Arabs, making it clear that the composer wanted to explicitly include Arabs among the people targeted by the ritual, and perhaps suggesting that he or she was uncertain if they belonged to the category of the “children of Adam and Zoe”.

page 18 ll. 1–17: This page contains a ritual for healing fever which probably consisted of speaking the formula and copying the tableau in order to create an amulet. Both elements draw upon the story of the Three Youths in the Fiery Furnace in Daniel 3, in which the three companions of Daniel were thrown into a burning furnace by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, for refusing to worship a golden statue he had made, only to be saved by the intervention of an angel who prevented the fire from burning them. The common conception of fever as fire led to the story becoming a popular reference in Christian fever amulets, which often repeat the story or include the names of the Three Youths (Mihálykó 2018a: 53–55; Bélanger Sarrazin forthcoming b); this text finds a particularly close parallel in the applied amulet P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 564a (Quecke 1963b; KYP M513). Usually we find their original Hebrew names—Hananiah, Azariah, and Mishael—followed by their Chaldaean names—Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego—and finally a series of names known only from magical texts, here Lal, Boulal, and Moulal (van der Vliet 1991: 236–239). This last series is also found in the Testament of Solomon 7.6 (for which see the introduction to PCM I 30) as βουλταλά θαλλάλ μελχάλ (Boultala Thallal Melkhal), where they are associated with healing fever, but not explicitly with the Three Youths (McCown 1922: 30* ll. 5–6; van der Vliet 1991: 237–239). The image below likewise draws upon the iconography of the Three Youths, depicting them as three figures praying in the orant position with their arms extended to their sides, and three kharaktēres (+, Δ, Θ) on their heads where their hats would be in more canonical depictions (cf. Dosoo 2022a: 154–156). The repeated names of the form ‘Bōithi’ are probably derived from the Greek βοήθει “help”.

Complete and undamaged single-quire parchment codex of 20 pages, containing the Endoxon of the Archangel Michael, an invocation for protection from sickness and evil influences, followed by a series of ritual prescriptions. The codex is part of the archive known as the 'Heidelberg Library', written in the hand of Deacon Iōhannēs, allowing it to be dated to the late tenth century (see pp. 259–263).

The manuscript was acquired as part of the lot purchased for the University of Heidelberg by Carl Schmidt from the Cairo antiquities dealer Maurice Nahman in October 1933.¹ An edition was initially planned by Friedrich Bilabel,² who apparently kept the manuscript (along with many others) in his home. This edition was never completed; Bilabel, an active member of the Nazi Party from 1935, was involved in military service from 1939 to 1942, having volunteered in 1937. He was killed in 1945 during the American advance after retirement to the town of Wallerstein.³ The manuscript subsequently passed into the hands of his family. Karl Preisendanz, head of the Heidelberg papyrus collection, contacted Bilabel's son-in-law in 1950 to enquire about its whereabouts, but without success.⁴ Fortunately, Schmidt had initially offered the manuscript to his student Kropp (together with PCM I 25), who had made a transcription of it; this transcription was published in 1966 as Der Lobpreis des Erzengels Michael.⁵ From the 1980s, Bilabel's estate began to sell some of the manuscripts which he had taken, and in 1998, his grandson offered the Endoxon to the University of Heidelberg for 100,000 Deutsche Marks. A second offer of 80–100,000 (apparently euros) was made in 2008. The legal claims of the University of Heidelberg were judged to be too difficult to enforce, and in 2010 the manuscript was bought back by the University for €12,000.⁶ It is now, once again, in the University's papyrus collection.⁷

The manuscript is a palimpsest written over a lectionary of Pauline epistles written in two columns—still clearly visible on pages 1, 18, 19, and 20, the blank

pages of the re-used text. As recognised by Gardner, this older lectionary is the same as that used to create PCM I 25, written the same formal bimodular and bilinear literary hand, perhaps datable to the ninth century.⁸ Each section of the lectionary is marked off by ekthesis of the first letter. The dates on which the passages are to be read are decorated with horizontal lines, although these are identified only by the ordinal number of the day of the month, and the month is not named. The identification of all passages of the lectionary is necessary before a full reconstruction can be attempted, but bifolio 1 flesh of PCM I 26 seems to continue bifolio 1 flesh of PCM I 25, since it concludes the passage from Philippians. This is then followed by the hair side of bifolio 1, then by page 9 (the lower half of an original folio), directly followed by bifolio 2 flesh and then hair. The reading of 1 Corinthians 1.18–24 on the seventeenth day of the month corresponds to the reading on the 17th Thout in the lectionary Pierpont Morgan M573 from Hamouli, dating to the ninth or early tenth century, both geographically and temporally close to this lectionary.⁹ Certain other readings identifiable in PCM I 25 also seem to correspond to those in M573,¹⁰ even though this latter manuscript contains only the readings for the major feasts, while that of PCM I 25 & 26 contains the readings from the Pauline epistles for nearly every day. The reading of Hebrews 9.2–7, although the date is lost, might correspond to the reading of verses 2–8 on the 21st Tobi in M573.¹¹ However, 2 Corinthians 10.4–8 is associated in M573 with the 15th Hathor, while verses 4–9 (and perhaps more of the chapter) in this manuscript are listed for the 25th day of a month.¹² There are further problems—as noted by Quecke, the reading of 2 Timothy 2.3–13 on the 15th day of a month on PCM I 25 bifolio 1 hair would correspond well with the reading of the same passage (to verse 14a) on the 15th Hathor in M573.¹³ This reading must shortly precede in the cycle that of 1 Corinthians 1.18–24 on PCM I 26 bifolio 1 flesh col. 1 ll. 8–36, associated with 17th Thout. Yet Thout is the first month, and Hathor the third, so that the sequence is impossible. It may be safer to assume that all of the surviving passages were for the month of Thout, although more work on this question is required.

The present codex is made of 3 bifolios and 4 sheets, formed from either folding the original codex sheets in two, or cutting them in half.¹⁴ Only pages 2–17 are written, in brown ink of plant origin.¹⁵ Each page has between 25 and 36 lines and there are roughly 25–30 characters per line. The script, dialectal features, and ink are all those typical of Iōhannēs (see pp. 260–262). The writing is very dense, and the margins extremely narrow.

The Endoxon itself is a prayer attributed to the archangel Michael, written on the first 14 pages of the codex (pp. 2–15).¹⁶ It begins with a brief narrative in which Michael greets and praises God, before calling upon the angelic powers to help him sing his praises. This is followed by recurrent sequences of adjurations of and calls to God to come and send his power over water and oil to be used in the following procedure, interspersed with the invocation of various authorities— heavenly beings and the body parts and attributes of God—and a recounting of salvation history, from the creation of Adam to the resurrection of Jesus. It ends with a blessing formula, followed by 22 ritual prescriptions (pp. 15–17). These generally involve the speaking of the Endoxon over water, oil, or the image of Michael and his powers which appears at the end of the manuscript, which then become the “applied objects” used to transfer the power of the ritual. An unpublished copy of the Endoxon belongs to the Collège de France (KYP M573),¹⁷ containing only a single procedure, directly related to the healing/exorcistic goals explicit in the text of the prayer, making it clear that the multiple prescriptions in the Heidelberg copy are a later accretion. This ‘polypractical’ format—a single long prayer with multiple recipes which make use of the same prayer—is quite common in the Coptic magical corpus (cf. p. 22). In terms of its content, the Endoxon recalls the account of salvation history which appears following the *Sanctus in liturgical anaphoras of the ‘West Syrian’ or ‘Antiochene’ type, which likewise recounts salvation history from fall of Adam and Eve. Particularly close is an anonymous anaphora contained in the Euchologium of the White Monastery.¹⁸ The presence of this type in Egypt is likely a result of the influence of the Syrian Church, particularly under the patriarchate of Severos of Antioch (r. 512–538),¹⁹ suggesting a date of composition for the Endoxon not earlier than the sixth century.

Kropp’s original edition is numbered by sentence rather than page or line number; we indicate the equivalent sentence number in Kropp’s edition at the beginning of each page. In their editions, Kropp and Meyer omit line p. 5 l. 30, and p. 11 ll. 11, 13, & 15. Corrections made by reference to the Collège de France manuscript are marked ‘CdF’ in the apparatus.

page 2–15. The Endoxon of Michael: The word ἔνδοξον was interpreted by Kropp as meaning “praise” (“Lobpreis”), and this translation is followed by Meyer and Gardner. Kropp (1966: 5) specifically understood it as a hymn sung by Michael at the reconciliation of God with Adam, parallel to the hymns of praise sung by the angels after the resurrection of Jesus described in the Book of Bartholomew (CC 27; see Westerhoff 1999: 125–129; Budge 1913: 195–196 (English translation)), although in form and content these are rather different, and this context is not explicit in the text itself. Kropp also prints at the beginning of the text a title, ΠΕΝΔΩΞΟΝ ΜΙΧΑΗΛ ΠΑΡΧΗΑΓΓΕΛΟΣ, “The Endoxon of Michael the Archangel”, not present in the Heidelberg manuscript, but the Collège de France manuscript, of which Kropp was apparently unaware, does indeed contain the end title ΠΕΝΔΩΞΟΝ Ε-ΜΙΧΑΗΛ (“The Endoxon of Michael”), confirming that this is the name of the text. The term appears as a self-reference within the text at several points (p. 3 l. 18, p. 4 ll. 13–14, p. 14 ll. 16, 18, 20). The meaning of the word ἔνδοξον is less clear; the LSJ s.v. gives its primary meaning as “(something) held in high esteem or honour, of high repute”. As noted in Lampe s.v. it may be used as an adjective to describe divine things, such as the name of God, Christ’s second coming, saints, and angels. We have been unable to find a reference to the term being used to describe a genre of hymn in either Greek or Coptic. The closest term might be δοξολογία (“doxology, laudation”), but in the Christian tradition this typically refers to much briefer praise formulae than that present here.

I praise you today, you who gave me this great honour! O *angels on high, come! Praise the Father with me today! O *cherubim |⁵ on high, come! Give glory to the Son with me today! O *Powers on high, come! Dance for the Holy Spirit with me today! Let the sun and the moon and all the stars stand with me |¹⁰ today so that I may sing of the glory of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit! O singers of hymns to the Father, sing hymns to the Father with me today! Let the earth open its mouth and swallow the Devil and |¹⁵ all his works! Let the gates of heaven open and the angels of the light come to me, until I complete this holy endoxon!

Listen to me today, O Father of light! I am |²⁰ *Michael, my name <is> God and man! Lend your ear to me today, O King of kings! I am Michael, I am also the one set over the seven mysteries that are hidden in the heart of the Father, those that he made on the day that he created |²⁵ Man according to his likeness and his image. After he created Phausiēl, I came, I, Michael, and all those who follow me, and we made obeisance to Atōram,

13–15. μαρεπκαζ · ογων ερωβ : εβωνκ επιδιαβολος ≠ μη νεβενερκια τηρου : “let the earth open its mouth and swallow the Devil and all his works!” Cf. the description of the deaths of the rebellious Israelites Dathan and Abiram in Numbers 16.30: “and the earth opened its mouth and swallowed them and their houses and their tents and everything that belonged to them, and they went down to hell still alive” (μαρεπκαζ ογων ερωβ ηβωνκ ημνοου μη νενι μη νεγυκνη μη νετωροοι ναγ τηρου ησεβωνк επεσхт εαμηте εγονε, Sahidic Bible 2).

19. πωτ ηπογαειν : “O Father of light” Cf. James 1.17: “father of lights” (πειωτ ηνεογоеιν; Horner 1924: 192).

20. παραν ≠ πνουτε · ρι ρωμε : “my name <is> God and Man” Cf. the note to PCM I 11 p. 9 ll. 17–18.

25–26. κατα πεβινι : μεν τεφρικων ≠ ντερεβταμια : “according to his likeness and his image” Cf. PCM I 10 ll. 2–3 and accompanying notes.

who is the work of his hands. After we had made obeisance to Arōmakhrim—who is Adam—Satanaēl, the First-Formed One, disobeyed you, and you excluded him from your ^{|5} holy glory. The son of perdition, you deprived him of your holy glory. You disturbed his foundations. He brought down upon them a great sickness, until they fulfilled his wish. After that, he did violence to the men ^{|10} whom you created; after that, you would heal them.

Now, my Lord, have pity upon your likeness and your image, and may you give healing to all men who will bear this holy endoxon, and in particular ^{|15} NN, child of NN, month after month, forever[?], yea yea, quickly!

I adjure you today that you listen to me today, O, ruler of those of heaven and those of the earth, by the *cup that the Father blessed; the *angels drank from it so that they received the Holy Spirit! ^{|20} I adjure you today by the seven words that passed between you and your beloved son, Jesus Christ, in the hour that he came into the world on the day in which you created Adam! ^{|25} I adjure you today by your great *name, which you taught the angels so that they gave you glory by it, which is Methemōn, the great name of the Lord *Sabaoth! Now, my Lord, have pity

3. САНАТАНЛ : “Satanaēl” In the pseudepigraphal 2 Enoch and 3 Baruch (surviving in full only in Slavonic), Satanael is given as the name of Satan as an angel before his fall (Gaylord 1982). The name is also found in Coptic sources, such as Pseudo-Theodosius of Alexandria, On Michael (CC 387; Budge 1915: 336.6 etc., 904 (trans)); Pseudo-John Chrysostom, On Raphael (CC 176; Budge 1915: 529.6 etc., 1036 (trans.)).

4. ΠΑΡΧΗΠΛΑΣΜΑ : “the First-Formed One” For this title, cf. the note to PCM I 12 p. 15 l. 17.

5. ΥΙΟΣ ΠΤΑΚΑ : “the son of perdition” Cf. John 17.12.

12. ΠΕΚΙΝΙ ≠ ΜΕΝ ΤΕΚΡΙΚΩΝ : “your likeness and your image” Cf. PCM I 10 ll. 2–3 and accompanying notes.

15. ΕΙΟΣ : ΕΙΟΣ : “month after month” Literally “moon, moon” (i.e. ^{σοος}, cf. ^{βιος}), that is “every lunar month”. Kropp translates “moon for moon” (“Mond für Mond”). For the doubling of a noun to mean “every”, see Layton 2000: 53 §62 (b).

18. ΠΑΠΑΤ ΝΤΑΠΩΤ : ΣΙΟΥ ΕΡΑΙ : “the cup blessed by the Father” Cf. PCM I 25 p. 7 ll. 23–24 and note.

28. ΜΕΘΕΜΩΝ : “Methemōn” Cf. PCM I 25 p. 11 l. 7 and accompanying note.

1. ΠΕΚΙΝΙ ≠ ΜΗ ΤΕΚΕΙΚΩΝ : “your likeness and your image” Cf. PCM I 10 ll. 2–3 and accompanying notes.

6. ΜΗ : ΝΟΕΤΑΞ'ΟΕΒ : “and he will be anointed” Verbal coordination with ΜΗ would be unexpected in Sahidic, but as noted in Crum CD 170a, it is found in Bohairic; the use here may indicate Bohairic influence, or else that the phenomenon is not restricted to Bohairic. We are grateful to Vincent Walter for pointing this out to us.

22. ΝΘΗ ΝΤΕΒΛ ≠ ΝΟΥΘΑΛΛΗΘ : “like the power of a gnat” For similar analogies using small animals to express weakness, see the notes to PCM I 28 p. 2 l. 12–13.

I adjure you today by the four pillars which bear it, whose names are these: Ekterisan, Santas, Santal, Talias! I adjure ^{|20} you today by the blood of the firstborn that was spilled in violence, that you come to me today, I, NN, child of NN, while <the> firstborn go before him, one hundred and forty-five thousand in number!

^{|25} Come well; you came upon this water and this oil, and you breathed upon them, and you filled them with the Holy Spirit, so that when you pour them over NN, child of NN, they will come out of him, namely every suffering which is in his body! Let ^{|30} the Devil be ashamed, and all his power

15. ⲛⲉⲙⲧⲉ : “in it” That is, in “the church” (ⲧⲉⲕⲗⲏⲥⲓⲁ in l. 30). Kropp understands this as part of a missing invocation ending with “in it” (“in ihr”).

22. ⲕⲓⲛⲉⲓ : “that you come” Kropp translates “that you bring down to me, NN, today, (your) Firstborn” (“dass du heute zu mir, NN, herabbringest (deinen) Erstgeborenen”), apparently understanding a form of the verb ⲉⲓⲛⲉ (“to bring”).

23–24. ⲣⲉⲱⲙⲣⲉⲡ ⲛⲓⲥⲓ ⲉⲥⲱⲕ : ⲉⲗⲧⲉⲃⲉⲛ : “while <the> firstborn go before him” Kropp and Meyer understand the “firstborn” as the being asked to be sent, translating “(send...) the firstborn, before whom there submit one hundred forty-five thousand in number” (“Erstgeborenen, während vor ihm herziehen 145.000 in ihrer Zahl”). The equivalent passage in the Collège de France manuscript, however, reads ⲉⲣⲉⲛⲉⲱⲣⲉⲡ ⲛⲓⲥⲓ [ⲥ]ⲱⲕ · ⲉⲧⲉⲕⲉⲛ... (“while the firstborn (pl.) go before you”), confirming the interpretation given here. The reference to the “firstborn” here is therefore not to Jesus, but rather to a group of several beings whose blood has been spilled; the most obvious reference is to Revelation 7.4 & 7.14, which describes one hundred and forty-four thousand of the Children of Israel who have been sealed after having undergone tribulations, that is, martyrs. In P.Berol. 11347 (Beltz 1985: no. II 42; KYP M220) l. 38 these seem to be associated with the ‘Holy Innocents’, the children killed by Herod (Matthew 2.16–18): “your one hundred and forty-four thousand, those whom Herod killed” (ⲙⲡⲉⲕⲣⲏⲗⲁ ⲛⲱⲟ ⲛⲁⲓ ⲧⲁⲗⲏⲣⲱⲗⲁⲛⲥ ⲉⲗⲧⲉⲃⲉⲱ).

27–28. ⲕⲉⲓⲓⲱⲛⲡⲁⲣⲱⲩⲧⲱ : “when you pour them” Kropp translates “when one (!) pours it out” (“wenn man (!) sie ausgiesst”).

become like the power of a gnat, yea, yea!

I adjure you today by your (s.) three holy *names, those that you revealed to the world so that they might know ^{|5} you, only true God, that is the Father, and the Son and the Holy Spirit, the harbour of salvation, the Father of the seal which bears the glory of the Father[?], the destruction and fall of the entire power ^{|10} of the Devil, the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit!

I adjure you today by the great base of gold upon which your throne is! I adjure you today by the shoes ^{|15} of gold which are on your feet; their name is Thatha! I adjure you today by the chariot of gold which is upon the head of your throne, which is Thiē! I adjure you by the purple robe whose ^{|20} name is Mariē! I adjure you today by the garment of light which covers you; its name is Thōē! I adjure you today by the great book which is in your hand which has the seven seals upon it, which has the ordinance ^{|25} of the things of the heaven and of the earth written in it! I adjure you today by your exalted arm, that which rules the foundations of the earth and the gates of heaven! I adjure you by the star of light of your two eyes, ^{|30} Thōl and Thōran!

1–2. εσθωπι νην η̄τσαν ς νογθαλμς : “become like the power of a gnat” An example of the common use of small animals as metaphors for powerlessness; cf. the notes to PCM I 28 p. 2 ll. 11–12, and Dosoo 2022c: 531.

p. 7 l. 12–p. 8 l. 15. The body of God: Cf. the note to PCM I 12 p. 31 ll. 3–6.

19. ς-τρωφωρα : “by the purple robe” Kropp translates “fine (?) purple rug” (“schönen (?) Purpurteppich”), while Meyer translates “purple covering.”

24. τϛ̄ : ςφραγς : “the seven seals” Cf. Revelation 5.1: “And I saw a book in the right hand of the one who sat upon the throne, written on the front and back, sealed with seven seals” (ἀγω ἀβναγ εϛχωμε εν τοϛναμ η̄π̄ετ̄μοος ρι πε̄ρονος εϛχη ρῑη ἀγω ρῑπαροϛ εϛτοβε ςααϛϛε ςφραγς; Budge 1912: 283).

27. εταμ̄ετ̄ : “that which rules” Kropp translates “that which encloses” (“der [...] umfasst”).

28. η̄π̄ϛϛ : “by the star” Meyer translates as plural “the stars.”

I adjure you today by the breath of life which comes out from your nose; its name is Stōēl! I adjure you today by Piphemeraniōn, that is your tongue! I adjure you today by Tekauriēl, which is ^{|5} your mouth! I adjure you today by your molars, which are Ōriskōs! I adjure you today by your head, which is Ōrasiēl! I adjure you today by the form of the cross of light which is upon your head, which is Sitōriēl! ^{|10} I adjure you today by the wreath of light which is on your neck, its name is Lelaēl! I adjure you today by Ōrphamiēl, which is your finger of your right hand! I adjure you today by your two hands, Anaramouēl, ^{|15} your right hand, Antrakouēl, your left hand! I adjure you today by your two feet, Thaōth, Thaōtha! I adjure you today by the throne of light upon which you sit, judging all of the creatures ^{|20} which you have created!

I adjure you today by the great *power that stands above your head, her name <is> Merouēl, she who put upon your head the wreath <made> from the shoots of the Tree of Life, Asaf, Asama, ^{|25} Asamlōl! I adjure you today by your great power which is thirty, fifteen, and thirty-six <in number>, one on your right, the other one on your left, with swords of fire in their hands, ready, doing your command! ^{|30} I adjure you today by your *Four Creatures who draw your throne, whose names are Meliton, Akhramata, Psourouthioun, Paramēra, blessing you by day and by night, saying, |^{Greek} *Holy, holy, |⁵ holy, Lord *Sabaoth, |^{Coptic} those of the heavens and those of the earth are full of your holy glory! I adjure you today by the two who cover their body, whose names are Sōkhōt, Akhōrbou! This is their song: ‘You are holy, you are holy, you are holy, Lord Sabaoth, of whose holy glory the heaven and the earth |¹⁵ are full!’ I adjure you today by the *Twenty-Four Presbyters, who are under your episcopacy, those whom you appointed on the day that you created them, from alpha to omega! I adjure you today by the great hand that you put upon them! |²⁰ I adjure you today by the twenty-four thrones that they sit upon and their diadems of gold which are upon their heads and their wreaths which are upon their necks and their golden bowls which are <in> their hands and the incense that rises up |²⁵ under the face of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit!

Listen to me today, O you who listen, heed my voice today, O you who heed voices, let my prayer go up to you and let my voice go up to the *throne, |³⁰ that you might take pity upon your likeness and your image! Receive my requests from me, O my lord, come upon this water and

2–3. ΜΕΛΙΤΟΝ ≠ ΑΚΡΑΜΑΤΑ · ΠΣΟΥΡΟΥΘΙΟΥΝ ≠ ΠΑΡΑΜΗΡΑ : “Meliton, Akhramata, Psourouthioun” For these names of the Four Living Creatures, see the glossary under *Angelic Beings.

9. ΚΕΣΝΑΥ : “the other two” Following the previous line, Kropp adds in his translation the specification “seraphim” (“den beiden anderen Seraphim”).

18. ΕΧΙΝ ΑΛΦΑ Ω ΟΩ : “from alpha to omega” A reference to the names of the Twenty-Four Presbyters, which often each begin with one the twenty-four letters of the Greek alphabet (cf. glossary s.v. *Twenty-Four Presbyters). At the equivalent passage, the Collège de France copy includes their names in full, beginning ΑΧΑΗΛ · ΒΑΝΟΥΗ[Λ] ΓΑΡΔΙΗΛ · ΔΑΘΗΛ. The version in this manuscript thus seems to represent an abbreviation.

26–27. ΡΕΥΣΩΤΗ, ΠΡΕΒΧΙ ΣΑΗ : “he who listens, he who heeds voices” Kropp, followed by Meyer, misunderstand the agentive prefix ρεϋ- as an abbreviation for the word (π)ρε(σ)β(ύτερος) “presbyters/elders” (“Ältesten”), translating instead, “O elders, listen... O elders, hear my voice” (“Hört mich heute, ihr Ältesten... horchet auf mich, ihr Ältesten”).

30–31. ΠΕΚΙΝΙ : ΗΝ ΤΕΚ ΕΙΚΩΝ : “your likeness and your image” Cf. PCM I 10 ll. 2–3 and accompanying notes.

31. ΝΑΨΩΛΟΓΙΑ : “my requests” Kropp translates “my defence” (“meine Verteidigung”), Meyer as “spell”; cf. the discussion on p. 34.

this oil, pour your Holy Spirit upon them, bless them, sanctify it, so that he fills them with every healing, so that as soon as I pour upon <him> |⁵ the water, NN, child of NN, they will come out of him, namely every sickness which is in his body, NN, child of NN, yea, whether it is a wicked sickness or a demonic strike or a force or it is a magic! Let them flee, whether |¹⁰ shameful magic or evil-doing or any demonic craft or pollution or female force or striking-down spells or evil power or those of the air or the things which they do, |¹⁵ namely male magicians or a female magician, let them come out of NN, child of NN! The anathema that comes forth from the mouth of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, may it come upon |²⁰ you (pl.), obliterating you, yea, quickly! I adjure you today by <the> three breaths that you gave to the face of Adam on the day that you created him, so that he received the Holy Spirit, that you listen to my requests today, |²⁵ and my reproaches! May you come upon this water and this oil!

Come well; you came upon <the> wing of Asarōth, the great *cherub, as three hundred and fifteen thousand *angels and *archangels were going |³⁰ before him, you went

1–2. ἐκπορεῖ ἕλκωου ἡπεκνᾶ εἰς τοῦ αὐτοῦ : “pour your Holy Spirit upon them” Meyer and Kropp translate “through which you pour out your holy spirit” (“dass du darüber ausgiessest deinen heiligen Geist”).

3. ἐν ἅμαρτοις ἡπείσθη : “so that he fills it with every healing” Kropp translates “that they are filled with all healing” (“dass sie mit aller Heilung erfüllt werden”).

12–13. κατακλιτικόν : “striking-down spells” Greek κατακλιτικόν, a technical term drawn from Graeco-Egyptian magic for curses which cause their victims to be bedbound (κατακλίνω) with disease; for an example, see PCM I 18, and cf. the brief discussion in Dosoo 2022d: 218 n. 40.

24. ἡ ἀπαιτία : “my requests” Kropp translates “my defence” (“meine Verteidigung”), Meyer as “spell” (cf. the comments in the introduction, p. 5).

27. ἡ ἀσάρωθ ≡ πνός ἡσέρωθ : “Asarōth, the great cherub” Cf. PCM I 18 l. 3 and the accompanying note.

12. ἀκΟΥΑΝΑΣ : “you revealed” Kropp translates “he revealed” (“Er offenbarte”).

13. ΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ : “Manouēl” As suggested by the context, this is a name for Jesus, derived from Emmanuel; cf. PCMI 11 p. 16 ll. 2–4 and accompanying note.

19–24. Labour of Mary: Compare P.Vindob. K 10335 (Crum 1942; KYP M264), a brief text containing the names of the bricks upon which Mary squatted when she gave birth, Ouakramak, Ouaramak, and Ouakra[...] (ὈΥΑΚΡΑΜΑΚ ὈΥΑΡΑΜΑΚ ΟΥΑΚΡΑ[, ll. 3–5); cf. Preininger forthcoming c: chapter 4.

p. 12 l. 29–p. 13 l. 3. Healing miracles of Jesus: Apparently based upon the very similar list of Jesus’ works in Matthew 11.5, Luke 7.22.

of Jesus, the lame walk; in the name <of> Jesus, the paralyzed arises, his feet walking; in the name of Jesus, the dumb speak; in the name of Jesus, fire is extinguished, water dries up; in the name ^{|5} of Jesus, stone breaks; in the name of Jesus Christ, every suffering comes out of the body of NN, son of NN, and his body blossoms like the Tree of Life in the middle of Paradise.

I adjure you today by the symbol of the cross, ^{|10} upon which you were set up for the salvation of all the race of humankind, that is, that which brought all the power of the Devil to naught and of all the demons, those who strike the children of men! I adjure you today ^{|15} by the first tear which came from the eyes of the Father; it came upon the head of your holy Son, Jesus Christ, <in> the hour that he hung upon the cross for the salvation of all humankind! I adjure you today by the crown of thorns which was lifted upon ^{|20} your head and by the five nails which pierced your body and by the blow of the spear which was put in his side, and by his blood and the water which came forth from it upon the cross! I adjure you today by the three breaths which you gave to the hands ^{|25} of your Father upon the cross, that are these: *Elōei, *Elēmas, Abaktani, *Sabaoth! I adjure you today by the three days that he was in the tomb, and by his resurrection from the dead and by the shroud that he was covered with, Jesus Christ, the ^{|30} Son of God in truth! I adjure you by your holy resurrection and by the three breaths of life, which you gave in the faces of your holy apostles!

Come to me today, O Lord Jesus Christ in the flesh

4. A man who has elephantiasis[?]. Draw this *image with <the> blood <of a> vulture. Bind it to him. They will heal, God willing. <Offering>: *mastic.

5. A man with an enmity between him and his wife. Pronounce this prayer upon oil, and she anoints the face. They will reconcile. |⁵ <Offering>: *frankincense.

6. A man who has been *bound, unable to join with his wife. Pronounce the prayer over oil of the *first fruits. A pot of water, pour it upon him. He will be completely released. Offering: *costus and *storax.

7. A man who has been given a *cup. Pronounce the prayer three |¹⁰ times over a glass *flask filled with rose-water and charlock-water. Have him drink while fasting. It will remove <itself>. Offering: white costus.

8. A man who is in pain. Pronounce the prayer over oil of the *first-fruits. Have him drink <it>. It will cease. Offering: bitumen. |¹⁵

9. A man walking in the desert when the sun is covered. Bind this figure to his hand. Certainly, no robbers or beasts will be able to touch him. <Offering>: pig's senna[?].

1. κκηῖκβ : “elephantiasis?” Here we propose a variant of ὀνῶεξ; the alteration of κ to σ does not pose a problem, although the shift from ε to β would be more unexpected; perhaps cf. μοσξ/μοσϣ (“girdle”; Crum CD 213b), although in that case there is also an intermediate form μοσξϣ.

9. ογαπατ : “a cup” Likely a ‘magical potion’ administered in a cup; cf. e.g., Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44), p. 4, ll. 11–17, a drink from a cup to separate a couple; similar recipes are found in PCM I 33 front ll. 1–5; P.Méd.Copt.IFAO (Chassinat 1921; KYP M941) no. 229.

17. αλογακ : “pig’s senna?” The initial αλ- would seem to suggest an Arabic loanword, but we have not found a good candidate. Instead we suggest that this may be the word found in the Scala Magna as αλογικ (4.2.339; Macomber 2020: I 142) with the translation مكة شش دم, šišm makka, referring to the seed of Cassia absus L. (= Chamaecrista absus (L.) H.S. Irwin & Barneby), known in English as pig’s senna or chaksh (cf. Kuczkiewicz-Fraś 2003: 165). The seeds are black, and used in various medical preparations, including eye medicine (Meyerhof 1931: 24, 46; Kuczkiewicz-Fraś 2003: 165; cf. Lev/Amar 2008: 554). The Coptic name seems to come from Greek ἀλουσία “unwashed”, perhaps in reference to the blackness of the seeds.

28. ογεζογία : εκπητ ερογν φαρακ : “An authority to whom you are going” Here we understand the “authority” to be a human in a position in authority, a translation also adopted by Meyer. Justification for this may be found in the Scala Magna, in which ἑζογία is translated as “the sultan” (السلطان; Macomber 2020: 70). The term “sultan” is used in several Arabic (including Judaeo- and *Copto-Arabic) recipes to refer to one possible authority a client might need to approach; cf. e.g., ‘Īsā ibn ‘Alī, Book on the Useful Properties of Animal Parts (IX CE) 1.10, 2.2, 4.6–7, 18.1, 56.10, 59.22, 67.2 (Raggetti 2018); Geniza 24 l. 10 (Naveh/Shaked 1993); Guide to the Psalms Psalms 19, 20, 26, 34, 40, 42, 53, 54, 57 (Henein/Bianquis 1975). Compare also Förster WBGW 272 s.v. εζογία, although these instances tend to refer the abstract quality of power in general rather than specific individuals. Both terms, exousia and “sultan”, would seem to refer, at this time, to “the person who at a particular time is the personification of the impersonal governmental power” (Kramers et al. 2012: §1). Kropp and Gardner understand this to refer to a supernatural being who has confronted the patient of the ritual, specifically a “ghost” (“Totengeist”); Kropp seems to suggest a confusion with οὐσία, “essence”, the term often used for materials from a human body used in rituals, sometimes taken from dead bodies. Ἐξουσία in reference to a supernatural being is best attested as a rank of angel, however, which would not seem to fit here.

29. ηαρεσ εχωα : “Bind it to him” Kropp suggests that “him” here might be the dead person whose ghost is being encountered, but on this interpretation see the note to l. 28 above.

10. A man who is angry because his wife is sinning against him. Draw the image. Wash them off with jasmine oil. <Anoint> him. No-one ^[20] will be able to sleep with her. Let <him> anoint her face. <Offering:> *mastic.

11. A woman whose husband is violent[?] towards her. Draw the image on a shell. Fill it <with> jasmine oil. Recite the prayer over it. Anoint her face. He will make peace with her. Offering: mastic, *agarwood.

12. A man who is going to an unworthy act. Draw the image. ^[25] Bind it to him. No-one will recognise him. Offering: *storax.

13. A man who is unable to rest. Draw the image. Place it before him. <He will> sleep. Offering: mastic.

14. An authority to whom you are going. Draw the power which is on the right. Bind it to him. Go ^[30] to <the authority>. Do not speak. Certainly, you <will be> well[?].

15. A village you desire to make inhabited. Draw the image. Bury it at a crossroads. Certainly, <it> will be inhabited. <Offering:> *musk incense.

16. A workshop, to destroy it[?]. A pot of flowing water. Pronounce the prayer over it 7 times, wearing torn clothes, ^[35] and draw <it> backwards until <you> pour it out at the door of the house. Offering: charcoal[?].

29–30. ΠΩΤ ΕΒΟΥΝ ΠΕΡΩΛΕ : “Go to <the authority>. Do not speak.” Gardner translates “Confront, but do not speak”.

30. ΜΑΝ ΖΗΚ ΘΑΝ : ΜΟΥΧΑΛΟΙ : “Certainly, <you will be> well?” Kropp understands ΜΗΝ ΖΙΚ ΘΩΩΝΚ or ΜΑΝ ΖΙΚ ΘΩΩΝΕ followed by ΜΠΟΥΧΑΙ or ΜΟΥ ΕΤ-ΘΟΥΩΟΥ “no magic can harm you” (“Kein Zauber kann dich schädigen”) or “certainly, magic will become powerless” (“sicherlich wird Zauber kraftlos werden”), suggesting in his notes as “of wellbeing” or “dry water” (“trockenes Wasser”) for the following words. Meyer translates “no sorcery will deprive (you) of well-being (?)” or “surely sorcery will be powerless...”. Gardner translates “truly the sorcery is rendered impotent”. None of these seem to fit the context, in which “magic” is not mentioned, while ΘΩΩΝΕ (“to be sick”) in reference to “magic” becoming powerless is unattested. We assume that here, as in many of the other recipes, the copyist has omitted elements which would normally be grammatically necessary.

33. ΟΥΜΑ ΝΕΡΕΩΒ ≠ ΕΒΩΛΑ : “A workshop, to destroy it?” Here we interpret this as a curse, since this is usually the purpose of rituals that consist of pouring liquids at doors; previous translations have rather understood this as a practice to aid a workplace which is suffering from some kind of problem, being either deserted or flooded by water. Kropp and Meyer translate “a workplace that is deserted when a flow of water streams in” (“ein Arbeitsplatz, der wüst liegt, da eine Wasserflut herzieht”), while Gardner translates “a barren workplace (i.e. small-holding)”.

34–35. ΡΕΖΑΤ ΠΕΖ : ΖΙΩΩΚ : “wearing torn clothes” Kropp and Meyer understand this as referring to a “broken basin” (“einen zersprungenen Kessel”).

35. ΕΚΩΩΚ · ΕΒΑΠΕΡΟΥ : “and walk? backwards” Kropp translates “drag behind you” (“du hinter dir herziehst”); Meyer, “let it stream out behind you”; Gardner, “while you draw (the water) back”. We understand an omitted direct object (ΕΚΩΩΚ) with the sigma omitted via haplography with the following -ec, where the pronoun refers to the pot (ΒΑΛΑΖΤ). Cf. Gregory of Nyssa In Ecclesiasten V (CC 197): “I drew it back with the bridle of my faculties of reason” (ΔΙΟΚΟΣ ΝΕΑ ΠΑΡΟΥ ΖΙΤΝ ΠΕΧΑΛΙΝΟΣ ΝΗΛΟΚΙΣΜΟΣ; Amélineau 1911: 432 l. 13; cf. Orlandi 1981: 337–338).

3. ϥΑΝΘΑΙ : “who condemns” Kropp suggests a translation of “someone who has been granted to you through a sentence (?)” (“der dir durch Richterspruch zugesprochen ist ?”); he may have considered a word related to ϥΑΥΟΝ (“slave”), and have understood this as a spell to return an escaped slave (cf. e.g., PGM CIX; KYP M830). Meyer translates “a person who is at odds with you”, and Gardner “someone estranged (?) from you”.

4–5. ΠΟΥΧΕΧ ΝΒΗΗΗ : “swallow” Previous editors translate “swallow-sparrow” (“Schwalbenspatze” Meyer & Kropp), “swallow or sparrow” (Gardner; cf. Crum CD 40a. s.v. ΒΗΗΕ), but the Scala Magna, gives the meaning as simply السنونو as-sunūnū “swallow” (Macomber 2020: 123; s.v. ΠΟΛΑΧΜΒΗΡΙ).

5. ΠΧΩΚ ϩ̅ ϩ̅ϩ̅ϩ̅ : “After three days” Cf. Life of Macarius (CC 0419) “after three days, she died” (ΠΧΩΚ Ν̅ ϩ̅ϩ̅ϩ̅ ρ̅ϩ̅ϩ̅; Amélineau 1894: 240 l.10). Kropp/Meyer translate “Completion” (“Die Vollendung”), understanding it to mark the outcome of the ritual.

6. ϥΑΒΗ : “He will go” The usual translation of ει is “to come”, but we understand this as a ritual to get rid of an enemy, so the outcome is that the victim “goes away” with the bird. Alternatively, we might understand that the bird returns to the client, bringing the target with it.

7–8. ΜΑΡΕΤΕΣΙΜΗΡΙ : “let the wife” ϩ̅ϩ̅ΗΕ can be translated as “woman” or “wife”. We opt for “wife” to distinguish the woman who must bury the object in her house from the “(strange) woman” whom the first woman’s husband or male partner is “chasing after”.

13–14. ϣ̅ ΝΤΕΝΑΜΙC : “the seven powers” Kropp & Gardner suggest that these “seven powers” may be the angels mentioned in p. 6 ll. 8–13; cf. also the powers mentioned in p. 11 ll. 23–29. Kropp wonders if “seven” (Ζ) is an error for “two” (Β), then referring to the two powers in the tableau.

25. ΜΟΛΥ ΝΘΗΗ : “hidden water” Perhaps referring to water from an underground source; cf. Meyer/Smith 1994: 385; Gardner 2023b: 133. Smith cites Crum CD 696a s.v. ϩ̅ΗΗ; cf. p. 321.

Image: The “Powers” are six-winged *angels; the names of several of the *archangels in ll. 32–35 may indicate that the central angel is to be copied multiple times. The figures below him likely represent the human patient, and the reptile-like demon being cast out of him; cf. Dosoo 2022a; Mößner/Nauerth 2015: 348–350.

1. Front ll. 1–26, back ll. 1–9 (?): Curse for removing favour with ritual variants (KYP T225)

Complete paper sheet, with minor damage along creases. The manuscript is a formulary, carrying a curse with two variant procedures, the first to remove favour from a person so that they are hated, the second a separation spell; the relationship of the text on the back to those on the front is not clear. The manuscript is part of the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’ and belongs to the 1930 purchase (see pp. 259–263).

The text is written on both front and back in a brown ink, likely of plant origin (see p. 261). As in other manuscripts in this archive, the text is divided into sections using simple horizontal lines, with tableaux consisting of images, voces magicae, and kharaktēres on either side; the back consists almost entirely of a tableau similar to, but much more elaborate than, that of the front. 5 horizontal and 1 vertical creases are apparent, indicating folding.

The hand of this manuscript is not that of Deacon Iōhannēs, responsible for the majority of the Heidelberg Library (PCM I 21–26), but it does seem to be the same as that of PCM I 28, a codex made from sheets of paper the same size as that used for this manuscript. Although the letter heights of this manuscript are larger than those of PCM I 28, the forms of the letters are generally identical. The η of PCM I 27 measures approximately 0.6 cm, as opposed to ca. 0.3 cm in the case of PCM I 28, with correspondingly thicker strokes. PCM I 28 also gives the impression of having been written more slowly and with greater care, with greater variation in shading and more extensive use of flourishes and serifs.

The hand is much more formal and consistent than that of Iōhannēs, writing in an elegant bimodular, largely bilinear majuscule. There is a slight rightward slope, more marked in PCM I 27 than 28, and controlled variation in stroke thickness. The letters are generally written separately, although certain letters (such as α, τ) often extend to touch the following letter. The α has a slightly angular bowl, with a long tail. β is angular, ε and c thin, the former with a slightly detached, but short, middle stroke. λ, ζ, and ς have generous descending strokes; most of the letters have short serifs at the end of strokes, notably the τ, which always has a serif on the left, and often also on the right side of its horizontal bar. Notably, ζ does not have the distinctive form used by Iōhannēs (namely, a x with a long z-like tail), so that z and ζ can look quite similar (for majuscule z, see PCM I 28 p. 8 l. 20), the difference being that the tail of the former curls to the left like the numeral 3, whereas that of the latter recurves to the right. This seems to have led the copyist to alter the form to a more typical majuscule form (z) on l. 15 of the front of this manuscript to reduce ambiguity. φ in PCM I 28 generally has a large, angular bowl, and a short vertical stroke, although the form in PCM I 27 is somewhat different. γ in PCM I 27 is generally y-shaped, while in PCM I 28 its form is Y; PCM I 28 also uses an elaborate σ with a recurved ascender not present in PCM I 27. Nonetheless, the ritual instructions of PCM I 28 (p. 12 l. 19–p. 13), written in a slightly less mannered style, uses forms of both γ and σ closer to PCM I 27, demonstrating that these divergent letterforms are a deliberate stylistic choice. Supralineation is primarily used for abbreviations and names, but short strokes are also used to mark the schwa/autosyllabic consonants, and sometimes to mark an omitted final n. Mid-points, colons, two short oblique lines (≡), and three dots (⋮) are used to mark paratextual divisions (the last only in PCM I 27). Notably, this copyist generally uses the minuscule forms of Greek letters to write numerals, a feature which posed problems to previous editors.¹ Bilabel/Grohmann (1934: 305, 410) dated this hand to the eleventh century, albeit without identifying the same copyist in both manuscripts. We opt for a slightly wider range; we have found similar hands in manuscripts dated from 917/918 to 1023, leading us to propose a tenth to eleventh century date.²

While this copyist seems to be more highly trained than Iōhannēs, the dialectal features are the same—Sahidic heavily influenced by a Middle Egyptian dialect, likely that of the Faiyum. There are fewer grammatical errors, but we still find some unexpected features (see, e.g., PCM I 28 p. 4 ll. 7–8).

² Similar hands include the colophon on fol. 155r of Vat.Copt. 66.5 (CLM 135; 917/918 CE); the colophon and reader's note of Vat.Copt. 68, fol. 162r & 162v (CLM 153; 957 & 1014 CE); the colophon of Vat.Copt. 58.4–5 fol. 35v (CLM 76; 1017 CE); and the hands of P.Teschlot 1 & 2 (Richter 2000; 1022 and 1023 CE respectively); cf. the comments of Miroshnikov 2022: 408.

“He will not buy[?], he will not make his payments[?] that he has contracted for himself, except for a hatefulness which surrounds him, and devastation and hatred and scattering and reversal and every annihilation. I adjure you today, ¹⁵ O mighty *angels, by those who stand before you (s.) at all times, whose names are these: Iohau, Lōhep, Akhaba, Ouasēl, Akalata, Kasis, Keria, Akharah, Salani, Paplin; you (pl.) are the ones who will be with NN, child of NN; you will take the favour ¹⁰ [from] his face and you (s.) will give to him the favour of his backside, and devastation and hatred and scattering and reversal! No person in whom is the breath of life will be able to look at the face <of> NN yea, yea, quickly, quickly!”

It is finished.

¹⁵ Draw the image and the phylacteries on a metal plate. Dip them. Wipe them off. <Put the> oil on the face <of> your enemy. Bury them at the door. Write again. Put it into a figurine of unsmoked wax. Set it at the door of an opponent[?]. You apply the nail. It is a scattering. It is a destruction.

It is a separation, according to ²⁰ this manner. Put it in two wax figurines. Turn their backs to each other. Wrap them in cloth from a burial shroud. Smear their face <with>[?] menstrual blood <and> the oil from the metal plate on the face.

Offering: *three evil <things>. It is finished.

1. ⲛⲉⲩⲁⲛⲱⲕⲣⲉ : “he will not make his payments?” For the sense “make a payment” see Förster WBGW p. 81 s.v. ἀπόκρισις sense 2. The exact meaning of this statement remains obscure.

9–10. ⲧⲉⲧⲏⲃⲓ ⲧⲉⲕⲁⲣⲓⲥ [ⲉ]ⲛⲉⲃⲁ : “you will take the favour [from] his face” For the concept of favour being given to or taken from the face, see the note to PCM I 22 l. 32.

15–23. Ritual Instructions: Options are provided here for two rituals. For a curse of destruction, the tableau is copied onto a metal plate and washed off with oil. The oil is then applied to an effigy made from wax representing the ritual’s target, into which a second copy of the tableau (written on folded paper?) has been placed. The effigy is then pierced with a nail before being left at the target’s door. The second ritual is for a separation curse, in which two wax effigies representing the targets are placed back to back before being anointed with the oil used to wash off the metal plate and menstrual blood, then wrapped in a burial shroud. For the long history of the manipulation of such figurines going back to pre-Christian Egypt, Mesopotamia, and Greece, see Dosoo 2023a. A separation curse very close to the second ritual here which involves placing effigies back to back can be found in the eleventh-century Ġāyat al-ḥakim (Latin Picatrix; Ritter 1933: 261.5–263.4; German translation in Ritter/Plessner 1962: 269–271), along with the opposite manipulation, placing figurines face to face. For discussions, see Dosoo 2018: 23–51; Dosoo 2023a: 171–177.

17. ⲛⲟⲩⲗⲁ ⲛⲁⲧⲕⲟⲩⲧ : “unfired wax” Here ⲁⲧⲕⲟⲩⲧ seems to be the equivalent of ἀκάπνιστον, used to describe the wax used to make effigies in GEMF 84/PGM CXXIV (KYP M840; V–VI CE) l. 12, and the Historical and Ethnographic Society of Athens Codex 115 (XVIII CE; Delatte 1927: 77.8). It would seem to refer to a high quality of wax collected without smoking the bees out of their hive; cf. Strabo, Geography 9.1.23 on unsmoked honey, and BL Ms. Or. 6794 l. 56 (Kropp 1931: I no. E; KYP M306) for an instance of “unsmoked honey” (ⲉⲩⲉⲓⲱ... ⲛⲁⲧⲕⲟⲩⲧ) in Coptic.

22. ⲱⲡⲟ : “menstrual blood” For a discussion, see the note to PCM I 22 l. 46.

Image: The image here, like that on the front, seems to represent an *angel, perhaps one of the “mighty angels” mentioned in front l. 5. The angel is depicted with the iconography of the *cherubim and *seraphim, a crowned head surrounded by six wings. Here only two wings, resembling long hands, are clearly visible, while the sixth pair may have merged with the crown; see the discussion in Dosoo 2022a: 144–147. Compare Mößner/Nauerth 2015: 328, who refer to the figure as a “snake-woman” (“Schlangenfrau”). Compare the similar image of an angel on PCM I 32 p. 2. It is unclear whether this is a fuller version of the same tableau which could not be fully copied onto the front, or if this is a similar but different tableau to be used with the ritual instructions in ll. 6–9, which are too fragmentary to clearly understand.

Linguistic description: Sahidic with Middle Egyptian influence.

Contents:

1. Front p. 1–13 (ll. 1–275): Love spell attributed to Cyprian of Antioch (KYP T15)

Single-quire paper codex of 16 pages, consisting of 1 quaternion (4 bifolios), once bound with a thread. The codex is inscribed only on the first 13 pages, the last 3 pages being left blank. The manuscript belongs to the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’, being part of the 1930 purchase. Like the other manuscripts from this collection, it was probably produced in the Faiyum and is written in a form of Sahidic heavily influenced by the dialect of that region.¹

In addition to the centrefolds in the bifolios that we would expect in a codex, the manuscript shows signs of having been further folded, once vertically and once horizontally to form a small package.² All of the pages except 12 & 13 show considerable marginal decoration, consisting of a vertical line made up of short horizontal lines in the left margin, broken at intervals by elaborate (but purely decorative) diplai (>) and dotted obeloi (÷), generally four to a page. A decorative double horizontal line also appears at the end of the prayer, separating it from the ritual procedure. The ink on page 13 is darker due to discolouration of the page as a whole, perhaps as the result of staining from either mud or oil following deposition or in the course of use.³

The hand is very regular, the script a bilinear and unimodular majuscule, with a slight slope to the right. Interlinear space is well respected, although the margins are very narrow. Supralinear strokes are used above abbreviations and voces magicae, as well as to indicate the schwa or autosyllabic letters, but in this last case we find them as very short lines above or between one or more letters. The use of paper suggests a tenth century date at the earliest, and this impression is confirmed by the letterforms; despite the difference in letter height size (cf. pp. 362–363), we propose that the copyist of this text is the same as that of PCM I 27, and so a fuller discussion of the hand may be found in the introduction to that manuscript.

We note that the translation of this piece significantly benefited from the help of Ivan Miroshnikov, Michael Zellmann-Rohrer, Alexandros Tsakos, and So Miyagawa, with whom we read this text in an online reading group in 2021.

Cyprian of Antioch, the putative author of this text, is a legendary magician turned bishop and then martyr.⁴ His legend developed in the decades prior to 379 CE, when a sermon by Gregory of Nazianzus conflated him with the historical Cyprian of Carthage (ca. 210–258 CE).⁵ His hagiographical dossier consists of three primary works, the Conversion, the Confession, and the Martyrdom of Cyprian;⁶ a synthesis of the three sources of his legend in a single hexameter poem was composed by the Empress Aelia Eudocia (ca. 401–460 CE).⁷ Versions of his legend survive in most of the languages of Mediaeval Christianity,⁸ including Coptic versions of the Confession (CC 95) and Martyrdom (CC 619).⁹ His story, most fully told in the first-person Confession, describes his initiation into all of the mystery cults of the pagan world (Delphi, Eleusis, Memphis, Chaldaea, and so on), in the process becoming a master magician and a disciple of the Devil. Coming to Antioch, he sets himself up as a philosopher-magician, performing various services for clients and teaching students of his own. Among his clients is a wealthy young man named Aglaïdas, who hires him to use a love spell on a Christian virgin named Justina, but the demons sent by Cyprian, first for Aglaïdas, and then on his own behalf, are thwarted by her simple faith and her use of the sign of the cross. Cyprian finally confronts the Devil with the failure of his magic, and discovering that Jesus is more powerful than he, converts to Christianity, eventually becoming a bishop before being martyred in the Great Persecution of Diocletian (303–313 CE), on the 21st Thouth (18th September) according to the Coptic Synaxarium.¹⁰

Cyprian's pre-conversion reputation as a magician led to him becoming a 'patron saint' of magic in some popular Christian traditions; there is evidence of books of magic attributed to him in Germany by the sixteenth century, when their existence is commented on by Johannes Trithemius (1462–1516) and Cornelius Agrippa (1486–1535),¹¹ although he is particularly important as the pseudonymous author of many such works in early modern Iberia and Scandinavia.¹² The text here, though, seems to have a slightly different origin.

The first-person narrative of the Love Spell follows that of the Confession, and, in turn, that of the dependent amuletic text known as the Prayer of Cyprian. Likely originally a Greek composition, copies of this Prayer survive in several other languages, including Arabic, Armenian, Ge'ez, and Syriac, as well as several vernacular European languages.¹³ The Coptic Love Spell would seem to be the oldest surviving part of this tradition, although a possible sixth-century parallel may allow us to push this back several centuries (see the note to p. 2 ll. 4–5 below). Despite differences in wording, these versions manifestly all belong to a common tradition, and begin with Cyprian boasting of his former magical powers before confessing his realisation of the supremacy of Jesus Christ and invoking God to protect the user of his prayer from misfortune, particularly that caused by harmful magic. While this prayer is not (yet) attested in Coptic, the survival of the *Copto-Arabic version makes the existence of a lost Coptic intermediary virtually certain. The Love Spell seems best understood as having been inspired by this text, following as it does the same basic structure. In adapting an older, originally amuletic prayer for aggressive purposes, it resembles other texts from the Coptic magical corpus, including PCM I 31, two curses based on the model of the Testament of Solomon, and an as yet unpublished love spell which seems to draw on the textual tradition of the Prayer of Mary 'in Bartos'.¹⁴

Two early (8th- and 10th-century) Latin prayers attributed to Cyprian survive, but they are quite far removed in content from the other versions, lacking the opening confession and explicit request for protection against magic; see Leclercq 1936: 2330–2334, with further references.

I know that everything has left me. Everything has been changed in my soul. Everything has been changed in my nature. My innards have become like gall. |⁵ My appearance has changed. I have been terrified in my flesh. The hair of my head has moved². I have burned with fire. I have lain down but I have not slept. I have arisen but I have not |¹⁰ rested. I have eaten and I have drunk in grief and sighing. I have not found rest in my soul or my spirit because of the greatness of my desire. My wisdom has |¹⁵ darkened. My power has perished. I have been undone in my craft.

I am Cyprian the great magician, the one who was companion to the Serpent of the *Abyss. He called me “my son” and I called |²⁰ him “father”. He put his crown and his diadem upon my head;

1. †ϫαογν : “I know” A small fold in the paper conceals the upper part of the † in photographs, but autopsy confirms its presence.

1–2. ρεωωβ νιμ ογεινε ηαερα : “I know that everything has left me” The exact meaning of this phrase is difficult to determine; Bilabel/Grohmann and Jackson translate the phrase literally as “everything has passed me by” (“jedes Ding vor mir vorübergegangen ist”). The meaning seems to be either that all of Cyprian’s powers have left him or that he has been hitherto entirely unaware of the true state of things. For the first interpretation, compare the Greek ἀπέρχομαι (for the equivalence, see Crum CD 483b), and the negative ατρογεινε (“(that) which does pass away”), and cf. p. 2 l. 9; for the second compare the Greek παρέρχομαι LSJ sense V (cf. Crum CD 438b).

18. επετρακων επινοϝ : “the Serpent of the Abyss” For consistency we translate δράκων as “serpent”, but this word is often translated in English as “dragon”. The Serpent here is the Devil; cf. the description of him being cast out of heaven in Revelation 12.7–9.

I caused me to drink milk from his right breast, and he sat me at his right hand. He made all of his power subject to me. I mounted on <the> ¹⁵ Pleiades, and it sailed under me like a ship. I knew the whisper of the stars. I possessed the treasures of the winds. I knew all astronomy.

All these things left me because of ¹⁰ a maiden named Justina. She made my power and <the> power of Satan like a sparrow in <the> hand of a small child. I knew in the depths of my heart and the thoughts of my spirit ¹⁵ and the bounds of my mind that none would be able to prophesy to my heart in this affair, neither *angel nor *archangel nor *cherubim nor *seraphim nor force nor ²⁰ *power nor bodiless one nor *authority would be able to <prophesy>, nor to fulfil my command, except the Father of the Aeons

1. ΔΙΤΣΑΙ: “I caused me to drink” Polotsky notes that we would expect “he caused me to drink” (ΔΒΤΣΑΙ) here, with “he” referring to the Devil; “I” here may be the result of a copying error.

4–5. ΣΙΧΘΝ ΚΗΡΟΥΤ: “on <the> Pleiades” As noted by Crum (CD 821a) a close parallel to this passage may be found in the Martyrdom of Phoibammon §§225–226 (CC 297), in which it is said of a magician named Alexandros: “Many times he had stopped the sun in middle of the sky, and conversed with the moon like two men speaking with one other. Many times he had mounted the Pleiades. He had examined the whole region of the air, and the demons were subject to him, obeying him like servants. These were the things that he had done by his magic” (οὐμνησθε γὰρ νοσιπ ἀφσώστ μπρε εἴν τνιτε ντιπε · ἀφσάδε μπουε ἡθε νρωμε σναγ εἴσάδε μῆνεγερνῆγ · οὐμνησθε νοσιπ ἀφάδε εἰσνινοῦτ ἀφμοῦστ μπκώτε τῆρῆ μπανρ · ἀγω νερηνλαμωδν εἴποτασε ναφ εἴσώτῆ ἡσώφ ἡθε ἡνεῖρῆεζαλ · ναῖ νε ναφάαγ εἴν τεφῆῆτῆαρος; Müller/Uljas 2019: 68 (Coptic text), 108 (translation); note that Müller/Uljas mistakenly translate σῆνοῦτ as “death”). The earliest version of this text would seem to be Chester Beatty Library 2029, dated by the PAThs Project to the sixth century (CLM 1163). This passage seems in turn to be dependent on the Greek amuletic Prayer of Cyprian (see introduction): “I would bind the moon and the stars and they would not move”, “And I did all of this magic, and all the evil spirits served (me)” (τὴν σελήνην τῆς ἀστέρως ἔδενα καὶ οὐκ ἐκινούντο; πάσας τε καὶ μαγίας εἰργασάμην, καὶ πάντα τὰ πονηρὰ πνεύματα ἐδούλευον; Schermann 1903: 312, with Ms. V; for the addition of the sun cf. Joshua 10.12–13). These parallels imply an older tradition concerning Cyprian upon which the Love Spell, the Martyrdom, and the Prayer are all dependent, perhaps an earlier version of the Prayer.

7. ΝΑΞΩΩΡ ΕΝΝΕΤΗΓ: “the treasures of the wind” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “took (i.e. carried off) the treasures with the wind” (“die Schätze mit den Winden ergriffen (d.h. entführt”).

12–13. ΕΝΘΕ ΝΟΥΧΑΧ ΕἴΝ ΣΙΧ ΝΟΥΘΗΡΕ ΘΗΗ: “like a sparrow in <the> hand of a small child” For other examples of metaphors which use small animals to express powerlessness, see PCM I 26 p. 5 l. 22, p. 7 l. 1. Close parallels to this passage may be found in Athanasius, Life of Anthony 24.5: “And indeed he (the Devil) was bound by the Lord like a sparrow for our sport” (καὶ δέδεταί μὲν παρὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ὡς στρουθίον εἰς τὸ καταπαίξεσθαι παρ’ ἡμῶν; Bartelink 1994: 202); Pseudo-Eustathius of Tracia, On Michael (CC 148): “he (the Devil) was gripped fast in the hand of the holy Archangel Michael, like a bird in the hand of a little child, and when the archangel had made him suffer greatly he set him free in great disgrace” (ἐφσονε ἡτοτῆ ἡπαρχαγγελος θεογὰβ μιχαηλ ἡφρητ ἡογδαχ ἔεν τχιχ ἡογκοχῆ ἡαλογ ογορ ἔταφαιῖ ἡογδαβ ἔναωα ἀφχαφ ἔβολ ἔεν ογνιωτ ἡωῖπ; Budge 1894: 99 (trans.), 124, l. 11–15); cf. Dosoo 2022c: 531.

and his only-begotten Son, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit, the hallowed one. I suppressed my wrath, I set aside my anger, and I mastered my [|]⁵ madness with great audacity. I stood on my feet, I turned my face to the west, I raised my right hand to the sky, I purified the earth from my feet, [|]¹⁰ I snorted through my nose, and I sent these requests up to the seventh heaven, to the *tabernacle of the Father within <the> seven *veils. I called upon [|]¹⁵ the Father of Aeons, the Lord of all *principalities and all *authorities and all *thrones, saying these requests: “Erisi Tōnai Kharim Balim Basileos [|]²⁰ Autoul Ōbia Kakikephali Amou Amou, seize the spirit which you have entrusted to me,

10. ΔΙΣΕΚ ΠΡΑΥ ΕΒΑΛ ΞΝ ΦΑΔΗΤ : “I snorted through my nose” For a discussion of the practice of “snorting through one’s nose” in Greek and Coptic, see Drescher 1969: 91–93. In Coptic literary texts it is most often associated with the Devil, as a rude and insolent action; cf. van der Vliet 1995: 411.

20. ὨΒΙΑ ΚΑΚΙΚΕΦΑΛΙ : “Ōbia Kakikephali” As Polotsky notes, these voces seem to be the Greek words ὦ βία! κακή κεφαλή! (“O violence! Idiot!”). These oaths may be found in numerous Greek and Coptic literary texts; see, for example, in the Apophthegmata Patrum (Alphabetic Collection) Daniel 3, in which an exorcised demon exclaims, “O violence! The command of Jesus casts me out!” (ὦ βία! ἡ ἐντολὴ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐκβάλλει με); Pseudo-Eustathius of Tracia, On Michael (CC 148) in which the Devil cries out “O violence, what would I do to you, Euphemia, if I could reach you!” (ὦ βία οὐ περὶ ἡμᾶς ἀλλ’ ἐμοῦ φάρο; Budge 1894: 111.14–15); Herodotus, Histories 3.29, in which Cambyzes stabs the Apis bull, taunting the priests: “O idiots, are these gods, creatures of blood and flesh who feel iron?” (ὦ κακαὶ κεφαλαί, τοιοῦτοι θεοὶ γίνονται, ἑναίμοι τε καὶ σαρκώδεις καὶ ἐπαίοντες σιδηρίων;); Martyrdom of Lacaron (CC 284), in which a governor says to soldiers who have defied him: “O idiots! I speak well with you, and you speak badly with me!” (καγε κεφαλή ἡμεῶν καλῶς τετρεσάχι μενῆν ἡμεῶν κακῶς; Balestri/Hyvernat 1908: 18.12–13).

21. ἈΜΟΥ ἈΜΟΥ : “Amou Amou” Alternatively, we might translate this not as voces magicae but as comprehensible Coptic—“come, come”.

21–22. ΘΩΠΗ ΠΕΠΝΑ ΕΝΤΑΚΣΑΛΩΩΒ ΕΡΑΙ : “seize the spirit which you have entrusted to me” For this construction, compare the Martyrdom of George Sa 2 (Borg.Copt. 109, cass. XXVIII, fasc. 152, fol. 5v col. II ll. 23–27): “I will come to you on the clouds so as to receive the deposit [I] have entrusted to [your] body—namely, [your] soul” (ταχι νῆπαρᾶθηκη [ἡ]ταῖ[β]αλω[ο]υ}··· ἐπε[κ]σωμα ἐτε[ε] [τεκ]··· γγχι τε; Miroshnikov/Marjanen/Iacono (forthcoming)). Ivan Miroshnikov is thanked for this reference. The sense seems to be that unless God sends Gabriel, Cyprian will no longer want to live, in which case his spirit should be taken from him. Jackson understands this as a request to God to seize Justina’s spirit.

I do not need it anymore, until you send me today the great servant of flaming fire,
 *Gabriel—he of |⁵ great fiery power, who fills his face with fire from the fire that consumes every fire, which is the fire of your divinity, Lord God, and who |¹⁰ fills his bowl with desire and lust and fills his wings with fire from that river of fire that burns with <the> power of your divinity, |¹⁵ that which every soul will wash within before they worship in your presence—so that he comes on the impulse of his power at your command, O Father of |²⁰ Aeons, to go to NN, the daughter of NN, appearing to her in a great appearance,

7–8. ⲉⲡⲕⲱⲉⲧ ⲛⲏ ⲉⲧⲉ ⲡⲁⲓ ⲧⲉ ⲕⲱⲉⲧ : “every fire, which is the fire” In standard Coptic grammar, the first ⲕⲱⲉⲧ should not have the definite article ⲡ-, since it is already defined by ⲛⲏ, while the second should; the ⲧⲉ may represent a miscopied ⲡ(ⲉ)-.

10. For the motif of an angel with a bowl, compare Revelation 16 in which seven angels pour out “the bowls of God’s wrath” (ⲛⲉⲑⲓⲁⲗⲏ ⲛⲡⲥⲱⲛⲧ ⲛⲡⲛⲟⲩⲧⲉ, 16.1) upon the earth, and the note to PCM I 3 front col. 2 ll. 30–32; cf. Dosoo 2021d: 432–433.

12–13. ⲡⲉⲣⲁ ⲛⲕⲱⲉⲧ : “that river of fire” For the concept of the river of fire in Coptic Christian eschatology, see Zandee 1960: 307–310; specifically, this is the river of fire which flows before the throne of judgement, which must be crossed by the dead, and which burns the sinful but spares the just; cf. the notes to PCM I 12 p. 27 l. 20–p. 29 l. 3.

without delay, without waiting, without negligence, and he fills her heart and her soul and her spirit and her mind with burning lust and [|]⁵ scorching desire and disturbance and tumult, filling her from the nails of her feet to the hair of her head with lust and longing and fornication, as her mind goes astray, as [|]¹⁰ her light darkens, as her ears shut! 9–10. εβερ κακι σι πεσογλειν : “as her light darkens” “Her light” here probably refers to the “light of her eyes”, so that as it darkens she becomes blind, in analogy with her ears shutting; cf. Crum CD 101b, 480b.

11–16. Symptoms of Love: This description draws upon two recurrent motifs, LOVE IS ABSTINENCE and LOVE IS FIRE; for the first, see the notes to PCM I 17 back l. 44–front l. 36; for the second, see the note to PCM I 3 front col. 2 ll. 33–38.

so that she clings to lust and desire and disturbance because of NN, the son of NN, like a female donkey under the male donkey, a female cat |⁵ under the male cat, a female dog under the male dog, and she whinnies like a mare, and she chews like a she-camel, as she is crazed like a she-bear and a crocodile, and she clings to lust |¹⁰ and desire for NN, the son of NN, as for a drop of water clinging to the edge of a jar when one looks at it while fasting in the burning heat of summer, yea!

3–14. For the reference to animals and a drop of water as metaphors for passionate love and desire, see the notes to PCM I 7 ll. 32–36. For the word brt, cf. the note to PCM I 22 l. 46. Bilabel/Grohmann and Meyer/Smith understand the final clause as an independent phrase, translating “when one looks at her, he shall faint for the burning summer heat” (“wenn einer nach ihr blickt, (so) soll er verschmachten (oder: ernüchtert sein) in der Sommerhitze”), that is, the victim is so full of the fire of love that she will cause those who look upon her to faint. The correct translation, given here, is suggested by Stephen Emmel in Meyer/Smith 1994: 366, note to text 73 l. 125.

4–5. ⲟⲩⲙⲟⲩⲧⲥⲉ ⲉⲁ ⲡⲗⲥⲩⲩ : “a female cat under a male cat” For these rare words, with the probable meanings “female cat” and “male cat” respectively, see Drescher 1961–1962: 288; cf. Macomber 2020: I 120 s.v. ⲡⲗⲥⲩⲩ. Compare ⲙⲟⲩⲧⲥⲉ as a female personal name in P.MoscowCopt. 34 (KYP M733).

ερενεκσιχ [15] φουετ : “Do not be disobedient as you were on the day that the Lord sent you to the land of Eden and you returned to him without earth, with your hands empty”

A reference to a version of the story of the origin of mankind in which God sends seven angels to fetch earth from Eden in order to create Adam. As it is being gathered, the earth cries out, predicting mankind’s future sins and the punishment that they will receive for them, adjuring the angels in the name of the Lord to be left in the ground. Bound by the adjuration and frightened by the name of the Lord, the seven angels return emptyhanded. Only the eighth angel, Muriel—the future Abbaton, angel of Death—unafraid and unpitying, dares to take the earth from the ground. By implication, one of the seven angels sent would have been Gabriel (the second of the seven archangels), who refused to take earth back to God. For a discussion of the idea and its development see Swanson 1996: 218–219, and for the surviving Coptic account, see Pseudo-Timothy of Alexandria, Institution of Abbaton (CC 405; Budge 1914: 232–233; trans. 481–482).

8. 15 These letters are faint, and thus perhaps were effaced. Bilabel/Grohmann (1934: 322) suggest that the scribe was unsure whether to write 61x, or x16.

I adjure you, O *Gabriel, by the word and the breath of the Father, that which went to Mary the Virgin; you brought good news of him to her so that [|]⁵ he dwelt within her, and he became god and man, and she gave birth to him, and he mounted upon the cross and saved us! I adjure you, O Gabriel, by the holy sufferings which Jesus Christ received for us [|]¹⁰ upon the wood of the cross and the three breaths that he sent to the hands of his father, which are “*Eloei Eloei *Elemas Abaktanē”! I adjure you, O Gabriel, by the three tears [|]¹⁵ that the Father shed over the head of Jesus, his only-begotten son upon the wood of the cross! I adjure you by your sword, that with which you rent the *veil of the Temple! [|]²⁰ I adjure you by the seven greetings that the Father spoke to Jesus, his son, on the Sunday morning so that he rose from the dead

10–13. For the last words of Jesus on the cross, cf. Matthew 27.46: “In the ninth hour, Jesus cried out in a great voice, saying, ‘Elōi, Elōi, lama sabaktanei’, that is, ‘My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?’” (ἐν ᾧ πῖναξ δε ἡ χηρὴ τε ἀφ’ οὗ καὶ ἐβόη ἡ τοῦ ἱεροῦ οὐνοῦ ἡ σὺν ἐφ’ ᾧ ἡνός καὶ ἐλῶει ἐλῶει λαμὰ σαβακτανεὶ ἐτε παὶ πε πανοῦτε πανοῦτε ἐτβε οὐ ἀκκαδτ ἡσῶκ; Horner 1911: I 338); Mark 15.34: “And in the ninth hour Jesus cried out in a great voice, ‘Elōi, Elōi, lama sakhthanei’ (sic), whose translation is, ‘My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?’” (ἀφ’ οὗ πῖναξ ἡ χηρὴ τε ἀφ’ οὗ ἐβόη ἡ τοῦ ἱεροῦ οὐνοῦ ἡ σὺν οὐνοῦ ἡ σὺν οὐνοῦ καὶ ἐλῶει ἐλῶει λαμὰ σαχθανεὶ ἐτε παὶ πε φάγερμενεγε ἡνός καὶ πανοῦτε πανοῦτε ἐτβε οὐ ἀκκαδτ ἡσῶκ; Horner 1911: I 627–628); Luke 23.46: “Jesus cried out in a great voice, saying ‘My father, I give my spirit into your hands!’, and when he had said this he gave up his breath” (ἀπὸ τοῦ καὶ ἐβόη ἡ οὐνοῦ ἡ σὺν πεχὰ καὶ παῖωτ ἡ τῆς ἡπαρῆς ἐνεκσὶ καὶ ἡ τερεφκα παὶ δε ἀφ’ οὗ πῖναξ; Horner 1911: II 452); the first two citing Psalm 21 (22) 2: “God, my God, attend to me; why have you forsaken me?” (πνοῦτε πανοῦτε κατ’ ἐτβε οὐ ἀκκαδτ ἡσῶκ; Budge 1898: 22). For the concepts of “three breaths”, cf. PCM I 26 p. 10 l. 21, p. 12 ll. 24–26, ll. 31–32, where Jesus gives up three breaths to his Father upon the cross, but three breaths are also given by God to Adam on the day of his creation, and by Jesus to his apostles.

14–15. ἡρ ρεμῖν ταμῶτ ταῶγ : “the three tears that the Father shed” For the tears shed by God the father at the moment of death of Christ, compare PCM I 12 p. 18 ll. 1–2; PCM I 25 p. 14 ll. 2–5.

18–20. τὸ κενὸν τὰ ἐντακπὼρ ἐνκαταπέτμα ἐνπερπὶ ἐνζήτς : “your sword, that with which you rent the veil of the Temple” A reference to the rending of the veil before the Holy of Holies in the Jerusalem temple at the death of Jesus, described in Matthew 27.51, Mark 15.38, and Luke 23.45. The gospels do not describe an angel carrying out the act, but in Pseudo-Evodius of Rome, Dormition of the Virgin Mary, we find a description of an unnamed “mighty angel” (οὐγγρελὸς ἡσῶκ) who comes down from heaven and cuts the veil in two with his sword (de Lagarde 1883: 53.5–9; Robinson 1986: 57 (trans.)). Here, as on p. 7 ll. 4–8, Gabriel takes on the identity of an angel who is anonymous in the surviving literary tradition.

and the rational sacrifice and the holy offering and the mysteries of Jesus Christ which the saints receive and [|]⁵ the judgement which the Almighty will pronounce over the whole world in the Valley of Josaphat that you shall not delay nor shall you be neglectful for a single moment [|]¹⁰ nor a blink of the eye, until you come upon your image; in the moment that I put fire to it go to NN, the daughter of NN, put fire and desire and lust and disturbance [|]¹⁵ and tumult down into her heart for NN, the son of NN!

Bring her to him in humiliation and *bound, so that he sees her nakedness in every moment and he mingles [|]²⁰ his lust with hers! He will lie with her, she will not be sated with him! Take the shame <from> her face and her eyes,

1. ΤΡΘΕΣΙΑ ΕΝΛΩΚΙΚΗ : “the rational sacrifice” The “rational” or “reasonable sacrifice” (λογικὴ θυσία) is a term for the Christian Eucharist; cf. Romans 12.1 and Mikhail 2015: 196–197.

7. ΠΑΙΩΣΑΦΑΤ : “Valley of Josaphat” Cf. Joel 3.2, 3.12: “and I will bring together all the nations and lead them down to the valley of Josaphat and judge them there concerning my people and my share, Israel” (καὶ συνάξω πάντα τὰ ἔθνη καὶ κατὰξω αὐτὰ εἰς τὴν κοιλάδα Ἰωσαφατ καὶ διακριθήσομαι πρὸς αὐτοὺς ἐκεῖ ὑπὲρ τοῦ λαοῦ μου καὶ τῆς κληρονομίας μου Ἰσραὴλ), “Let all the nations rise themselves and come to the valley of Josaphat, for there I will sit to judge all the nations from all around” (ἐξεγειρέσθωσαν καὶ ἀναβαινέτωσαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη εἰς τὴν κοιλάδα Ἰωσαφατ, διότι ἐκεῖ καθιῶ τοῦ διακρίναι πάντα τὰ ἔθνη κυκλόθεν).

11. 𐤌𐤓𐤕 : “image” Understand with Bilabel/Grohmann “image”, referring to the image of Gabriel from the end of the text, copied onto an ostrakon (cf. note p. 13), rather than “sign of the zodiac”, as translated by Jackson in Meyer/Smith.

20. ΤΕΒΕΠΘΕΜΙΑ ΜΕ ΤΩΣ : “his lust with hers” “Lust” (ἐπιθυμία) here probably serves as a euphemism for the genitalia; cf. the notes to PCM I 20 l. 14.

and her presents at all times and all seasons and all her days and all her life; they will remain with him |⁵ according to these requests, and she will make herself beautiful and pleasing every day in her heart and her mind and her thoughts and her thinking and her eyes, «even» if a day comes for her more difficult |¹⁰ than any day and hour, and every day and every night, yea, yea, quickly!

If you have not done my desire, O *Gabriel, fulfilling my command, I will despise you, and I will |¹⁵ cut you off, and I will anathematise you and I will despise you and I will abhor you! The Father will not honour you in heaven! The Son will not give you rank in heaven! The Holy Spirit |²⁰ will not allow you to sing, nor will the queen of women, Mary the Virgin receive you unto herself, nor will they call you the bringer of good news,

1. ταια : “presents” For the translation as “present” (i.e., a synonym of “gift”) cf. Meyer/Smith and Crum CD 391a. Compare the Coptic marriage contract P.Gardiner (Thompson 1912: 175, 177), in which ταια seems to refer to a payment which a bride might receive, apparently separate from her bridal gift, usually called the cxar (Richter 2008: 272; cf. the term βεξε, “wage” used for the bridal gift in the Scala Magna; see Macomber 2020: I 68).

12. αρα : “if” Probably to be understood as Sahidic ερε, which appears with conditional phrases; e.g., 1 Kings (=1 Samuel) 25.8: “if it is the case, ask your servants, and they will tell you these things” (ερωπε αρε χνε νεκρηαλ αγω σενατανοκ εναι, Drescher 1970: 77; cf. Crum CD 64b for further examples). It may be that a preceding ερωπε or εωχε has dropped out here, or else that αρα has been reanalysed as a conditional particle itself.

20. κε τρεκταλλε : “allow you to sing” For this construction with the inflected infinitive base τεε (here apparently τρεε), see Funk 2017: 59–63, cf. Crum CD 439 s.v. τρο.

† Make an offering for him of *mastic, *agarwood[?], [|]²⁰ *styrax, *musk. Three days, seven prayers daily, from Tuesday until Thursday, while you fast daily,

3–4. ⲛⲛⲉⲕⲁⲡⲱⲫⲁⲛⲓ : “shall you [not] impose” For the sense of “impose”, see Förster WBGW 91, s.v. ἀποφαίνω.

5–6. ⲛⲉⲕⲥⲱⲣⲱⲛⲓ ⲛⲁⲓ : “nor shall you mock[?] me” We propose this restoration very tentatively; the object would usually be expressed with ⲛⲁⲛⲓ or ⲛⲥⲱⲓ rather than ⲛⲁⲓ.

19. † ⲉϥ ϫⲁⲣⲁⲃ : “make an offering for him” Or “for it”; the pronoun here may be taken to refer either to the angel Gabriel or the ritual as a whole.

21–22. ⲡⲓ ⲉⲕⲉⲣⲓⲁⲕⲏ ϩⲁ ⲡⲱϩⲱϩ : “from Tuesday until Thursday” For the Coptic names of the week, see Till 1947 & 1953. Tuesday is designated as the third day of the week (ⲡⲱⲣⲟⲛⲛⲧ ⲛⲧⲕⲱⲣⲓⲁⲕⲏ) following the ordinal system (cf. Ast 2012: 10–16), with the week beginning on Sunday, while Thursday is referred to as “the pause” (ⲡⲱϩⲱϩ) between the “little” and “great” fasts of Wednesday and Friday (ⲧⲕⲱⲓ ⲛⲛⲏⲥⲧⲓⲁ/ⲧⲛⲏⲥⲧⲓⲁ ϩⲏⲛ, ⲧⲛⲟⲥ ⲛⲛⲏⲥⲧⲓⲁ/ⲧⲛⲏⲥⲧⲓⲁ ϩ). For this reading, cf. Polotsky 1939: 112. Bilabel/Grohmann and Jackson in Meyer/Smith translate as “as long as you like” (“bis zu dem Wunsch”).

KD, EL & MP, edited from photograph and autopsy; tracing by JS.

2. ιωσηφ : “Joseph” Perhaps understand this as a reference to an ingredient named after Joseph; compare the “grass of Mary” and “wood of Abraham” (σαγβοϋ μαρια, ωμ : αβρααμ) mentioned in PCM I 25 p. 9 ll. 2, 4 (KYP M186).

5–6. κα νιγ εσαπ : “twenty-one times on three occasions” Cf. p. 12 ll. 20–21, which prescribes saying the prayer seven times daily for three days, giving a total of twenty one times across three days. We might alternatively understand multiplication, although this would make it harder to square with the instructions on the previous page; cf. Matthew 18.22: “seventy times seven times” (σααῳ ἑβδομα ἑβδομα; Horner 1911: I 194);

6. ζαρεζ εραξ εραβ : “Beware of him” For the understanding “beware of him”, with two objects expressed with ερωζ, cf. 2 Timothy 4.15: “beware of him, for he has opposed our words very much” (ζαρεζ ερωκ ερωζ αϋτ γαρ εματε ογβε νααααε; Thompson 1932: 244). It is unclear exactly who “him” refers to here—perhaps it should be translated as “it” and understood as the ritual as a whole, but it seems more likely the fiery angel Gabriel who might pose a danger to the practitioner without an amulet. While this is concept otherwise unknown to us in the Coptic magical corpus, the use of such amulets for protection against beings invoked during rituals is common in Graeco-Egyptian practice; see GEMF 31/PGM I.271–272 (KYP M153): “Be careful that you do not lose a leaf (of the branch being used as a phylactery) and injure yourself” (βλέπε δέ μη ἀπολέσης φύλλον [κ(αί)] σεαντόν βλάψης); GEMF 57/PGM IV.2508–2510 (KYP M3): “the goddess lifts those without phylacteries into the air and casts them down from aloft” (ἡ θεὸς τοὺς ἀφυλακτηριαστοὺς τοῦτο πρᾶσσοντας ἀεροφ(ε)ρεῖς ποιεῖν καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ ὕψους ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν ῥίπτει) GEMF 74/PGM VII.231–232 (KYP M156): “wear the cloth around your neck so that (the god) will not strike you” (τὸ δὲ ῥάκος περίθου περὶ τὸν τράχηλον ἵνα μὴ σε πλήξῃ).

6–7. μαρ ογραεις ελχακ νατωραε : “bind a ... amulet on yourself” Bilabel/Grohmann and Jackson in Meyer/Smith translate “let them watch over” (“mögen sie wachen über”), but do not offer a translation for the final word. Perhaps understand a negation of the verb φαλα (“to be afraid”; Crum CD 562; cf. φαλα in the following column), in an otherwise unattested pre-pronominal form, giving the sense “bind an amulet on yourself so that you are not afraid”.

7. ογραεις : “an amulet” For the translation “amulet” see Crum CD 301b.

Image: As the label ‘Gabriel’ suggests, this image seems to represent the angel in a schematic form, apparently with multiple eyes. Across his chest, his name, γαβριηλ, is written in kharaktēres, and he seems to be holding to small figures in his hands, likely representing the target and the user of the ritual, bringing them together in the love spell as if they were effigies. The image is to be copied onto an ostrakon (apparently with sweat; see ll. 4–5 of this page), before being thrown onto a fire as part of the ritual (cf. p. 9 l. 11–12). For similar rituals and a discussion of the motif LOVE IS FIRE, see PCM I 3 front column 2 ll. 33–38. For this image, cf. Mößner/Nauerth 2015: 337–338; Dosoo 2018: 34; Dosoo 2022a: 150–151.

Contents:

1. Front ll. 1–22: Curse including Jesus-Serpent narrative charm (KYP T310)
2. Back ll. 1–13: One or more prescriptions for unclear purposes (KYP T46)

Sheet of paper, complete except for some damage to the upper right and along the folds. The front is well legible, the text of the back, written at 180° to the front, has been significantly abraded. 1 vertical and 8 horizontal creases are visible. The front of the manuscript consists of a curse structured around a narrative charm in which Jesus encounters a worm,¹ while the back contains a text of unclear purpose. The manuscript belongs to the archive known as the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’ and was purchased in 1930 by Carl Schmidt (see p. 259–263).

Both sides are written in the same hand, but likely on different occasions; the ink of the front is black, while that of the back is brown; respectively, they seem to be carbon and plant-based.² The text on both sides is written in an informal but rather regular right-sloping majuscule. The bilinear letters are quite compact, while the ascenders and descenders of the ϣ, τ, γ, ϣ, ϣ, ϣ, ϣ, ϣ are often very elongated. The bowl of the ϣ is either rounded or flattened to a single stroke, so that it at times resembles a small majuscule λ. τ and ϣ have consistent serifs on the horizontal bars, and ϣ is quite flat, with the middle stroke nearly horizontal. The κ usually has a small serif on its lower oblique stroke, making it resemble the Greek abbreviation for καί (κ), or even a ϣ. Like the second Heidelberg copyist (responsible for PCM I 27–28; cf. p. 362–363), the scribe of this manuscript makes use of the minuscule forms of letters as numerals (front l. 3, perhaps also 21). The copyist uses supralinear dots instead of strokes, so that true supralineation is only used for numbers, abbreviations, and voces magicae. The hand of this manuscript is close to that of PCM I 30, also written in a black ink, but the letterforms are not identical; most notably, the latter manuscript lacks the distinctive κ. While these hands' idiosyncracies makes dating them difficult, broadly similar styles can be seen in SB Kopt III 1285 (TM 109891), P.Monts.Roca inv. 524 (Torallas Tovar 2007; TM 140969), and, to a lesser extent, P.Stras. K 332 (D) (Walter 2022: no. 2). All of these are dated by their editors to the tenth or eleventh centuries. Given that the document is written on paper, and that the other Heidelberg Library manuscripts with more readily datable hands are likewise dated to this range, this seems reasonable for PCM I 29 & 30 too. Bilabel and Grohmann (1934: 397) suggested an eleventh century date for the manuscript, crediting Viktor Stegemann.

² As with all of the ink descriptions of the Heidelberg papyri, we are grateful to Krisztina Hevesi for sharing her unpublished work with us. For further discussions of the ink, see p. 261.

The text on the front of the manuscript differs significantly from other texts from the archive; it is written in a single column of 22 lines, undivided by horizontal lines. The final two lines, which we interpret here as the ritual instructions, seem to be separated only by a slightly larger interlinear space. Alternatively, it might be possible to interpret these final lines instead as part of the spoken formula, perhaps explaining the lack of dividing lines. The layout of the back is closer in style to the other manuscripts from the archive—with simple horizontal lines used to divide recipes and sections within them (formulae and ritual instructions), and kharaktēres, absent from the front. The brown ink is also closer to the other manuscripts from the archive.

Like the other manuscripts from the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library, the manuscript is written in a variety of Sahidic strongly influenced by a Middle Egyptian dialect, likely that of the Faiyum (see p. 261–262). This copyist shows occasional features not found in the other manuscripts, such as the writing of ^soy as γ (e.g., front l. 11; perhaps also present in PCM I 35 front l. 4). The grammar of both front and back is also highly divergent from the literary standard; in front l. 9, for example, the negative imperative (ⲙⲡⲉⲣ-) seems to be confused with the negative first perfect (ⲙⲡⲉ-).

+ Jesus was walking with *Michael and *Gabriel and *Raphael and the Twelve Apostles and the *Twenty-[Four] Presbyters by the doors of ⁵ Paradise. He found a worm lying, sleeping.

He said to him, “What is the matter with you?”

He said to him, “My Lord Jesus Christ, you were seen, and I was afraid.”

He said to him, “By no means, you were not afraid, ¹⁰ but rather arise and go and bite NN <child of> NN!”

I adjure you (f.) today, O male scorpion, O female scorpion, in the name {the name} of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit! I adjure you (m.) <by> the five *nails which pierced ¹⁵ Christ—whose names are *Satōr, Aretō, Tenēt, Ōtera, Rōtas ...—that you (f.) pierce him like fire, and you (m.) roast him like firewood[?], bring (f.) to him from the south of the earth, do not ²⁰ believe them until I, myself, desire!

Offering[?]: ... 21[?] scales[?] from <the> crown of a bridegroom <who> has not yet gone to his wife.

5. ΟΥΒΗΝΤ : “a worm” This text seems to be a curse calling upon a worm to attack the victim. The word “worm” (οὐβήντ) has a variety of referents, including the “undying worm” of Mark 9.44–48 which devours sinners after their death, and the worms linked to sickness which consume or are produced by the diseased body. While a scorpion is mentioned later, both scorpions and worms belong to the category of χατφε, noxious crawling creatures, creating a fluidity between the two agents of the curse not apparent in the English translation; cf. Dosoo 2022c: 506–508, 526–527.

8–9. Polotsky plausibly proposes to restore the equivalent of the Sahidic πτεγνογ νταιναγ... μηεpp ῥατ “the moment I saw (you, I was afraid)... do not be afraid...”.

11–12. τογαρι · ἡεγτ τογαρι ἡεζιμι : “O male scorpion, O female scorpion” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “the one who loves men, the one who loves women” (“der die Männer liebt, der die Frauen liebt”). For another magical text addressing a scorpion, see P.MoscowCopt. 33 (KYP M664).

14. ἡτ νιστ ἡταγτακς : “the five nails which pierced” Bilabel/Grohmann translate “you who gives the nails which were destroyed (by Christ)”.

18. νογστελογς : like firewood[?] The word as written seems to be στῦλος (“pillar”); we suggest an error for the phonetically similar ξύλον (“wood”), defined with the sense of “firewood” in the Scala Magna (Macomber 2020: I 129 s.v. ξύλα).

19. τρεινι εραβ ἔχιν πρης ἡῖκαε : “bring (f.) to him from the south of the earth” The object to be brought from the south seems to be missing here, but it may be that ε/εποε is being used to indicate the direct object of εἰνε, contrary to the normal grammar of standard Coptic; in this case, the translation would be “bring him from the south of the earth”.

20. φανταογωφ ἀηακ/ : “until I, myself, desire” ογωφ here may be an error for ωφ; cf. Kasser CDC 81b s.v. ωφ, and compare Chicago OIM E13767 (Stefanski 1939; KYP M7) ll. 10–11: “until I read <it, myself>” (φανταωφ ἀηωκ). The idea in this case would be that reading a deposited curse undoes it; cf. Dosoo 2023a: 169.

21–22. κωκης ἐκλαμ ἡαλαρωως : “scale from <the> crown[?] of a bridegroom[?]” βκκκς may refer to a piece of metal; cf. Numbers 17.3 (16.38; de Lagarde 1867: 358.28) which describes plates (λεπίς, σβητε; Crum CD 101a) made by hammering out bronze pans. The reference here may be to a hammered-out wedding crown from which an applied text is created. The word العروس (“bridegroom”) also seems to appear in PCM I 33 front l. 10. The crowning of couples during wedding ceremonies is well attested in Mediterranean Christianity (e.g., Burmester 1967: 132–140; Parani 2000: 197–198, 208–210). Presumably the reference to the bridegroom not having gone to his wife means that the marriage has not yet been consummated.

Back: The text of the back poses many problems of interpretation; it is unclear how many recipes there are, and how they relate to one another. Lines 1–6 seem to be the spoken formula, which may go with the ritual instructions in ll. 6–8. The mention of binding an object to someone suggests some kind of healing ritual; the use of a female pronoun rather than the generic male referent may suggest a specifically gynecological concern, such as childbirth or uterine bleeding (cf. the notes to PCM I 2 l. 1). The references to leaves placed under the head of a male individual in ll. 10–13, by contrast, would seem to find their closest parallels in recipes for dream divination found in the second century, such as GEMF 16/PDM xiv (KYP M162) ll. 1073–1074: “write these things on a reed leaf and place it under your head when you go to sleep; it causes dreams and it sends dreams” (i-ir=k sh nzy r w^c.t gb₃.t n qyr mtw=k h₃c hr tp=k i-ir=k in qte.t=k hr ir=f rswe.t mtw=f hb rswe.t); cf. the similar instructions in GEMF 18/PDM lxi (KYP M183) ll. 64–67 (albeit with a laurel leaf), and the instructions to place a leaf under the head of a corpse in the dream sending ritual in GEMF 17/PDM Suppl. (KYP M163) ll. 55–56. These recipes are significantly earlier than that here, however, so it is uncertain how seriously the parallels should be taken.

Complete paper sheet preserved in two fragments with the bottom left side missing due to folding. The manuscript is inscribed on the front and back, however most of the back was left blank. The sheet was folded multiple times horizontally; at least 4 horizontal creases and 4 vertical creases are visible.¹ The manuscript was written in a black ink with equal opacity under visible, ultraviolet, and near-infrared light, suggesting a carbon ink.² Simple horizontal lines are used to create divisions within the manuscript: a vertical line to divide the tableau (left) from the ritual procedure (right), and two horizontal lines, to divide the instructions from the first formula, and the two formulae from one another. Supralinear strokes are used to indicate voces magicae and a few other words, and a colon is occasionally used to separate phrases.

The text is written in a right sloping majuscule, in a largely unimodular and bilinear script. The μ has the very deep curve typical of the “flat μ ”,³ and the upper curve of the ϵ is often reduced or absent. λ , χ and α have decorative serifs on their ascenders, while τ has a serif on the left part of its horizontal bar. σ and λ have very long ascenders, while the γ , η , and ζ have similarly long descenders. The right vertical stroke of the π is shorter than the left. The hand is notably similar to that of PCM I 29, leading us to suspect some connection to the Heidelberg Library, even if this cannot be proven. As suggested by Beck,⁴ it should probably likewise be dated to the tenth or eleventh century; see the discussion of the very similar hand of PCM I 29 for parallels. This manuscript likewise shares the same dialectal features as this group, a form of Sahidic with considerable influence from a Middle Egyptian dialect, likely indicating an origin in the Faiyum.⁵

The manuscript was sold along with a collection of Arabic administrative records and magical texts offered for sale to the Heidelberg University Library by Adolf Grohmann in March 1935 for the price of 175 marks.⁶ The items from this collection came from the Faiyum, El-Ashmunein (Hermopolis), and Old Cairo (Al-Fustat); as noted, the linguistic features of this piece make the Faiyum the most likely source of this manuscript.

In terms of contents, the text contains two formulae consisting of curses against property preceded by the instructions for using them. The formulae take the form of dialogues between King Solomon and demons, with the king demanding their names and/or activity, and receiving in response a description of their destructive acts, which are then wished upon the targets of the curses. A comparable question–answer interaction between a Jewish king (in this case, Solomon’s father David) and demons is first attested in a fragmentary first-century CE Hebrew manuscript from Qumran containing exorcistic psalms.⁷ A developed motif of Solomon’s confrontation with Asmodeus, King of the Demons, appears in the Babylonian Talmud (Skolnik 2007: 592a–593b), while a Christian (or christianised) version of the encounter is found in the textual tradition known as the Testament of Solomon.⁸ The Testament describes Solomon’s creation of the Jerusalem Temple, in the course of which he receives from the Archangel Michael a ring which enables him to submit demons to him, whom he binds and puts to work on the construction of the temple. In the course of this narrative, he questions the demons as to their names and activities, with the exchanges demonstrating a repetitive structure in which they reveal the diseases or misfortunes they cause, followed by how they may be thwarted; the text thus serves as a handbook for healing and exorcising various conditions of demonic origin. The earliest stages of this composition have been dated as early as the first century CE,⁹ but the first concrete evidence for its existence is in a sixth to seventh-century Greek manuscript preserving chapter 18,¹⁰ in which Solomon questions the stellar demons known as decans. Variant recensions of the Greek text are fully preserved in manuscripts dating from the twelfth to seventeenth centuries, and there are unpublished versions in Arabic (including one in Syriac Garshuni).¹¹ A few other Coptic manuscripts attest to the use of texts extracted from, or based on the Testament, albeit in the form of healing prescriptions,¹² and we find similar, albeit much later, texts in Ge'ez and Syriac.¹³ This particular example, in which the original healing purpose has been subverted to create curses, would seem to be unique, but parallels other cases in which the Coptic magical tradition adapts the structure of healing/exorcistic prayers to create aggressive spells—compare the love spell based on the Prayer of Cyprian (PCM I 28); another, as yet unpublished love spell seems to draw on the textual tradition of the Prayer of Mary 'in Bartos'.¹⁴ An interesting, albeit very brief, partial parallel to this text is held in the Oxford Griffith Institute; see the notes to the image on the front for a discussion.

⁶ The group consisted of 23 papyri, 4 parchment manuscripts and 3 paper documents; see Seider 1964: 164.

Image, 8 et al. (H)arpakh: A similar name, Ἄρπαξ (Harpax) appears in the Greek Testament of Solomon (18.32P; McCown 1922: 57*) and the Coptic Confession of Cyprian (Bilabel/Grohmann 1934: 75 II.26–29). The demon is depicted here as a stylised bird-like figure within a circle (cf. Love 2022b: 697–699), perhaps representing the dish upon which it is to be copied using menstrual blood in the following procedures. For the cross on its head, cf. Masbēn on PCM I 25 p. 10, another Solomonic demon. A similar bird-headed, three-toed (cf. Viložny 2015: 142) figure with an axe appears in Crum 23.2.2 (Love 2022b; KYP M570), surrounded by voces magicae with parallels to the text discussed here, including ⲭⲱⲃⲏⲛⲓ (2.1), ⲁⲗⲡⲁⲕ (2.2), and the phrase ⲁⲃⲉⲛⲟⲙⲟⲗⲟⲗⲟⲓ (“he gave thanks”; 3.6; cf. l. 7 of this text); see Love 2022b; Dosoo 2022a: 127–128.

7. ⲁⲕⲉⲭⲱⲃⲏⲛⲁⲱⲕⲉ ⲛⲉⲓ ⲙⲱⲗⲱⲙⲉⲣⲏ : “Solomon gave thanks” Cf. Testament of Solomon 1.5: “And on hearing this I, King Solomon, went into the sanctuary of God and prayed with all my soul, giving thanks to him night and day, that the demon might be delivered into my hands and I might gain authority over him” (Καὶ ταῦτα ἀκούσας ἐγὼ ὁ βασιλεὺς Σολομῶν εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ ἔδεδῆθην ἐξ ὅλης μου τῆς ψυχῆς ἐξομολογούμενος αὐτῷ νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν ὅπως παραδοθῇ ὁ δαίμων εἰς τὰς χεῖράς μου καὶ ἐξουσιάζω αὐτόν; McCown 1922: 9*–10*); cf. the note to the image.

3–4. ⲛⲙⲁⲅ ⲉⲓⲁⲕⲏⲓ : “bathwater” “Bath” (ⲉⲓⲁⲕⲏⲓ) likely refers to a collective bathhouse (Greek βαλανεῖον, Arabic حمام hammām; cf. Macomber 2020: I 110; Crum CD 369b); cf. Cairo JdE 45060 (Kropp 1931: I no. K; KYP M303) front ll. 25, 37–38, which mentions the “furnace” (ⲉⲓⲛⲱⲕⲉ cf. Crum CD 404b) of a bath. Bathwater is used in several other Coptic and *Copto-Arabic curses; see BM EA 10391 (Zellmann-Rohrer 2022a: no. 1; KYP M302) back l. 95; Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) p. 2 l. 7; Guide to the Psalms Psalms 7, 17, 51, 78, 88, 98, 108 (Henein/Bianquis 1975); cf. drainwater in PCM I 31 back ll. 16–17; PCM I 32 p. 1 l. 23; PCM I 37 back ll. 5, 20. For bathhouses as liminal spaces inhabited by demons, see Bonner 1932; Dunbabin 1989; Alfayé 2016.

14. List of evil works: For similar curses against work equipment, see PCM I 37 back 21–23 (for a furnace), Cairo JdE 42573 (Chassinat 1955; KYP M44) p. 1 ll. 21–23 (for a water-wheel), and the Syro- and Judaeo-Arabic curses against mills edited in Cherkashina/Cherkashin/Saar 2022.

17. ⲱⲣⲛⲉⲥⲁⲅ : “Ōr⁸nethau” Cf. Ornias (Ὀρνίας), the first demon encountered by Solomon in the Testament, perhaps modified by the relative phrase “who is evil” (ⲉⲧ-ⲣⲟⲟⲩ).

22–24. Compare the Testament of Solomon 3.6V: “I am Beelzebub, the ruler of the demons” (ἐγὼ εἰμι ὁ Βεελζεβούλ τῶν δαιμονίων ὁ ἄρχων; McCown 1922: 17*).

2. [περον]ογ νογαλαμπε : “[the] seat[?] of an anba” We are grateful to Marijn van Putten for his suggestion to read ⲁⲗⲁⲛⲃⲁ (al-anba) here. This title derives from the Coptic ⲁⲡⲁ (apa, Greek ἄπα), in turn from the Aramaic ⲁⲃⲃⲁ (‘abbā, “father”) via Greek ἄββᾶ (cf. Mark 14.36; Romans 8.15; Galatians 4.6). Originally a title of respect for ecclesiastical and monastic figures, by the sixth century apa was also applied to important secular individuals (Wipszycka/Derda 1994). The Arabic anba has a narrower meaning, being used as only for bishops (including metropolitans and the patriarch) and saints (Graf 1954: 14; Badawi/Hinds 1986: 34). A form close to the Arabic is attested in Coptic as ⲁⲛⲃⲁ by the tenth/eleventh century, when it is found in P.Col.inv. 597 l. 25 (Walter 2022: no. 4) and P.CtYBR inv. 2123 l. 6 (unpublished; we thank Vincent Walter for bringing this text to our attention). In the latter manuscript the addressee is explicitly a bishop (ⲉⲡⲓⲕⲱⲡⲓⲱⲥ, l. 4), and the referent here should probably likewise be understood as such. The preceding word is likely a Greek loanword whose nominative form ends in -ος or -ον; compare ἄγγελος as ⲁⲓⲛⲉⲗⲟⲩ in PCM I 25 p. 3 l. 4 (we thank Frederic Krueger for discussing this point with us). If we understood anba as referring to a saint here, we might restore ⲡⲟⲛⲓⲟⲩ (“place, shrine”) or ⲙⲟⲛⲁⲥⲧⲏⲣⲓⲟⲩ (“monastery”), but in this case we would expect the Coptic ⲡⲉⲣⲟⲩⲁⲁⲃ or ⲭⲁⲓⲣⲓⲱⲥ to more clearly designate a saint. We propose ⲑⲣⲟⲛⲟⲥ “throne, seat”, used to refer to the throne upon which bishops were seated during their ordination, representing their authority; compare ⲕⲁⲑⲉ̅̅δⲣⲁ (kathedra), “seat”, whence “cathedral”, the church in which the bishop’s throne is situated. For instances of ⲑⲣⲟⲛⲟⲥ used to refer to the episcopal seat in Coptic, see the Life of Aaron (VI–VII CE; CC 255; Dijkstra/van der Vliet 2019: 108.5, 112.31, cf. discussion on p. 224–225, and pp. 57–60 for the dating); John the Presbyter, Life of Pisentius (VII CE?; CC 238; Budge 1913: 91.34, 92.8 etc., 280 (trans)); Pseudo-Flavianus of Ephesus, On Demetrius and Peter of Alexandria (VII–VIII CE?; CC 155; Budge 1914: 140.21, 23 etc., translation p. 393); SB Kopt. I 719 l. 11 (862 CE). The threat posed to the throne by the demon would offer a parallel to the mention of the church (ⲉⲕⲕⲗⲏⲥⲓⲁ) on front l. 25.

A formulary written on a paper rotulus, acquired for the Egyptological Institute of the University of Heidelberg by Carl Schmidt in 1934, but since lost; it may have been one of the manuscripts which went missing following the Second World War.¹ Stegemann describes some abrasion to the first three lines of front, and some damage on the left side of the manuscript. Stegemann dated the text to the eleventh century based on the other manuscripts from the Heidelberg collection (PCM I 21–33) with which it shares several notable similarities. We suggest a more cautious tenth- to eleventh-century dating. The hand—insofar as can be gauged from the surviving letters in the tableaux—is an informal, undecorated sloping majuscule, with a very flat μ and y-shaped γ , perhaps broadly similar to the hands of PCM I 29 & 30. The copyist uses supralineation primarily to mark abbreviations, and frequently uses diaeresis on ι , γ , and even some consonants, in this last case alternating with single dots. The mid-dot, sparsely used, is the only other form of punctuation, although decorated dividing lines are used to separate text sections. Frequent words (such as $\alpha\iota\omicron$, $\tau\alpha\chi\eta$) often have their final letters raised, a trait also seen in PCM I 28 (e.g., p. 13 ll. 12–13). The dialect is the same form of Sahidic, heavily influenced by a Middle Egyptian dialect, found in the ‘Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library’ (see the description on pp. 261–262), suggesting a similar Faiyumic origin for this manuscript.

As the manuscript is lost, we rely almost entirely on the edition of Stegemann for the Coptic text, occasionally suggesting alternative readings where these seem plausible to us. The images are likewise reproduced from Stegemann’s tracings.

4. πωρεχ : “separation” We might expect to restore † before this word, but Stegemann notes that the traces do not allow such a restoration.

13. νη ν̄ϛ : “NN, son” The scribe has omitted a second νη. Note that in this manuscript we reproduce the abbreviation for “son” (υἱός) as ν̄ϛ, following Stegemann’s transcription, but it likely resembled the sign Ϝ used in the other manuscripts of similar date (cf. p. 33–34 and the index of abbreviations s.v. υἱός).

23. ενπετεντες : “his possessions” For this unusual form, see the notes to PCM I 25 p. 4 l. 16.

38. ⲛⲁⲛⲏⲟⲩ ⲥⲱⲩ : “Ethiopian? lamb? <skin>” Here we tentatively propose to understand ⲛⲁⲛⲏⲟⲩ ⲥⲱⲩ with the meaning of a “lamb” (الخروف al-ḥarūf) occurs in the Scala Magna (Macomber 2020: I 121). For “Ethiopian animals”, cf. ⲥⲁⲛⲏⲟⲩ ⲛⲥⲱⲩ in Crum CD 818a. The use of parchment made from the skin of a lamb or kid (ἀρνίον, ἐρίφιον) is attested in Mediaeval Greek magic; e.g., Athens, National Library of Greece 1265 fol. 15r (XVI/XVII CE; Delatte 1927: 14.8).

Image: The image here follows a common construction for curses of separation, in which two figures are depicted standing back to back, symbolising their regard being turned away from each other; this seems to represent visually in two dimensions a ritual process known from Coptic and Arabic texts, as well as Greek archaeological remains. Cf. the image on the back of this manuscript, and the ritual described in PCM I 27 front ll. 19–22, and the discussions in Dosoo 2018: 23–51; Dosoo 2023a: 164, 174, 178. There seem to be two short strings of linear kufic to the left of the left-hand figure; see the notes to PCM I 21 ll. 1– for a discussion. Note that the letter † here, and in the tableau on the back, seems to have decorations resembling the circles often used to decorate kharaktēres.

7–8. ⲉⲛⲟⲩ ⲛⲟϥⲣⲓⲣ ⲙⲛ ⲟϩⲉⲁⲣ : “like a pig and  dog” This analogy finds a parallel in a separation spell from the Cairo Genizah, T-S K 1.73, p. 4 ll. 17–18: “and he shall hate NN, son of NN, as the dog hates the pig and the pig the dog” (ויסני ית פי' ב' פי' הך מא דכלבה סני לחיירה וחזירה לכלבה); Naveh/Shaked 1998: no. Geniza 6; Saar 2017: 191–192). As discussed by Saar (2017: 192) conflicts between dogs and pigs are already attested in Hurro-Hittite texts, suggesting a possible Near Eastern origin for this analogy, perhaps deriving from the status of both animals as scavengers which competed for food waste; cf. Dosoo 2022c: 532; Peled/Saar forthcoming. Compare the discussions of animal analogies used in love spells in the notes to PCM I 7 ll. 35–36 and PCM I 28 p. 2 ll. 12–13

Image: Cf. the discussion of the image on the front. Here, in addition to the two figures represented back to back, we have a third figure, perhaps with its arms raised in the orant position, likely representing the practitioner or superhuman being who causes the separation between the two targets. As already noted, the letter ⲧ here, as in the tableau on the front, seems to have decorations resembling the circles often used to decorate kharaktēres. A similar circle decorates the left part of the supralinear stroke of the word ⲛⲟⲩⲁ above the left-hand figure.

Parchment bifolio with the first folio (pages 1 & 2) almost complete, but only a tiny fragment of what would have been the second folio preserved, with a few letter traces from page 3 visible to the right of ll. 18–19 on the photograph;¹ it is possible that this bifolio was once part of a larger codex. Pages 1 and 2 are damaged on all sides, with the outer margin being the text preserved.

The manuscript was acquired from a dealer in 1896 by Carl Reinhardt (1856–1903), then dragoman (interpreter) at the German consulate in Cairo, as part of the first major purchase of the University of Heidelberg papyrus collection, consisting of at least 579 papyrus, parchment, and wooden manuscripts, written in six languages.² Karl Zangemeister, the head librarian of the University of Heidelberg, arranged to buy the collection, with the process beginning on the 30th May 1897 when Adolf von Öchelhäuser—who was in contact with Reinhardt—sent Zangemeister a letter informing him of the collection in Reinhardt's possession. Several professors from the University of Heidelberg met on the next day to formulate a letter to Öchselhauser stressing the importance of the collection for the university library, as it would make it comparable to the Berlin papyrus collection or that of Erzherzog Rainer in Vienna. Thanks to the support of the Minister of Justice, Wilhelm Nökk, arranged by Öchselhäuser, Friedrich I, Grand Duke of Baden (r. 1858–1907), approved the purchase. A telegram confirming the purchase was sent by Reinhardt to Zangemeister shortly thereafter. On the 30th June 1897, Zangemeister confirmed that the collection, bought for 6,280 marks, had arrived in Heidelberg.³ The manuscript belonged to the collection of the University of Heidelberg Library until it was lost in the Second World War.⁴

The manuscript is a palimpsest; the underlying text, written in two columns at right angles to the later text, is visible on the lower part of page 2, where Jeremiah 41 (34) 8 can be read; the original manuscript may date to around the sixth century.⁵ As with PCM I 25 & 26, therefore, this manuscript was produced by cutting the bifolios of the older Biblical codex into individual folios, which were folded to produce the smaller bifolios of the later manuscript.

Bilabel and Grohmann describe the colour of the ink as being brown,⁶ like the manuscripts of the Heidelberg Library produced by the Deacon Iōhannēs and the second copyist (PCM I 21–28); this suggests that it was written in a plant ink (cf. p. 261). The hand is close to, but not the same as, the second copyist, who produced PCM I 27–28, a regular, bilinear and bimodal sloping majuscule. Several letters have serifs at the ends of strokes, notably the τ and † (on the left side of the horizontal bar) and the Δ (at the top of the oblique stroke). The oblique strokes of the κ are separated from its vertical stroke, and the μ is very flat, with a slight upwards curve in the middle. The ϣ is bilinear. With a few exceptions, the use of the supralinear stroke is limited to names and abbreviations. The mid-dot is the only punctuation, and a decorated double horizontal line is used to separate the two recipes on page 1.

Very similar hands can be found in the colophons to several manuscripts belonging to the White Monastery near Akhmim in Upper Egypt, but copied in Touton in the Faiyum; these are BnF 132.1 (CLM 5353), dated by its colophon on fol. 67v to 927/8 CE, and Vienna K 351 (CLM 5857) and BnF Copte 13.3 fol. 39v (CLM 578), both datable to 939–940 CE. Based on these parallels, a tenth century dating seems most likely, even if a late ninth or early eleventh century date cannot be excluded.

The dialect of the majority of the text is a very standard form of Sahidic, but in the instructions accompanying the first recipe (p. 1 ll. 19–7) we find some suggestive non-standard features, notably ε for ṣṇ; this is a feature typical of the texts of the Heidelberg Coptic Magical Library, which show the strong influence of a Middle Egyptian dialect (likely that of the contemporary Faiyum; see pp. 261–262). Several of the other manuscripts from the 1897 purchase came from the Faiyum,⁷ including other Coptic magical texts, leading us to tentatively suggest that this manuscript too may come from the Faiyum, even if not from the Heidelberg Library itself.

Because the manuscript was lost during the Second World War, we are reliant upon Bilabel and Grohmann's readings for page 1. For page 2 we have been able to check readings using a black and white photograph produced before the manuscript's disappearance, kindly provided by Elke Fuchs of the University of Heidelberg.⁸ Here we follow Bilabel/Grohmann in numbering the pages as 1 and 2; since the beginning of page 2 is damaged, there is no absolute indication in the text as to which side came first, but the fact that page 2 ends with an image and instructions suggests that it represents the end of the recipe which begins on page 1 l. 28. Note that Bilabel and Grohmann do not transcribe ll. 36–38 of page 2. We number the lines on page 2 from l. 1 to l. 41, whereas Bilabel/Grohmann number the second page continuously from page 1, so that page 2 l. 1 is numbered l. 36 in Bilabel/Grohmann.

The exact form of the $\delta\epsilon\iota\nu\alpha$ sign used in this manuscript is unclear. In their transcription, Bilabel and Grohmann often place a dot under the sign ($\overline{\Delta}$), but at other times mark it without a dot ($\overline{\Delta}$) and in still other places depict the sign with a descender ($\overline{\Delta}$). In the case of the dotted sign, it is unclear if they are marking uncertainty or a small descender in the form of a dot. Because of the low quality of the preserved photo, it not possible for us to resolve the question with certainty. On p. 2 ll. 8, 33, 34, there seems to be no descender (as Bilabel and Grohmann correctly note), but on ll. 14 & 25 two dots seem to be present below $\overline{\Delta\Delta}$ (where Bilabel and Grohmann indicate descenders), although these may be ink smudges or another form of discolouration. In our transcription, we follow the form provided in Bilabel/Grohmann, except where the sign is clear to us; in every one of these instances, we use a simple delta with supralinear stroke ($\overline{\Delta}$).

⁷ These include PCM I 33; P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 544b (KYP M365) & P.Heid.Inv. Kopt. 564a (KYP M513; both in Quecke 1963b), all three of which show dialectal features suggestive of a Faiyumatic origin. Of the 148 inventory numbers from the sale listed in the database of the Heidelberg Papyrus Collection (<https://www.ub.uni-heidelberg.de/papyri/>; consulted 16/3/2023) which have provenances listed, 34 are listed as coming from the Faiyum; a larger proportion (92) is described as coming from the Hermopolitan nome, although we should note that it is only generally the Greek manuscripts which have provenances listed.
